At Philip-street, Kingsland-road, on Tuesday morning, a woman named Hart, married, but separated from her husband, was found dead in her bed, her throat having been cut. A journeyman pipe-maker, named Raddon, who lived with her, and who has absconded, is suspected of having committed the murder. On Wednesday the body of Raddon was found in the Regent's Canal. He had tied his hands together with a handkerchief, to prevent his struggling, before committing suicide.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Last week the births of 786 boys and 819 girls (in all 1605 children) were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1850-59 the average number was 1627.—The returns exhibit a considerable reduction in the deaths of London for the week that ended last Saturday. In the previous five weeks they ranged from aboue 1200 to 1400; they have now declined to 1111. In the ten years 1850-59 the average number of deaths in the weeks corresponding with last week was 1067.

THE GENERAL POST OFFICE.—The complaints of the Post-office employés have led to further action on the part of the Government. The committee of inquiry is to be reconstituted by the infusion of a new element into it, consisting of officers of the Treasury. It is also officially announced that this committee will take into its full consideration the memorials which have been or may be sent in; and, under these circumstances, the Postmaster-General impresses upon the men the duty of abstaining from all agitation.

ARTISTS' BENEVOLENT FUND.—The fifteenth annual dinner of this association took place last Saturday evening at the Freemasons' Tavern, Lord Stanley presiding. In proposing the toast of the evening, "Prosperity to the Artists' Benevolent Fund," he stated that its income for the past year amounted to £1120. The sum granted in relief was £880. They had also an annuity fund, which was self-supporting, the benefits of the Benevolent Fund being confined to those who contributed to the former. The subscriptions during the evening amounted to £600.

WESTMINSTER SCHOOL.—The election examination terminated on Tuesday, when the following result was announced:—Students of Christ Church, Oxford—H. Salwey, Q.S., and A. Hughes, Q.S. To Trinity College, Cambridge—H. B. Chapman, Q.S., and H. M. Marshall, Q.S. The Triplet Exhibitions were assigned to J. C. Hawkshaw, T.B., and H. B. Chapman, Q.S.; the Thomas Exhibition to H. M. Marshall, Q.S. On Monday the Dean of Westminster and the Chapter entertained at dinner in the ancient College-hall nearly one hundred Old Westminsters, in celebration of the Ter-Centenary of the foundation of the college. Addresses and epigrams were delivered by the Senior Scholars upon subjects connected with the occasion and the Crimean and the Indian Memorial Column about to be completed. A special address was also made to the Archbishop (designate) of York, in acknowledgment of the honour conferred upon the school by his recent elevation to the archiepiscopal see, and his presence at this time-honoured festival.

THE PAPER DUTIES AND THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

On Tuesday night a public meeting convened by requisition, "to protest against the usurpation proposed by Lord Derby to the House of Lords in the retention of the tax upon paper, independent of the House of Commons and the Crown," was held in St. Martin's Hall, every available portion of which was densely crowded; Mr. Serjeant Parry took the chair. On the platform were Mr. Bright, M.P.; Mr. Pease, M.P.; Mr. Herbert Ingram, M.P.; Mr. Hadfield, M.P.; Mr. Lawson, M.P.; Mr. Padmore, M.P.; Mr. Coningham, M.P.; and many other gentlemen of political influence. This was a most effective demonstration, whether regard be had to the ability of the speeches, or to the numbers, enthusiasm, or respectability of the audience. Mr. Bright's reception was a perfect ovation, the demonstrations of enthusiasm being again and again renewed. The resolutions and petition, which stigmatised Lord Monteagle's motion as a proposal to usurp the privileges of the House of Commons, were adopted by acclamation.

Mr. Bright denied the right of the House of Lords to supersede a vote of the Commons, who had the right—the sole right—of voting money for the service of the Crown. They boasted of their love of freedom, and sometimes allowed their feelings, he feared, to be too much excited about it abroad. Let them look at home. "If liberty," said Mr. Bright, "were extinguished in England, how much would liberty have to mourn throughout the whole world? And what is liberty in England if an irresponsible, non-elective, hereditary House of Legislature is to be permitted, without check, to rifle the pockets, and the tills, and the industry of the great body of the people? What is it that a certain party in the House of Commons now asks the House of Lords to do? They are expected to reject the bill for the abolition of church rates, to reject the bill for the repeal of the paper duty, and to reject the bill for giving a very moderate extension of the franchise to the people of the United Kingdom. Although I have said some things criticising with, as I am told, most unjust severity the acts of the aristocratic classes of this country, I never laid upon them burdens so onerous—or, if you like, labours so perilous and, it may be, so fatal—as those which they are asked to perform at the bidding of an exasperated and baffled minority in the House of Commons. But what will be done if, owing to the rashness of the Earl of Derby, this bill should be rejected? It has been brought in, remember, by a united Cabinet. Great objections are entertained by different parties in the House to Mr. Gladstone. His great superiority of intellect—his undaunted courage—his notable conscientiousness—all these mark him out as the man, when once his reason is convinced, to do great and just things for his countrymen. But although Mr. Gladstone has been the individual who has propounded this particular measure to the House of Commons, he has had the unanimous support and approval of his colleagues. This, therefore, is a Cabinet question; and if the Government submit to surrender their own dignity and the rights of the House of Commons to Lord Derby and his friends, then I say that the Government will be degraded—that the exalted office which Mr. Gladstone fills will be thrown down from its elevaation—that the Chancellor of the Exchequer henceforth will be no better than a clerk conjointly to the House of Commons and the House of Lords, not in any degree independent, or able to do those things which in his conscience he believes to be necessary to the well-being of his country, and that the House of Commons will be humiliated to the last degree. What would be said by all the great men of the Revolution—by all the great men who have decorated the pages of your history from that day to this—if they could come back and see the English House of Commons in its greatest hour surrender those noble privileges which they had shed their blood and made every sacrifice to preserve? I do not believe that the Government, which has now the confidence of the Queen and of the nation, will trifle with this question or tamely surrender the great interests committed to their care. If they make no fight—if they submit tamely, their Government is irretrievably gone, and gone with an amount, if not of odium and almost of execration, at all events of pity and contempt, which would make it impossible for those statesmen ever to regain the confidence of the people. And who would come in? The old thing over again—Derby in one House, Disraeli in the other—men who appear to have no principle. Wherever you see them travelling, if you study with the minutest investigation their political Bradshaw, you will find that every line converges to one point, which is Downing-street. The Reform Bill will be postponed; the Paper Duty Bill will not pass, and what will be our position with regard to foreign affairs? You are approaching, let me tell you, a very critical hour. There are persons in this country, high in station, great in influence, who are not very particular as to the sacrifices which the masses of the people may be called on to make, if those sacrifices would prevent the perseverance in a policy which is hateful to those persons high in authority. I have alluded before to what took place some years ago, and may take place again. Remember that there is on some points an impassable gulf between the Government now in office and the Government which, in all probability, would succeed them? There can be no doubt that over Europe, if Lord Derby were to come into office now, there would be a shudder of apprehension, and, instead of that growing tranquillity for which we all hope, and I trust at times we all pray, there would be an increase of excitement gathering to horror, and I do not believe the peace of Europe would be worth twelve months' purchase. This Constitutional question is worth a hundred times as much as the Excise duty upon paper. It is a question whether representation and taxation shall in future, as heretofore, go together, or be separated and dissevered. It is a question whether you, in the year 1860, will maintain the ancient freedom of which you have boasted, and for which your fathers have contended. If you look back to all that has passed on the subject in the history of the country during the last 200 years, it is utterly beyond belief that we should surrender that which cost so much to gain. I warn the House of Peers, in no unfriendly spirit—and he is not an enemy of a monarchy, or of an aristocracy, or of a democratic power, who honestly tells that monarchy, that aristocracy, or that democratic power, what is its true duty in any given emergency—I warn the House of Peers, not, for the sake of a duty upon cheap newspapers, not, for the sake of any alarm or hatred they may have at the cheap press, to involve themselves in a contest where right will be against them, and where they must fail. But, let them take what course they may, I exhort the people of England to make this a great question. Your fathers would have made it so. They would have maintained, and did maintain, their rights; and you are recreant and unworthy children if you surrender in this your generation."

RAILWAY BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—The second annual general meeting of this institution was held last Saturday, under the presidency of H. W. Wickham, Esq., M.P. It appeared from the accounts of the half year ending April 30, 1860, that the institution had made considerable progress, and that at the present moment the amounts of the respective funds stood thus:—Orphans' fund, £1876 10s. 7d.; widows' fund, £813 5s. 4d.; and the building fund, £23 2s. 7d.; making in all £2712 18s. 6d.; of which £2300 is invested, and £412 18s. 6d. is in the hands of the treasurer.

GENERAL DOMESTIC SERVANTS' BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—The annual meeting of this association was held on Tuesday at the Hanover-square Rooms. The society was established in 1846 for the purpose of affording permanent relief in old age and infirmities to servants of good character. Assistance is also granted of a temporary kind in cases of urgent distress and sickness, and a registry is established for further promoting the welfare of its members. Resolutions were carried pledging the meeting to support the society, and expressing thankfulness for the Royal and distinguished patronage it had received.

ROYAL ORTHOPÆDIC HOSPITAL.—The anniversary festival of this institution, situate in Oxford-street, was held at the London Tavern on Wednesday evening, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. This institution has been established for upwards of twenty years, during which it has successfully treated some 25,000 or 26,000 cases of club foot, spinal and other deformities, of which 1400 were received during the past year. A mortgage debt, amounting to something like £6000, hampers the doings of the society; whilst there are about 230 patients waiting for admission to the hosptial. The subscriptions of the evening amounted to nearly £2000.

THE ROYAL ASYLUM OF ST. ANN'S SOCIETY.—On Wednesday afternoon the annual meeting of girls who had been educated in St. Ann's School, and who, after leaving it, had become entitled to prizes by behaving well in their situations, was held in the Asylum, Brixton-hill. The object of the institution is to maintain, clothe, and educate the children of those once in prosperity, whether orphans or not. The Bishop of Bath and Wells presided, and distributed the prizes, which consisted of Bibles and religious books, and which, in some cases, were supplemented by small sums of money. About fifty girls received prizes, of whom three were pupil-teachers and nine schoolmistresses. The remainder were chiefly dressmakers and domestic servants.

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.—On Wednesday evening the anniversary festival of the Literary Fund took place at the Freemasons' Tavern, the Bishop of St. David's presiding. He was supported on his right by Viscount Duncannon, and on his left by Lord Stratford de Redcliffe; and amongst the company were the Right Hon. Joseph Napier, Mr. Monckton Milnes, M.P.; Mr. Beresford Hope; Mr. Phillips, M.P.; Mr. Briscoe, M.P.; the Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster, Mr. Arthur Russell, M.P.; Captain Sherard Osborn, R.N.; G. S. Venables, Esq., G. Cruikshank, Esq., Robert Bell, Esq.; the Rev. C. Merivale, and Professor Huxley. Mr. G. Godwin read a list of the donations amounting to between £700 to £800, including one of £100 by her Majesty.

THE BROMPTON HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION.—A festival was held on Wednesday at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street, especially with a view to extinguishing the mortgage debt of £8000, which now presses heavily upon the finances. The chair was taken by Sir John Pakington, G.C.B., and the large room was well filled. In 1858 the number of in-patients of this hospital reached 667, but in 1859 it was 962; the out-patients of 1858 were under 4000; in the past year they amounted to 4657. The annual subscriptions had increased to the amount of £800; whilst the donations had fallen off to the extent of £1600. There is a great desire on the part of the friends of the hospital to clear off the mortgage debt of £8000 and to increase the annual subscription—the fund upon which their reliance must be placed. Their income from subscriptions was but £3000, while the expenditure annually amounts to £8000. At the close of the evening a subscription amounting to £1722 was announced.

THE HON. MR. BARON WILDE.

THE Hon. Sir James Plaisted Wilde, Knt., and Serjeant-at-Law, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, is the second of the surviving sons of Edward Archer Wilde, Esq., by his wife, Marianne, eldest daughter of William Norris, Esq., M.D., and is nephew of the late eminent advocate and judge, Lord Truro, Lord Chancellor of England. He was born in 1816, and was called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of the Inner Temple in Michaelmas Term, 1839. He went the Northern Circuit, and obtained there, as well as in London, a considerable practice. His reputation rose high both as an apt and graceful speaker and an excellent lawyer. He became a Queen's Counsel in 1850, and latterly had quite the lead on his circuit. His recent elevation to the bench of the Court of Exchequer has given general satisfaction, both among his professional brethren and the public. He was knighted on the 24th ult. Sir James Plaisted Wilde married, on the 20th of February last, Lady Mary Bouverie, younger daughter of the Earl of Radnor.

Our portrait of Baron Wilde was taken just before his elevation to the Bench.

MR. BARON WILDE, THE NEW JUDGE.

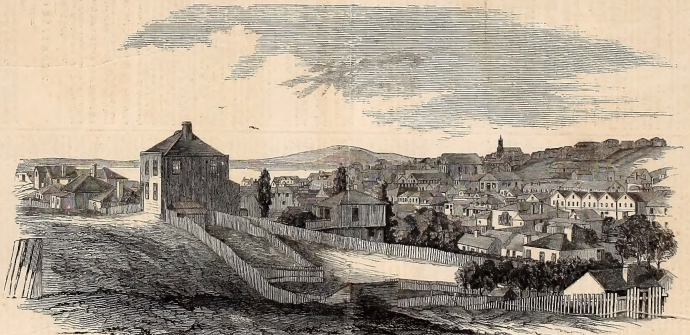
THE CATHEDRAL OF CHAMBERY.

THE recent voting for the annexation of Savoy to France was necessarily more animated in the capital than elsewhere. Early on the morning of Sunday, the 22nd of April, the town presented a holiday appearance. The Grenette, or corn market, was splendidly decorated, and thither the inhabitants by districts, and the corporations, proceeded to vote. The band of the National Guard paraded the town playing "Partant pour la Syrie" with as much energy as if it already belonged to France; the old soldiers of the first Empire, wearing the St. Helena medal, hastened to the electoral urn to the cry of "Vive l'Empereur!" and, to complete the trio of art, arms, and religion, the Archbishop of Chambery, followed by the entire chapter, went from the cathedral in procession to record their votes in favour of the popular side of the election, which resulted in 3723 Oui, and 22 Non. Our Engraving represents the ecclesiastical personages leaving the sacred edifice, around which a large number of persons had collected. The Archbishop was plainly attired on the occasion, only wearing the simple purple cassali.

The Cathedral of Chambéry, of modern Gothic architecture, is remarkable for its simplicity. Begun in the fourteenth century, it has never been properly completed, and the different parts of its ornamentation bear traces of the styles of the succeeding periods. The most finished part of the interior is that occupied by the canons, &c., the portion of the building set apart for the people not having made much progress under the hands of the numerous architects. Now that the cathedral belongs to France, it will probably share in the liberality which the present French Government has long displayed in the restoration and improvement of all the religious edifices of the Empire.

AUCKLAND, NEW ZEALAND.

As many of our countrymen have emigrated to Auckland, New Zealand, taking advantage of the gift of land under certain arrangements which the Provincial Government of that province held out as a temptation to divert people's attention from the gold-fields, we present our readers with a View of the City of Auckland, with the new Commercial Embankment called Customhouse-street Quay, which is carried right across from its junction with Albert-street at Smale's Point to the foot of Britomart Barracks. This reclamation from the shore will give an extensive additional site for commercial establishments. A sale of leases for ninety-nine years at a nominal rent was advertised to take place there, on the 22nd of December, of lots of building land, ranging in size from thirty to one hundred feet to fifty-six by seventy-five feet and fifty-five by one hundred feet. The upset prices for the lots ranged from £300 to £500 per lot. This great embankment and the projecting wharf jutting out from Queen-street have eminently advanced Auckland as a commercial port. It was not till 1841 that Auckland could be said to have had an existence. It was then judiciously chosen for the seat of Government in New Zealand. Strenuous efforts have been and continue to be made to remove the Government establishments to Wellington, and the General Assemblies are to hold their next Session there; but, although Wellington is as central as Liverpool is for the meeting of the British Parliament, nature has made Auckland the only place in New Zealand suitable to be the abode of the representative of majesty. The province of Auckland contains more than double the population of any other province in New Zealand. Its northern position, placing it nearer to the tropics than the southern islands, gives Auckland a more genial climate than is to be found in the southern parts of Europe. Persons who visit Auckland on the score of health fix their abode there. The remarkable longevity of the pensioners who emigrated twenty years ago is an evident proof that the change from Great Britain to Auckland has lengthened their days. The European population of the province exceeds 20,000, exclusive of a large military and naval force. About ten thousand Europeans inhabit the city itself, and the trade of the province is rapidly augmenting. There is a great preponderance of the male over the female population. In addition to Europeans, a large body of civilised natives inhabit the province, conforming to European habits of industry, apt scholars in house-building, agriculture, and every other useful occupation. Many of our own people would do well if they could become as well conducted as the Maories of New Zealand.



THE ARCHBISHOP OF CHAMBERY, AT THE HEAD OF HIS CLERGY, PROCEEDING FROM THE CATHEDRAL TO VOTE FOR THE ANNEXATION TO FRANCE.

VIEW OF THE CITY OF AUCKLAND, NEW ZEALAND, WITH THE NEW COMMERCIAL EMBANKMENT.

These people are large consumers of English manufactured goods, and contribute to a great extent to the increasing exports from Auckland. Persons who intend to emigrate to New Zealand should not neglect to obtain, if they can, land orders for themselves and for each qualified member of their family. No persons are entitled to a land order as a right, or in respect of the payment of passage-money, but must satisfy the agents of the Provincial Government that they are persons of good character, suitable to work, either by the judicious use of their capital in employing labour, or be capable and willing to work hard at any occupation they can find in so young a country. The land orders are given to eligible persons to encourage their settlement in the province. There are no free passages to Auckland at the cost of the Government, but land orders are given to wealthier emigrants, who pay the passage, of eligible artisans or mechanics, and servants of all kinds, and thus that class of persons obtain a free passage. Assisted passages are only granted to such persons as may be nominated to the Provincial Government by their friends or relatives in the province, upon which instructions are given by that Government to their agents in London, Messrs. Ridgway and Sons, 40, Leicester-square, to provide them with a passage. In Auckland occupations and amusements are similar to those in England. There are churches and chapels for every sect of Christians, synagogues, theatre, temperance halls, Christian associations, horticultural and agricultural associations, public companies, colleges, schools, corn exchange, a mechanics' institute, literary lounges, musical entertainments, horse racing; and the port of Auckland is frequented by steam and sagoing ships of very large burden, besides innumerable native craft. In December, 1848, when the census was taken, there were 4117 houses or buildings within the city of Auckland, and the number was rapidly on the increase. In the province there were 14,192 horses, and 122 mules and asses, 137,504 head of cattle, 1,023,324 sheep, 11,797 goats, 40,734 pigs. The fenced lands belonging to Europeans in the province of Auckland were then 90,447 acres, and 60,1324 acres under crops, exclusive of large tracts of ploughed land and open pasture land. The lands in the province of Auckland are as varied in quality as in England; there is abundance of coal, limestone, timber, and other valuable products. There are no poor people in Auckland, except the drunkards and other wise disolute. Provisions and clothing are as cheap as in England, in many cases cheaper. House-rent is somewhat dearer than in England. The upset prices of country lands is 10s. per acre: they are put up in lots of from 40 to 320 acres each. Town lands and suburban lands are put up at at prices ranging fron £1 up to £100 per acre, according to position; but the choice lands in the city of Auckland, reserved for special purposes, are put up at reasonable prices from time to time. Lands belonging to proprietors are constantly being sold, or let, as in England; and it is necessary there, as here, for people to see that they deal with honourable persons. Choice suburban land has fetched, at public auction, for building purposes, at the rate of £1200 per acre. Messrs. Ridgway and Sons, of Leicester-square, the agents of the Provincial Government, have in their possession an extensive library of works upon New Zealand, files of newspapers, gazettes, specimens of coal, flax, gum, wood, ferns, native implements, sketches of the natives and country, and everything that can interest intending emigrants, and those gentlemen are at all times ready to afford trustworthy information for the guidance of intending emigrants. The London ships engaged in the Auckland trade are those of Messrs. Willis, Gann, and Co.; and Messrs. Shaw, Saville, and Co.; and the increasing traffic has induced Messrs. Wilson and Chambers and Messrs. James Baines and Co., of Liverpool, to try the trade. Messrs. Pearson and Co., of Hull, have established the Intercolonial Mail Packet Company in New Zealand, and will send a ship from the Humber for that service about April. Persons of small capital requiring a good sound rate of income can invest their money upon the best securities in Auckland at ten per cent interest. There are three well-conducted and well-printed English newspapers in Auckland, and everything is indicative of a steady and continuous progress; and, although it is rare to meet with a person with a handle to his name, the society in Auckland is good.

The harbour of Auckland, the Waitemata, is acknowledged to be the finest in the world. Passing numerous headlands, promontories, bays, and inlets, with curious islands of every size and form—ships enter between two heads a mile apart, the one on the Island of Rangitoto and the other forming the cape which terminates a narrow peninsula over which the eastern sea is viewed from the heights of the city. The waters of the "Waitemata" within the heads are from three to four miles in width, winding onwards to the south west, when, a few miles from Auckland, it is separated from Manukau by a narrow isthmus, which our young enterprise already talks of cutting through, thus opening a passage for ships from the Western ocean. The situation of the city is noble and picturesque. The houses nestle in trees and shrubs along the heights of the coast, and then repose in green meadows along the sides, and up to the summits of numerous hills, many of which enjoy a vast and varied view of water and land, spread out into every conceivable variety of form.

EAST VIEW OF AUCKLAND, FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY W. H. SUTCLIFFE.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

It is matter of observation that the Prime Minister has evidently gone through a phase of rejuvenescence. No one can have failed to remark the singular smoothness, freshness, and, indeed, plumpness, of his countenance; the uprightness of his stature, and the general alacrity of his movements. This sanity of body has been accompanied by a corresponding liveliness and buoyancy of spirits, which has once more brought Lord Palmerston before the House of Commons in the sportive vein which, since his last accession to the Premiership, he has almost wholly laid aside. Some people are censorious enough to attribute his high spirits to a chuckling consciousness of his having had a secret triumph over some of his troublesome colleagues, and Lord John Russell in particular. Others say that he is humorously exulting over his having given Mr. Gladstone a check in his wild-horseman career in the pressure of his financial schemes. The reference in this respect is, of course, to that occasion when the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his eagerness to go ahead with his Wine Licenses Bill, transgressed the unwritten law of the House by bringing up the report of certain resolutions immediately after they were carried, instead of allowing a day to intervene, as usual in such proceedings. Certain it is that, when complaint was made by some of the strict Parliamentary formalists of this breach of etiquette and something more, Lord Palmerston came forward and threw over his colleague; and, when he moved the undoing of the deed, and turned Mr. Gladstone's more haste into worse speed, there was something peculiarly caustic and triumphant in the way in which he pooh-poohed his Finance Minister, and caused him to look like a naughty boy, sulky and mentally recalcitrant, under a penal acknowledgment of a fault. Certainly, nothing could be more striking than the unnatural, deadly calm, covering illimitable and concentrated rage, which Mr. Gladstone exhibited under as decided a snubbing as could be administered to a middle-aged Minister of State. It may be only a coincidence, but it is the fact, that Lord Palmerston's spirits have been exceedingly buoyant ever since he had his impulsive and high-pressure coadjutor on the hip; and Mr. Gladstone's conduct of the measure, in a phase of which he was caught napping, has been characterised by a suaveness of demeanour and a conciliatory tendency in reference to listening to and adopting suggestions, which has been so remarkable, and contrasted so strongly with his somewhat imperious manner hitherto that it has won for him, every now and then, involuntary, but not therefore the less significant, bursts of "Hear, hear!" from all parts of the House.

Again: it is said that Lord Palmerston's high spirits have arisen from his scenting the battle not by any means afar off. The Paper-duty Repeal Bill, about which rumour says he does not care a farthing, has put him into direct collision with the Opposition, and, like the old war-horse, he curvets and prances with a keen sense of enjoyment at the coming shock of arms. Censorious folk laugh and say that he believes he will have a curious compensation against Lord Derby, should that noble Earl succeed in beating him on the paper duty. It may be remembered that, when Lord Derby was Prime Minister, he had a horse entered for that great race which goes by his name, and the prize for which his novelistic colleague, Mr. Disraeli, has named the "Blue Ribbon of the Turf." That horse was a great favourite, and it is said that Lord Derby had set his heart on winning that metaphorical "blue ribbon" at the time that he was Premier of England, and that he would have valued it more than the other actual positive "blue ribbon"—that of the Order of the Garter—which he has since attained. Now, it happens that Lord Palmerston has this year a horse which is high in the betting for the great event at Epsom next week, and if he should succeed in winning the most coveted of all racing stakes his triumph over Lord Derby will, it is said, be more grateful to him than his seizing from him the reins of power. However this may be, it would seem that the virus with which turfites are inoculated is running rife through the veins of our First Minister, for at this moment he appears to have thrown himself heartily into the defence of manly sports, and to have made a dead set at all sorts of sentimentalism. This was especially the case on Tuesday night. In consequence, probably, of the circumstance that, owing to the meeting of the new Parliament and the necessity for swearing in members within a given time, there was no formal adjournment of the House over the Derby Day last year, Mr. Edwin James, with peculiar unction, but in circumlocutory phrase, inquired if the practice was to be revived this year? With marked buoyancy up jumped the Premier, and, declining to mince matters, declared that on this of all occasions he would not fail to give the House its chartered holiday; implying that he would be there himself, and hoping that all who loved "racing and him" would be there to cheer him in the event of his winning. Then came his contemptuous ridicule of the puniness of Lord Haddo, which is very tempting, certainly, in that nobleman's crusade against art-models, which said as plainly as possible "Be a man and do not whimper out any of your tea-drinking sensibilities in an assembly of men of the world." More pronounced, still, was that eulogy—it can be called nothing else—of the prize-ring which Lord Palmerston subsequently delivered, and in which he joked, and chuckled, and talked extravagances with a comic air of belief in them in a manner which was probably meant to show that he was in tip-top health and spirits, ready for all comers, and quite alive to the fact that he would soon be called on to show fight himself in the political arena. It was all very amusing—in a certain sense, very wonderful; but from the point of view in which alone it ought to be looked at it was very unsatisfactory. To thinking men, who consider Parliament a place of serious business, and Ministers of State a reproduction of those patres conscripti who controlled the old Roman senate by their gravity of demeanour as well as by their wisdom, it does seem an incongruity to witness the leading man of the realm playing fantastic tricks, and descending to be a joker of jokes on each and every subject which comes before him. Others, again, who believe in political omens and portents think that they see symptoms of the same spirit which preceded, and afterwards became coincident with, Lord Palmerston's fall from office in 1857. No doubt there is a tone of recklessness about him which may augur a foregone conclusion in his own mind.

The Parliamentary events of the week, counting from the period at which these slight records last ended, has not been very striking or productive of features. Perhaps the most noticeable matter has been the extraordinary condition into which one of the Friday evening discussions on the adjournment to Monday was involved. It is a fact that, owing to the rule that Ministers, to any one or each of whom half-a-dozen speech-preceded questions of that evening are addressed, can only speak once, it constantly happens that four or five subjects are brought forward and discussed, occupying more or less time, when, suddenly, the list of interpellations to a particular Minister having been exhausted, up he rises, generally decidedly mal-apropos of the very last matter in hand, and makes a speech touching subjects the dissertation on which had ceased hours before, to the infinite bewilderment of the listeners, and to the double perplexity of the readers of the reports next morning. Take a specimen such as this. On one of these higgledy-piggledy evenings Mr. Roebuck brought forward the case of a Mr. Spitz Goldstein, and asked a question, about eight o'clock. The official to whom his observation was addressed was marked in the notice-paper to answer two or three other questions which would have to come later and irregularly in their order; and so the Spitz-Goldstein affair dropped until a quarter to eleven, when Mr. Laing suddenly rose and began to deliver himself in that spluttering manner which the name required, amidst the stares of those present, most of whom had forgotten all about, and others had heard nothing of, this high-Dutch grievance. Well, Mr. Laing passed on to other things, and it was supposed that the great Spitz-Goldstein case had been disposed of, when lo! after all the desultory matter had been concluded, at the extraordinary hour of a quarter to twelve o'clock, up rose Lord Claude Hamilton, who had not been able at the proper moment to catch the Speaker's eye, and, as he had a right to do, once more brought up the German who had received some injury in connection with camels during the Crimean war, and who seems to have been hovering ever since between Aleppo and Damascus because the British Government would not pay him a certain sum of money. Bewilderment more intense, perplexity more perplexed, among the audience, as Lord Claude, with his strong voice, misplaced emphasis, and exuberance of gesture, thundered out sentences which, as far as could be understood by the majority of his hearers, related at the same time, in an extraordinary and unexplainable manner, to some ill-used contributor to the Zoological Gardens, to the flight of Mohammed from Mecca to Medina, and the conveyance of stores from Balaclava to the camp before Sebastopol. The whole thing is absurd in the extreme, while the remedy for this inextricable confusion is so simple and obvious that one would have thought it would have occurred to any Speaker who had had three months' experience in the chair of the House of Commons. Indeed, a partial attempt was made on a previous Friday to take the course we are about to suggest, and it was, as far as it went, quite successful. Let the Speaker, without regard to the order in which the questions stand on the paper, call on those members who have to interrogate a particular Minister in succession, until the last of the interpellations to him is exhausted, and then let that official rise and reply, and let that subject be dropped. That is to say, supposing there are three or four questions, to be accompanied by the talk which is legitimate on these occasions, set down to be put to the Secretary for War, let the Speaker call on those particular members to whom those subjects belong one after the other, and, when they have all concluded, let the official reply be given, and that discussion put an end to. In this way, that which is at least an anomaly, and in practice is the most inconvenient mode of proceeding—puzzling, and therefore unsatisfactory to every one who has anything to do with it—would be avoided, and something of that regularity, method, and intelligibility, which ought to be co-existent with the debates of the House of Commons, would be established on those evenings which the abuse of a custom and precedent has converted into a sort of Parliamentary fight at Donnybrook fair, where everybody is tumbled together, and everybody hitting out right and left, without reference to any particular feeling or desire, except that of hitting itself.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The Selling and Hawking Goods on Sunday Bill, the Bankrupt Law (Scotland) Amendment Bill, and the Public Improvements Bill passed through Committee.

The Common Lodging Houses (Ireland) Bill and the Bank of Ireland Bill were read a second time.

The series of Bills for the Consolidation of the Criminal Law, which have been introduced by the Lord Chancellor, were read a third time and passed.

The Exchequer Bills (£13,230,000) Bill and the Customs Bill were read a third time and passed.

The Gun-boats.—Lord Hardwicke moved for a return of all the vessels or gun-boats below 1000 tons burden built by contract since the year 1852, with the names and residences of the contractors of each vessel, showing at the same time the year of their construction, the price contracted for, together with their present condition as to seaworthiness.—The Duke of Somerset said there was no objection to grant the returns, as they were entirely similar to those already presented to the House of Commons, but it would be exceedingly difficult to afford accurate information as to the unseaworthiness of the whole of the vessels, as they were scattered over every quarter of the globe. He detailed the numbers at the various stations, the examinations of the gun and mortar boats which had already taken place, and the defective condition in which they were found, and communicated to the House information exactly similar to that given on Friday night by Lord C. Paget to the House of Commons.

Road across Hyde Park.—The Earl of Ducie presented a petition urging the formation of a road between the districts lying north and south of Hyde Park.—Lord Ebury urged the formation of this road as a metropolitan improvement for the relief of the streets.—Lord Llanover argued against the possibility of carrying out great metropolitan improvements by means of local rates unless the special funds of the City of London were made applicable to the general purposes of those improvements.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

The Queen's Birthday.—In answer to Sir F. Smith, Lord Palmerston said that the House would not sit on Friday, as it was not usual to do so on the Queen's birthday.

The Newspapers Conveyance Bill.—In answer to Mr. Baines, the Chancellor of the Exchequer stated his intention of not proceeding with this bill.

Recruiting for the Pope.—In answer to Mr. A. Steuart, Mr. Cardwell said that the Irish Government intended to enforce the law relating to foreign enlistment in reference to proceedings in Ireland for enlisting subjects of the Queen for the Army of the Pope.

The New Bronze Coinage.—In answer to Mr. Black, the Chancellor of the Exchequer said that the Mint was not yet in possession of the dies for the new bronze coinage, but a few weeks only would elapse before the issue took place.

Wine Licenses.—Irregularity of Proceeding.—Lord Palmerston called attention to the irregularity which occurred on Thursday se'nnight, when a resolution agreed to in a Committee of Ways and Means had been reported "forthwith," instead of on a subsequent day; and he moved that the proceeding be null and void, and that the resolution be reported to-morrow. After a brief discussion the motion was agreed to.

REFRESHMENT HOUSES AND WINE LICENSES BILL.

The House went into Committee on this bill.

In the course of the proceedings with the clauses, an animated discussion arose, raised by an amendment moved to the 24th clause by Mr. Baines, the effect of which would be to keep the proposed refreshment-houses closed on Sunday instead of their being open during the same hours as public-houses and beershops. On a division, the amendment was rejected by 117 to 82, and the clause was agreed to. All the clauses in the bill were gone through, and several which had been postponed were brought up, discussed, and agreed to; but there still remained one or two to be disposed of when the chairman reported progress, and the House resumed.

Nuisances Removal and Diseases Prevention Bill.—The House went into Committee on this bill, the object of which is to appoint local authorities in every place, under whose charge the health of the locality should be placed; but on the first clause a motion was made to report progress, and the House resumed.

The Marriages (Extraparochial Places) Bill and the Malicious Injuries to Property Act Amendment Bill were read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF LORDS—Tuesday.

The Public Improvements Bill and the Common Lodging Houses (Ireland) passed through Committee.

INDIA.

The Marquis of Clanricarde—in moving for a despatch from Mr. E. H. Lushington to the Commissioner of the Nuddea District, dated 23rd October, 1859, and relating to the treatment of natives by European planters in India; also, report of Mr. Reid to to the Lieutenant-Governor, referred to in the above-mentioned despatch; and on presenting a petition from certain natives of India, praying for legal reforms and for their admission into higher offices of government than are now opened to them—stated that the petitioners desired a Royal commission might be opened to inquire into the facts stated in the petition. He referred to the recall of Sir Charles Trevelyan, and expressed his opinion that no other course could have been taken under the circumstances.

The Earl of Ellenborough urged that the Governor-General in Council in India ought to have the power of passing measures without delay which they might think necessary; and that there should be some body the opinion of which should be taken in reference to measures relating to the laws, customs, and religion of the natives. The noble Earl expressed strongly his regret at the loss of Sir C. Trevelyan's services to India.

The Duke of Argyll agreed to the production of the papers; and, in reference to Lord Ellenborough's remark, said that the present form of the Legislative Council of India was adopted after great consideration; and he did not think the plan proposed by the noble Earl would do much more to satisfy those who wished to see a change in the mode of carrying on the government of India.

Lord Lyveden expressed a hope that some change would be made in the constitution of the Legislative Council.

Lord Stanley of Alderley presented a petition from the inhabitants of Calcutta entering into the condition of the finances of India, and praying for an equalisation of expenditure and revenue.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

France and Italy.—In answer to Mr. Griffith, Lord J. Russell said that no intimation had been made to Lord Cowley, officially or privately, that in case of any territorial alteration in Southern Italy, France would claim further territorial compensation for herself.

Russia and Turkey.—In answer to Mr. J. Locke, Lord J. Russell said that he had no information that Russia had concentrated a considerable army on the Pruth, and that the Ottoman Government had assembled a corps-d'armée at Widdin. He had received a despatch from Sir J. Crampton stating that Prince Gortschakoff had assembled the representatives of all the Powers except Turkey, and had stated that the condition of the Christians in Turkey was every day becoming less supportable, and that his Government hoped to obtain the concurrence of the other Powers, and would make a strong remonstrance to Turkey on the subject. He had also received a despatch from Lord Cowley, who stated that he had been told by M. Thouvenel that if any proceedings were taken in the matter they ought to be taken not by Russia alone, or united with France, but by the five great Powers.

The Derby Day.—In answer to Mr. E. James, Lord Palmerston said it was his intention to move the adjournment of the House for the Derby Day.

Recreation-grounds.—Mr. Stanley moved a resolution, to the effect that it was expedient that Government or Parliament should take steps to inquire how best adequate open spaces in the vicinity of our increasing populous towns, as public walks and places of exercise and recreation, may be provided and secured; and to encourage and direct efforts by private subscriptions, voluntary rates, or public grants, to carry out such objects.—Sir G. C. Lewis, while fully concurring in the abstract views of Mr. Slaney, said that the only question was how provision should be made for such places of recreation; and it seemed to him that such provision should be made out of local funds, which the existing law enabled to be done. If any defects were discovered in the existing law he would give his favourable consideration to its amendment, but he thought no advantage would be gained by the present motion. The motion was negatived.

Female Models in Schools of Art.—Lord Haddo moved that the exhibition in schools of art of females wholly unclothed ought not to receive the sanction of a public grant of money to the schools in which such practice is adopted.—Sir G. C. Lewis said that he had himself no special knowledge of the practice of the department to which the subject matter related, and the Government had never interfered in the detailed regulations of the schools referred to. No one, he believed, thought that these art studies had any corrupting influence on students, and he was of opinion that it was unnecessary to press the motion.—After some observations against it by Mr. Adderley, and by Mr. Spooner in favour of the motion, Lord Palmerston said this was an attempt to interfere inquisitorially by Parliament with matters with which they had nothing to do. The noble Lord ought to go further, and bring in a bill to make it penal to study the female form; he objected to the motion. On a division, the motion was lost by 147 to 32.

Highways in South Wales.—Lord Emlyn obtained leave to bring in a bill for the better management and control of the highways in South Wales.

Turnpike Roads and Bridges.—Mr. Alcock moved for a Royal Commission to inquire as to some means to be substituted for the present mode of maintaing the turnpike roads and bridges in England and Wales by tolls.—Sir G. C. Lewis opposed the motion, which, on a division, was lost by 78 to 12.

The Order on the Bath.—Sir H. Stracey moved for any correspondence which had taken place between the India Board and the Secretary for War on the subject of officers recommended by the Governor-General of India and Lord Clyde for the companionship of the Bath.—Mr. S. Herbert controverted a statement made by the mover, that there had been a greater number of honours given to Queen's than to Indian officers, the contrary being the fact. The excess in the number of companionships of the Bath was so great that it was necessary to wait for vacancies before any more were conferred. He declined to give the correspondence.—The motion was negatived.

The Decayed Gun-boats.—Sir C. Napier moved for returns of the names of the gun and mortar boats with the short bolts and the names of the builders, and of those now fit for service. In the course of his observations he stated that an American shipowner had told him that, from his personal knowledge, there could be turned out in Toulon in a fortnight a fleet of twenty sail of the line, and there could be collected 30,000 seamen and numerous transports in the same time.—Lord C. Paget said that the Admiralty had no desire to screen the offending contractors; so far from that, before the defects in the gun-boats were known to the public, the Admiralty had taken steps to punish any persons against whom proof could be obtained. It would not be fair when this matter was sub judice to mention the names, as was asked; nor was it possible to give a return of the boats fit for service.—In the course of discussion which followed Lord Palmerston said the revelation of the names of the offending parties was only a question of the short time which would elapse before it was ascertained whether prosecutions could be instituted, in which case the greatest publicity would be given to the facts of the cases.—The motion was not pressed.

The Recent Prize Fight.—Lord Lovaine, in moving for correspondence between the Home Office and the directors of the South Eastern Railway Company relating to the conveyance of persons intending to commit a breach of the law, drew attention to the course taken by the company on the occasion of the late prize-fight, and their complicity in the breach of the law which took place, urging that means ought to be taken to prevent two or three thousand ruffians being thrown at any time into any quiet and respectable neighbourhood.—Lord Palmerston, in granting the motion, protested against the exaggerations with which the motion had been introduced, which implied that three thousand banditti had committed all kinds of outrages in some unoffending neighbourhood. No doubt a prize-fight was technically illegal, but the persons who attended it were not necessarily engaged in promoting a breach of the peace, whatever difference of opinion there might be as to the taste which led them to such an exhibition. He could not see that those persons were guilty of a more illegal act than a crowd which assembled to see a balloon ascent.—Lord Lovaine protested against the countenance given to prize-fights from the Treasury bench.—Remarks in the same sense were made by several hon members.—Colonel Dickson, however, vindicated Lord Palmerston's love of manly sports, and highly eulogised the participators (especially the Englishman) in the late fight, and objected to legislation for putting down such pursuits.

Tenure and Improvement of Land (Ireland) Bill.—On the motion for the second reading of this bill Sir J. Walsh moved its rejection.—Mr. Maguire expressed his desire that the bill should be passed, but in a much amended form.—Mr. George also assented to the second reading, but with a view to its being altered in its future stages.—After addresses from Mr. Pollard-Urquhart and Mr. Dawson, both agreeing to the second reading, The O'Donoghue moved the adjournment of the debate, which, after a short discussion, was arranged.

The Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Bill was read a second time, and the other orders were disposed of.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The Annuity Tax Abolition (Edinburgh) Bill.—The Lord Advocate moved the second reading of this bill.—Mr. Hadfield objected to the principle of the bill, believing that it would perpetuate the tax in another shape, and moved that the bill be read a second time that day six months.—After some conversation, the Lord Advocate intimated that, when the bill came into Committee, he intended to move the insertion of clauses to provide that, instead of accumulating a fund of £120,000, as proposed by the present bill, a permanent rate should be levied, in order to secure the salaries of thirteen ministers. Care would be taken that there should be ample security for the payment of the rate.—Mr. Hadfield then withdrew the amendment, and the bill was read a second time.

The order for the second reading of the Charity Trustees Bill was discharged.

The Consolidated Fund (£9,500,000) Bill was read a second time.

On the motion of the Attorney-General, the Court of Chancery Bill was referred to a Select Committee.

HOUSE OF LORDS—Thursday.

This being Ascension Day, their Lordships, according to custom, did not meet.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

New Writ.—On the motion of Sir W. Jolliffe a new writ was ordered to issue for the borough of Lymington, in the room of Sir John Carnac who, since his election, had accepted the office of Steward of her Majesty's Manor of York.

The Queen's Birthday.—On the motion of Lord Palmerston it was resolved that the House, at its rising, should adjourn till Monday (to-morrow, Friday, being her Majesty's birthday).

The Whitsuntide Holidays.—Lord Palmerston also gave notice of his intention to move that the House do adjourn from Friday next until the following Thursday for the Whitsuntide holidays. The noble Lord likewise gave notice that he should move that the present arrangements respecting Thursdays and Fridays be continued for the remainder of the Session.

The Paper Duty.—Mr. Stansfeld asked what the obligations of this country would be under the commercial treaty with France in reference to foreign paper in case the excise duty on paper were not repealed?—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said the rejection of the Paper Duty Repeal Bill by the House of Lords was an occurrence which it was not for him to anticipate. With regard to the duty on foreign paper the 7th article of the treaty ran thus:—"Her Britannic Majesty promises to recommend to Parliament a rate of duty equal to the excise duty which is or shall be imposed on articles of the same description in the United Kingdom. At the same time the duty charged on the importation of such merchandise may be augmented by such sums as may be equivalent to the expense which the system of excise may entail upon the British produce." He would not say what would be done in the event of the repeal of the paper duty, but the obligations of England under the treaty with France by the terms of the address agreed to by both Houses in case the excise duty on paper were not repealed were perfectly clear. If a duty of excise were levied upon paper, it was the obvious duty of England towards France to reduce the customs duties on foreign paper to the precise cost of the excise duty on paper made at home.

SICILY.

On the motion for the adjournment until Monday next,

Mr. Hennessy called attention to the statement of the Solicitor General with reference to an advertisement in the Times for raising money to assist the insurgents in Sicily, and to a decision of the Court of Common Pleas as to the illegality of such a proceeding. The hon. member remarked that a good deal of sympathy had been shown to General Garibaldi in this country, and it was necessary, therefore, that attention should be called to the fact (Cheers). He considered that the legal opinion given by one of the chief legal advisers of the Crown (the Solicitor-General) was an incorrect one, and that it had led to a violation of the law. The hon. gentleman referred to the opinions of Lord Lyndhurst and other legal authorities. Considering that the question was connected with the territorial arrangements of the Emperor of the French, and with certain despatches recently sent forth by the Foreign Secretary, he believed that this fillibustering expedition should be stayed.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL said he did not believe that persons who paid subscriptions to such a fund were liable to an indictment in a criminal court. It was not for him to defend Garibaldi—all that he had to deal with being the dry point of law which he had adverted to. He did not give any opinion as to the persons who had signed the advertisement, or the publishers of the papers who had inserted it; but he did not believe their conduct amounted to an indictable offence.

Mr. WHITESIDE differed from the Solicitor-General upon the question of law, and asserted that the parties subscribing to any fund in aid of the revolutionary views of the subjects of a Sovereign with whom we were on terms of amity were guilty of an illegal act, and could be indicted for a conspiracy.

Mr. E. JAMES concurred in that definition of the law, and thought the House was much indebted to Mr. Hennessy for bringing the question forward. The hon. member would add to the obligation if he brought the case of a certain party in the sister country before the House for promoting the enlistment of British subjects in a foreign service with a view of massacring a people who were struggling for freedom against Papal despotism.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL admitted that the subscribers to the Garibaldi fund in this country were guilty of an illegal act, but doubted much whether there was any precedent for an indictment for conspiracy against them.

Sir H. CAIRNS expressed his gratification at hearing from the Attorney-General that the act alluded to was in his opinion illegal, as much mischief might be occasioned if a different impression had gone abroad. He contended that the subscribers to this fund were guilty of a violation of the law of nations, and could, each and all of them, be indicted for conspiracy.

Mr. BOVILL said the question was a most important one, for if this fund were permitted the King of Naples might, without any formal declaration of war, immediately seize the property of British subjects.

Mr. MONSELL wished to know what course the Government intended to take with respect to this subscription to aid an invasion upon the dominions of the King of Naples. He eulogised the good intentions of the Pope, who was driven to raise a force to resist the threatened invasion of Garibaldi, who called upon Italy to drive the Pope out of that country. He asserted that there was no law forbidding enlistment in the army of a friendly Sovereign, which, on the part of officers, was a matter of everyday occurrence.

In reply to Mr. Hope, the ATTORNEY-GENERAL explained that he meant that no successful prosecution had been established against foreigners resident in this country, and the committee to the Garibaldi fund appeared to be composed of such.

After a few words from Mr. Malins and Mr. Newdegate,

Mr. B. OSBORNE hoped that the Government would interfere and vindicate the complete non-intervention on the part of this country. It was a prevalent idea abroad that the success of Garibaldi in landing at Marsala was owing to the assistance of English vessels, and he thought that they ought to have an authoritative explanation of that statement without the least delay.

Lord J. RUSSELL said that he had received a report from the Admiralty of the officer commanding the vessels at Marsala, by which it appeared that there was a considerable amount of English property in that place, and many British subjects residing there. Admiral Fanshawe sent two vessels there. Just as one of them arrived two merchant steamers, with Garibaldi and his force, and afterwards two Neapolitan frigates, which did not fire upon the men who were landing from the steamers, put into that port. The report did not say anything further, the commanding officer not being then aware of the rumour since raised; but he stated that he declined to accede to a request to take possession of one of the merchant steamers which was abandoned; and in so doing he acted properly. He also stated that, on being requested to call his officers from the town, he hoisted the signal at once. From this it did not appear that the Captain had exceeded his duty, and the request was, as usual, one of courtesy. With respect to the question of the subscribers to the Garibaldi fund in this country, a prosecution of the parties, according to the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, was not likely to be successful; but the enlistment in Ireland in support of the Pope was a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

Mr. MAGUIRE eulogised the Government of the Pope, and complained that this country whilst pursuing a truckling policy towards France had connived at the acts of two kingly robbers in promoting rebellion and fostering discontent throughout Italy.

Mr. DANBY SEYMOUR expressed surprise at the speech of Lord John Russell, the whole tone of which was calculated to encourage General Garibaldi.

Lord J. RUSSELL said he had studiously avoided expressing any opinion upon Garibaldi's expedition.

The subject then dropped.

REFRESHMENT HOUSES AND WINE LICENSES BILL.

The House went again into Committee upon this bill, and the consideration of its clauses occupied the remainder of the night.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

Sir W. C. Ross, R.A.: The will and codicil of Sir William Charles Ross, of Fitzroy-square, London, portrait-painter to her Majesty, were proved in the Principal Registry, on the 14th of May, by John Wormald, Esq., and David Barclay Chapman, Esq., the two executors. Sir Edmund Filmer, Bart., since deceased, was also an executor. The personalty sworn under £25,000. It is quite a family disposition, with the exception of an annuity of £20 to Adeline Cull, a faithful attendant upon him for many years. There is an annuity of £40 to the widow of his late brother John Ross. He leaves the residue of his property to be invested, and the interest given amongst the following members of his family who may survive him—viz., his father, his brother Hugh, and his two sisters Maria and Magdalene; and, on the demise of the last survivor of them, then the principal to be divided amongst his first and second cousins, as enumerated in his will, which bears date the 25th of August, 1348, and the codicil the 2nd of March, 1858. His death occurred on the 20th of January last, aged 66.

Sir Charles Fairlie, Bart.: The will of Sir Charles Cuningham Fairlie, Bart., formerly residing at Clarges-street, Piccadilly, but late of 34, Thurloe-square, Brompton, was proved in London by his daughter Rosa Cuninghame, widow, the sole executrix, and to whom he has left the whole of his estates, both real and personal, absolutely. Sir Charles died on the 1st of June last, at the age of 79. The will bears date the 5th of July, 1855.

Chief Justice Wylde: The will and codicil of the Hon. Sir John Wylde, Knt., D.C.L., late of Hopeville, Cape of Good Hope, Chief Justice of the colony, were administered to in London, on the 7th of May, by the Hon. William Field, the lawful attorney of the Hon. William Porter, her Majesty's Attorney-General at the Cape, Clarence Thos. Wylde, Esq., clerk to the Legislative Council, the son, and Edwd. Thomas Wylde, Esq., Assistant-Registrar of the Supreme Court, the nephew, all residents of Cape Town, the executors. The personalty in England sworn under £7000. Sir John has left an annuity to his wife, and liberal bequests to his friends and acquaintance in the colony, and bequeaths to his faithful servant and nurse, who has been most devoted in her attention to him during a long illness, a sum of £120 or £150, as may be required, to purchase for her a residence, she having a dread of becoming houseless. He has appointed his children residuary legates—there were seven, three are dead, and their children are to take their deceased parents' share. The will was made in 1856, the codicil in 1857. This venerable Judge had attained his seventy-ninth year.

A picture, by Miss Osborn, entitled "The Governess," now exhibited at the Royal Academy, has been purchased by her Majesty.

M. and Mdme. Goldschmidt (Jenny Lind) leave London in the early part of June for a visit to Sweden of three or four months.

The Times states that it is no secret that the Cabinet has been fiercely at variance on the Commercial Treaty, the Budget, the Tenpenny Income Tax, and the Repeal of the Paper Duty.

Francis Clarke, a private R.M., has been sentenced by a general court-martial, at Chatham, to seven years' penal servitude, for striking his sergeant and threatening to do the same by his Colonel.

MUSIC.

It is a good sign of improving public taste when the high works of art are beginning to be the most attractive. For several seasons the "Trovatore" and the "Traviata" have engrossed the boards of both our Italian theatres. Not unfrequently one of those pieces was performed at both houses on the same evening. The present state of the opera-going public seems more healthy. The favourite operas at Her Majesty's Theatre, as well as at Covent Garden, are "Don Giovanni" and the "Barbiere di Siviglia," each a masterpiece of its class. They have been performed at both theatres to crowded and enthusiastic audiences; and on Thursday night (when the Queen honoured Her Majesty's Theatre with her presence) the performance consisted of "Don Giovanni," while the same opera was likewise given at Covent Garden. Mozart's great masterpiece is well got up and performed at both theatres. At her Majesty's the hero is personated by Everardi; at the Royal Italian Opera by Mario. Both performers look and act the part well, though Mario has the advantage in the easy and aristocratic bearing which belongs to the high-born Spanish gentleman. On the other hand, however, Everardi has the advantage in a musical point of view. His fine baritone voice is perfectly suited to the music, which he sings with perfect purity; while Mario, in order to accommodate the music to his tenor voice, takes liberties with the text which no one who has a due respect for Mozart can tolerate. At each house there is a magnificent Donna Anna—Grisi at Covent Garden, and Titiens at Her Majesty's; and the representatives of Zerlina at both houses—Borghi-Mamo at the one and Penco at the other—are evenly balanced, being equally charming. The Covent Garden Elvira has all the advantage, Csillag's performance of the part being of incomparable excellence; while the same theatre has likewise the advantage in the part of Leporello, in which Ronconi has no rival.

We have already noticed the performance of the "Barbiere di Siviglia" at the Royal Italian Opera. On Tuesday last it was produced at Her Majesty's Theatre, when Borghi-Mamo sustained the part of Rosa in a manner which excited the enthusiasm of the audience. Her performance was most delightful; her acting was full of spirit, mingled with grace and delicacy, while its charm was heightened by the beauty of her voice and the exquisite finish and brilliancy of her singing. Everardi was an excellent Figaro—humorous without buffoonery; and the remaining parts—Almaviva, Bartholo, and Basilio, were respectively filled by Belart, S. Ronconi, (brother of the Ronconi), and Vialetti.

The fifth subscription concert of the VOCAL ASSOCIATION, at St. James's Hall, on Wednesday evening, under the direction of Mr. Benedict, was one of the most brilliant performances which have been given by this society. The chief portion of the entertainment consisted of vocal part-music, sung by an excellent choir of two hundred voices; among these was Reichardt's "Misericordia Domini," a motet for a double choir; Mendelssohn's part-song "Departure," and Benedict's part-song "Home, Sweet Home." Benedict's trio for female voices, "Homeward Bound," was charmingly sung by twelve ladies, members of the Vocal Association. Several favourite opera-songs were sung by Mongini, Everardi, Mdlle. Vaneri, and Mdlle. Brunetti. Mdme. Goldberg-Strozzi sang an aria composed by M. Goldberg, a very beautiful melody, charmingly sung, and most warmly applauded. Several excellent pianoforte performances, by Mr. J. F. Barnett—particularly Bach's fugue in C sharp major, and Chopin's polonaise in A flat—gave additional variety to this very interesting concert.

On Wednesday there was another monster concert at the CRYSTAL PALACE. It was the annual performance of the Tonic Sol-fa Association. The singers were a choir of five thousand voices (4000 children and 1000 adults), collected from the numerous schools in and adjoining the metropolis is which vocal music is taught according to the Tonic Sol-fa system. The concert consisted of a selection of choral pieces, sacred and secular, calculated for such an occasion, and sung in a manner which certainly did credit to the youthful pupils and their instructors. Though the weather was unfavourable, there was an immense concourse of visitors, by whom the performances were vehemently applauded.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI.—On Monday Mr. and Mrs. Wigan reappeared, and a new piece was produced under the title of "It's an Ill Wind that Blows Nobody Good." It is an adaptation by Mr. John Oxenford of a French drama by MM. D'Ennery and H. Crémieux, called "Le Savetier de la Rue Quincampoix," but it is thoroughly Anglicised, and made to relate to the South Sea Bubble, in which a cobbler residing near the Royal Exchange is represented as being interested. Simon Strap (Mr. Wigan) has invested his savings, amounting to five pounds ten shillings and sixpence, in South Sea Stock, which sum, in consequence of a blunder of his man Hank (Mr. Toole), is mistaken for £5106—and it turns up for a time to be, in the shape of South Sea shares, of ten times that value. This piece of good luck, however, falls to Strap at a time when he cares little for money, his mind being engaged in an affair which has caused the wreck of his cherished happiness. He has had charge of a female child who, at the date of the drama (1720), is only twelve years younger than himself, and yet who passes for his daughter. Circumstances occur at the opening of the play to disturb this supposed relation; and Strap, in his great love for the girl, proposes to become her husband. Kitty (Miss Sims) is then compelled to avow her engagement with Mr. Selwyn, a young surgeon (Mr. Billington),—a discovery which almost breaks the heart of poor Strap. What, then, is to him fifty thousand pounds, or any sum? One of the shares, worth a thousand pounds, he gives to Selwyn, who realizes it at once: the rest remain in his own hands fatally unused until the explosion of the Bubble. Meanwhile a fearful struggle takes place—Kitty, whom Strap had at first received from the arms of a murdered woman, turns out to be the daughter of Sir George Radcliffe, a Jacobite, who, though really dead, is simulated by the villain (Mr. Stuart), who murdered her nurse, and who now passes himself off as her father in order to get possession of an investment of £50,000, which Sir George had made for his daughter's benefit. His plan is to marry her to a profligate, Sir Geoffrey Blaize, and divide the plunder; but in this he is ultimately defeated by the generous and courageous cobbler. A letter of Sir George Radcliffe in his possession speaks of the writer as a proscribed traitor, whom any man may legally slay; whereupon Strap constitutes himself the pretender's executioner, and, by threatening his life, extorts from him a renunciation of his claim, which is shortly followed by a confession of his guilt. The mother of Kitty, who, after her husband's flight, had married a citizen of London and is now Lady Mayoress, is also introduced, as seeking to make compensation to the cobbler for a favourite magpie which a lapdog of hers had killed, and is thus brought into contact with her daughter and the pretended Sir George, whom she at once denounces as an impostor, but is prevented from publicly doing so in consequence of her second marriage. The situations of this drama, which is constructed in three acts, afford some excellent opportunities for Mr. Wigan, who personates the homely sorrow and manly determination of the honest cobbler with much natural emotion, and gives an air of reality to the scene which interests the audience. The humour, too, of the part of Hank, affords scope for Mr. Toole's quaint style, and produced rounds of applause. The curtain fell on a decided success.

OLYMPIC.—Another clever adaptation of "La Belle Mère," under the title of "Dearest Mamma," was produced on Monday; and afforded an opportunity of effective acting to Mr. Addison and Mrs. Leigh Murray. The piece is elegantly produced, and is likely to prove moderately attractive.

STANDARD.—Mr. James Anderson, on his return from America, commenced, on Monday, an engagement in his original character of Ingomar. He was received by a numerous audience with enthusiasm, and proved to be in excellent voice; in fact, we think that it has much improved in tone, and acquired more variety than it formerly had. On Tuesday, he appeared in "Othello," and performed with remarkable vigour and effect.

BARNSBURY HALL.—Mr. Woodin gratified, on Wednesday evening, his Islington friends with a repetition of his "Olio," and had the satisfaction of delivering his entertainment to a numerous and fashionable audience, who were evidently greatly pleased with his clever and effective assumptions.

LIVERPOOL.—Mr. and Mrs. Kean have met with great success at the Theatre Royal, particularly in the plays of "The Gamester" and "Louis XI." In relation to the latter there is a witty poem in the Albion, signed "C. M.," which does justice both to the dramatist and the actor.

COUNTRY NEWS.

The screw-steamer Artizan, lying in the East Bute Dock, Cardiff, laden with coal for Liverpool, blew up on Wednesday morning, occasioning considerable damage.

Edward Humphrey, a boatman on the canal near Wolverhampton, has been apprehended for the murder of a woman who lived with him, named Elizabeth Evans. The fellow is reported to have knocked her down with his fist, and then to have kicked her heavily.

An Industrial and Art-Treasures Exhibition has been held in the Borough Hall, Stockton-on-Tees, during the last few weeks, the proceeds of which will be devoted towards liquidating the debt on South Stockton new church. The exhibition has been most successful in a pecuniary point of view, upwards of £800 having been taken for admission.

At Winchester, on Saturday last, a soldier named Robert Simpson cut the throat of a woman named Sophia Rowe, and then attempted to kill himself in the same manner. The woman, who is not expected to recover, states that she requested him to put an end to her existence, and gave him the money to buy the razor.

At Cambridge, on Saturday evening last, two young men, named Nathan Brazier and Henry Wales, after playing several games at the Bell public-house, got to fighting, when, after three rounds, the latter received a fatal blow. The coroner's jury have returned a verdict of "Manslaughter" against Brazier, and also against Royal Parr, the landlord of the Bell, for inciting Brazier.

ROYAL DRAMATIC COLLEGE.—On the laying of the foundation-stone of the central hall of this institution by his Royal Highness the Prince Consort on Friday, the 1st of June, it is intended to hold a fancy fair, the stalls of which, we believe, will be under the superintendence of some of our leading actresses, who have tendered their services for that purpose to the committee charged with the arrangements for the occasion.

THE COTTON SUPPLY ASSOCIATION held its annual meeting a few days ago in the Manchester Townhall—the president, Mr. J. Cheetham, in the chair—when cheering accounts were given by several speakers as to the increasing growth of cotton in the East. Mr. T. G. Baring, M.P., Under-Secretary for India, stated that India already grew 2,400,000,000lb. of cotton, which, however, only one-tenth was exported, the rest being used in native manufactures, chiefly in consequence of the difficulty of land transport.

EXODUS OF THE IRISH PEASANTRY.—The Irish provincial papers continue to report the emigration of large masses of the peasantry. A Roscommon journal, for example, says:—"The numbers at present emigrating from our country exceed any that has taken place for years. Nearly every day groups of comfortable, well-dressed people of the small-farming class, with their large, red boxes, may be seen at our railway stations, en route for America viâ Galway and Cork."—The Carlow Sentinel also reports that the number of emigrants from Carlow and the adjoining districts of the Queen's county is very large.

THE PAPER DUTY REPEAL BILL AND THE HOUSE OF LORDS.—The Council of the Lancashire Reformers' Union held a meeting at Newall's-buildings on Tuesday, when resolutions were passed strongly protesting against the proposed opposition to the passing of the measure; and in the evening a public meeting, got up under the auspices of the same body, took place in the assembly room of the Free-trade Hall. Petitions to both Houses of Parliament condemnatory of the course Lord Monteagle and Lord Derby propose to adopt, were agreed to, and it was determined to present a memorial to the Prime Minister. This document, recognising the possibility of the amendment's success, calls upon the Government, in the event of Lord Monteagle obtaining a majority, to "cause it to be intimated that no excise will be levied on paper after the fifteenth day of August next, and to act in every respect as if the House of Lords had passed instead of rejecting the bill."——In pursuance of a requisition signed by more than three hundred of the most respectable citizens of Birmingham, the Mayor called a public meeting on Thursday against the "proposed interference of the House of Lords with the rights of the Commons;" at which resolutions were unanimously carried strongly disapproving of the proposed amendment by Lord Monteagle on the second reading of the Paper Duty Repeal Bill.—Meetings for a like purpose, and with similar results, have been held in other towns.

FATAL COLLIERY EXPLOSION.—An explosion, attended with loss of life, took place last Saturday morning in one of the pits of Messrs. Aston and Grazebook, at Gospel Oak, near Wednesbury, Staffordshire. For some time previously it had been known that one of the workings contained "firedamp," and precautions were adopted to avert the mischief which it threatened. On the morning in question, however, a collier, named Cadman, observed that the water which had run along a hollow dividing the safe from the unsafe portion of the pit was rapidly draining off, and knowing that the dreadful enemy would rush in he immediately extinguished the light which he carried, as did also or two other men in his vicinity. Cadman also ran along the workings, a distance of twenty or thirty yards, and shouted to a man named Ward to put out his candle; but the latter, from some cause or other, failed to obey the warning, and the accident ensued. Fortunately there were only four men in the pit at the time, or the consequences would have been still more disastrous. Cadman was severely burnt about the head and face, but hopes of his recovery are entertained. His brother was so much injured that he expired on Sunday morning, leaving a widow and six children. Their two companions were also much burnt, and one of them is not expected to survive. A man and a girl, who were standing at the top of the shaft, which is 160 yards in depth, were blown into the air, but escaped falling down the pit. They were seriously bruised, and the latter received a compound fracture of the leg.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

The Rev. W. White La Barte has had presented to him a handsomely bound copy of Bagster's "English Hexapla," and a purse containing 100 sovereigns, from members of the congregation of St. Andrew's, Enfield.

St. Michael's Church, Cornhill, which has been closed for nearly three years for repair and decoration, was reopened on Sunday morning for divine service; and the ancient church of Figheldean, Wilts, which was erected at various times from A.D. 1100 to 1600, was reopened on Wednesday week, after undergoing a complete restoration and repair.

The Ven. Archdeacon Wigram, Bishop-elect of Rochester, was on Tuesday confirmed at Bow Church; and was consecrated on Thursday, the Feast of Ascension, with the new Bishop of Antigua, at the parish church of St. Mary, Lambeth.

The Bishop of Rochester will hold a Confirmation on the 23rd inst., at Chelmsford parish church; and on the following day at the Camp Church, Colchester. The usual Trinity Sunday Ordination is postponed for a month.

It is now definitively announced that Dr. Longley, the Bishop of Durham, has received the vacant archbishopric of York; and it is stated that Dr. Thompson, Provost of Queen's College, Oxford, will be the new Bishop of Durham.

Lady Bailey, widow of the late Sir Joseph Bailey, Bart., has caused two beautiful memorial windows to be placed in St. Paul's Church, Knightsbridge, in memory of her husband and only child, the wife of Mr. A. G. Spearman. Her Ladyship has four more memorials in preparation—two for Glangattock Church, Crickhowell, and two for the church standing in Glanusk Park—to the memory of the same lamented relatives.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The Rev. J. Hadley to be Rector of Bagthorpe, Norfolk; Rev. W. Talman to be Rector of Haddiscoe, with Monk's Toft, Norfolk; Rev. W. P. Vincent to be Chaplain to Viscount St. Vincent; Rev. C. Bull to be Colonial Chaplain for the Falkland Islands; Rev. T. A. Stowell to be Perpetual Curate of St. Stephen, Bowling, Lancashire; Rev. M. W. Barstow to be Curate of Thornton Watlass, Yorkshire; Rev. F. G. Littlecot to be Curate of St. Peter's, Manchester.—Guardian.

Upwards of £40,000 worth of property was sold one day last week in the Landed Estates Court of Ireland, before Judge Dobbs. It is reported that a great number of petitions for sales are under consideration, and that there is every prospect of renewed activity in the land market before the close of the current year.

It is reported (says the Observer) that the Government intends to adopt Captain Fowke's plan for altering the National Gallery in Trafalgar-square, one of the main features of which is supposed to be to make the present building large enough for the national pictures without turning out the Royal Academy.

NEW INVENTION FOR BRACELETS, &c.—We have just seen in Paris a newly-invented description of bracelet, of which the centre ornament, composed of diamonds and brilliants, is kept continually revolving by means of a mechanical contrivance that only requires winding up once in three hours. The effect produced by this rotatory arrangement, which is also applicable to brooches, tiaras, &c., is very striking, and adds considerably to the brilliancy of the jewels thus kept constantly in regular though scarcely perceptible motion.

FRENCH BAYONET PRACTICE.

To the French belongs undoubtedly, if not the invention, at least the merit, of having introduced the bayonet into their armies before that weapon had been adopted by any other military Power. According as the art of war advanced, the inutility of the pike became more and more evident, and it was necessary to seek a more convenient substitute. The first time we hear of the bayonet being used was by the infantry of the French army serving in Flanders, in 1642. The bayonets used at that time were about a foot long, with handles of wood about the same length as the blade, and they were fitted into the muzzle after the manner of a plug. The pike, however, continued to remain in use even after the introduction of its rival until 1703, when, Vauban deciding against it, it was laid aside. Soon after this it was discovered that the circumstance of having to withdraw the bayonet from the muzzle of the musket was a drawback to its utility, and a socket to fit on round the top of the barrel was invented, thus enabling the soldiers to fire without removing the bayonet; and a sad surprise it would have been to the enemy on whom the first experiment was tried had the troops using them been armed with anything that would hit the object aimed at, but, judging from the war statistics of the period, it was hardly worth while to be at the trouble of loading at all. Indeed, Marshal Saxe appears to have been so much of that opinion, that he more than once had serious doubts of recommending the disuse of the musket and pistol altogether. He states that at the battle of Belgrade two Austrian battalions fired volleys simultaneously on a large body of Turks at a distance of thirty feet, and on closing with them found that they had killed only four by the double discharge.

A strongly conservative tendency seemed to exist in the minds of military men as regarded the bayonet, because for more than a century after the invention of the socket no improvement was ever attempted in the way of a mechanical contrivance, a spring, or even a screw to secure it in its place, and during all the period of the great European wars following the first French Revolution the fixing of the bayonet was of so primitive a construction that very little force was necessary to pull it off; and although military writers had from time to time suggested the necessity of a theory of attack and defence, as applied to the exercises of the bayonet, it was not for ten years after the general peace that it was reduced to a system. A Saxon Captain von Selmnitz has the merit of developing the various suggestions in a systematic treatise, published at Dresden in 1825, with plates.

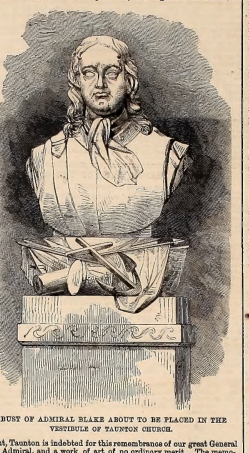
A comparison of the several systems at present in use in the European armies, although differing considerably in many points, are easily traceable to the system perfected by Captain Selminitz, and the departures from his movements sufficient, to a considerable extent, the peculiar physical attributes of the various countries.

Our present Engraving is taken from the authorised manual for the French Army—"Escrime à la Baïonnette," by Captain Chatin.

In the Engraving already published in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of the English bayonet exercise it will be remarked that a much greater simplicity is observed, both as regards the poses of the figures and their number. According to the opinion of English officers the art of attack and defence with the bayonet is not exactly a fencing match, and it is perfectly useless to increase the memory of the soldier with a complexity of attitudes which he would never by possibility think of using in actual warfare.



The technicals used in the bayonet exercise are the same as those used in fencing—viz., Prime, Carte, and Tierce. Prime is when the hands are raised above the head and the point of the bayonet is directed about eight inches to the left. Carte is when the hands are in a line with the right breast and the point of the bayonet is directed towards the left. Tierce is when the hands are in a line with the right breast and the point of the bayonet is directed towards the right.

Figures 1 and 2 represent what, according to the English practice, is given in one pose—as Guard; Fig. 3, Tierce Parry; Fig. 4, Carte Parry; Fig. 5, Prime Parry; Fig. 6, Second Parry; Fig. 7, Parry with Butt. This is a movement of great utility. The adversary thrusts at the body, when, by a dexterous jerk of the butt, his bayonet is thrown to the right; and, by the man acting on the defensive, throwing his rifle forward at the same time, as we have shown in the centre subject representing two figures, he not only parries the thrust, but comes down with the sharp edge of his sword bayonet on his opponent's head. Figures 8 and 9, Parry for body and head; the latter is understood in the English exercise as Prime Parry. Fig. 10, Lunge Arm, is the same as Straight Point in the English practice. Fig. 11, Glissé Arme. The hand is drawn back to give a greater impetus to the thrust. Fig 12, Lasse Pond, first motion. Fig. 13, Second Motion. Lance point is the same in the French exercise as it is in the English. Fig. 14, Point, used as a thrust at the breast of a dismounted horseman, or at the chest of a horse. Fig. 15, Point. Fig. 17, Parry and Lunge; or, according to the English practice, parry and point. Fig. 18, Guard—from a sabre-cut. Fig. 19, Coup de Mitte. This movement is used only as an exercise. Fig. 20, Shorten Arm—a very weak and inefficient substitute for the English shorten. Fig. 21, Butt Blow. In this movement—a highly fantastic one, by-the-by—the rifle is thrown smartly forward in order to strike the adversary in the stomach; it is then drawn back with the left hand, which remains eight inches from the chest: the rifle is then twirled rapidly round so as to strike his opponent in the stomach with the butt; then, by giving the weapon a sweep or motion, it is brought rapidly round so as to knock his opponent over the head with the barrel and mountings. The invention of this movement is certainly rather complimentary to the powers of endurance possessed by the enemies of France. Figures 22 and 23 are merely presenting arms. The movement of the centre figures 16 is described in the movement of figure 7.

The observations with reference to the attack and defence of infantry against cavalry in our description of the English bayonet exercise apply equally in the present instance; and we would most strongly impress on the minds of our volunteers that, if they contemplate the possibility of ever coming face to face with an enemy, they cannot overestimate the necessity of unremitting practice with the bayonet. Riflemen do not, nor is it intended that they should, always fight in ambush. They are in continual danger of being cut off by cavalry; and, unless they have previously well practised themselves, not only in forming rallying squares, but in contending individually with horsemen, they will find themselves rather than attack when a French cuirassier outs six, or a lancer comes down with his figure of eight.

MEMORIAL TO ADMIRAL BLAKE.

A MONUMENT to commemorate the exploits of that great and brave member of the Commonwealth, Admiral Blake, is on the eve of being erected in the vestibule of Taunton Church. To Arthur Kinglake, Esq., of Weston-super-Mare, the originator of the movement, Taunton is indebted for this remembrance of our great General and Admiral, and a work of art of no ordinary merit. The memorial consists of a bust of Blake, placed upon a pedestal five feet in height, composed of Sicilian marble. The design has been intrusted to E. H. Baily, R.A.; the inscription to the able pen of Mr. Hepworth Dixon, and the execution of the memorial to Mr. R. G. Papworth, the sculptor who carried off one of the highest premiums in the great Wellington monument competition. A recent number of the Athenæum contains the following eulogy on this splendid work:—"The design, by Mr. Baily, is one of the finest ever wrought by his hand. The character of the great fighting Admiral is caught to the life. This presentation is, in fact, the ideal warrior of the Commonwealth, more like to Blake, morally and physically, than any of the poor prints which call themselves likenesses of Blake; for it is marble informed with the spirit of his glorious deeds. In the massive head, in the wide, flashing eye, in the distended nostril, and in the curled adamantine lip, we feel a victorious sense of power and genius. So he must have looked when Tromp, against the usages of war, opened his guns upon him in the Downs; so he may have looked when the Day of Tunis bade him count the cannon on his walls; so, too, he may have looked when told that the Governor of Santa Cruz said he might come if he dared,—superbly calm, and confident, and strong. Mr. Papworth deserves high praise for his execution of Mr. Baily's design. The marble is very beautiful; and, take it all in all, the monument is one of which the town of Taunton, so gloriously associated with the fame of Blake, may well be proud."

BUST OF ADMIRAL BLAKE ABOUT TO BE PLACED IN THE VESTIBULE OF TAUNTON CHURCH.

The list is still open for subscriptions, which will be received by R. A. Kinglake, Esq., Taunton and Weston-super-Mare; by the banks in Somersetshire; Messrs. Roberts, Curtis, and Co., and Messrs. Drummond, Charing Cross, and Co., London.

EXTRAORDINARY ACCIDENT AT REIGATE.

On the morning of Wednesday week the inhabitants of Reigate were alarmed by a loud report, which at first was believed to be the shock of an earthquake, but it was soon ascertained that it arose from a large sand cave belonging to the premises of the Red Cross Inn having fallen in. Over this cave there were erected several cottages, and five of them, or at least portions of them, fell in with the cave, and ten others appeared to be hanging as it were by a mere thread. The sweeps of the caverns (twenty-three in number) who resided in the cottages was marvellous. The bedsteads in four of the cottages were partly hanging over the chasm, and in one of them a poor woman was lying very ill, her medical attendant having just left her. She was taken out of the front window. The inhabitants of the adjoining cottages very soon cleared out. The inhabitants of Reigate have very kindly got up a subscription in aid of the poor people who have had their furniture destroyed by this singular accident.

THE LIME LIGHT ON WESTMINSTER-BRIDGE.

For the past few weeks the completed portion of the new Westminster-bridge has been lighted by the new lime light, and has presented a brilliant appearance. There are ten lights on the bridge—about one-third of the number of the old gas-lights. The light is of a pure white colour and of dazzling brilliancy, making all the old gas-burners in the proximity appear as dull as though they were burning in the bright sunlight. It was to this description of light that Professor Faraday referred when he stated it was so intense that it could be distinctly seen for a distance of ninety-five miles, and the correctness of this statement was verified during the ordnance survey of Scotland, when one of these lights, placed as a station mark on the top of Ben Lomond, was distinctly seen at the Knock Layd, between 90 and 100 miles distant. A single jet of the lime light of medium size is equivalent to 40 argand, or 60 fish-tail gas-burners, or to 400 wax candles; and its intensity and brilliancy may be increased by augmenting the quantity of gases supplied. As compared with the illuminating power of common gas, a single jet, consuming four cubic feet of the mixed gases of hydrogen and oxygen, is said to be equal in illuminating power to that obtained from 400 ft. of ordinary gas. The mode in which the light is produced is by the combustion of lime under the great heat caused by the flame of the mixed gases. A stream of common gas, which is used instead of pure hydrogen, is conducted through one pipe, and a supply of oxygen is sent through a second one, each being attached to separate gasholders. These pipes terminate near the lamp in one single tube, where the gases are allowed to mix in their way through a curved jet to what may be called the wick of the lamp, which is simply a lump of lime held in close proximity to the mouth of the curved tube by a piece of metal. In lighting the lamp the first step is to direct the stream of hydrogen upon the lime; it is lighted, and gives forth a small flame of a pale yellow colour. In a few seconds after this pale colour gives place to a deep red, caused by the combustion of the metal calcium in the lime under the great heat of the hydrogen flame. When the lime is in this state the oxygen is turned on, and instantly the bright white light is produced, which will continue as long as the "wick" remains unconsumed. The supply of lime is kept up by the action of simple clockwork machinery, which raises the material as it burns down at a rate of speed varying according to the progress of the combustion. There is nothing of an expensive character about the light, and with ordinary care it may be used with perfect safety. At present the oxygen gas is conveyed in bags to the pipes, as the gasholders provided are not sufficiently large to contain the quantity required for the night's consumption.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE York meeting threw no light on the Derby beyond showing that Cape Flyaway was a fair trial-horse for The Wizard. This son of old Canezou was also too much for the Dee Stakes winner, whom he got cleverly rid of in the Bath Biennial, along with Loiterer, Blue Ruin, and Lupellus. Wednesday was marked by the defeat of a 9 to 4 favourite, Telegram, for the Somersetshire Stakes; in fact, he had not a ghost of a chance, and walked in last. Only two of William Day's yearlings were sold, and the bid of 2600 gs. for Promised Land was within 400 gs. of the reserve. The twenty-five Rawcliffe yearlings averaged 88 gs. each, and Lord Stamford purchased the two best—a colt by Slane, and a brother to the Drone—for 480 gs and 360 gs. The Life holds out a hope that the Grimston sale will not be.

Beyond the "knocking out" of Lord Palmerston's Mainstone owing, it is said, to his not having pleased his stable in the trial, there was little of moment done at Bath. Umpire was, however, established at 7 to 2; while there were takers of 10 to 3 about The Wizard; but nothing seems to affect Thormanby. St. Albans was scratched on Thursday. Out of the 224 nominations we shall be surprised if more than twenty-five see the post. John Scott will probably select three or four from The Wizard, Tom Bowline, Sweet Sauce, Cape Flyaway, and The Rap; and for the rest we have to look to Confectioner, Umpire, Horror, Wallace, Sir William, Traducer, Paleface, Lanchester, Richmond, Sutton, Cramond, High Treason, Brother to Rainbow, Mainstone, Man-at-Arms, Thormanby, Buccaneer, Restes, Sparrow Hawk, Horace, Nutbourne, and Upperhand. It is said that Aldcroft will be on The Wizard, Alfred Day on Mainstone, Bullock on Sir William, Templeman on Lanchester, Fordham on Umpire, French on Paleface, Withington on Upperhand, Charlton on Nutbourne, Osborne on Sutton, Boyce on Richmond, Wells on Restes, Robertson on Cramond, Custance on Thormanby, and Goater on Buccaneer. Holmes and Nat are both too unwell to ride; and it has been said that Marlow is engaged for Umpire; in which case Fordham will, no doubt, officiate for Captain Christie. We have heard no mount specially assigned as yet to D. Hughes, L. Snowden, and E. Sharp; and, if Richmond does not go, Boyce will probably ride one of Scott's. On the whole it is, perhaps, the most eventful Derby that has ever been known, and, in fact, a perfect congress of great performers. John Scott believes nearly as firmly in The Wizard as he did in his sire, but many fancy that he will not be found a stayer. Buccaneer, we cannot tell why, is under the same suspicion; and we shall, no doubt, have a very strong pace made to find out their presumedly weak points if possible, which will serve Umpire and High Treason, whom we look upon as rather slow, but game, staying horses, and very nearly alike in form. Thormanby, can both race and stay; and, looking at his performance last year, under very high weights, and the steady place he has kept in the betting, there are no hopes of victory fairer or more reasonable on paper than Mr Merry's. Restes is a smart little horse; and Cramond looks very Derby-like, but is suspected of having a temper of his own. Among the 158 Oaks mares, Sagitta, Emily, Seclusion, Madame Eglantine, Vesta, Avalanche, Aurora, and Rupee, &c., are likely starters; and the Epsom Cup, on the Thursday, includes Promised Land, Wild Rose, Gaspard, Lifeboat, and Newcastle.

A testimonial has been presented to Merry, the huntsman of The Grove; and one has been set on foot for Charles Payne, of the Pytcheley. Edwards leaves the Cheshire, and goes to the South Berks again. Mr. Morrell, after allowing the V. W. H. to use his pack for a couple of seasons, has with rare munificence presented them to the country, along with four or five couple of beautiful puppies, which have been out at walk with his tenants near Abingdon.

The official list of the two elevens who are to play on the 28th at Lords has been published, and the only alterations are that Tarrant (a colt) plays instead of E. Stephenson for All England, and Stubberfield and Sewell junior instead of Wisden (disabled) and Bell, for the United. Hence the following are the names of the selected players:—All England: G. Parr, Jackson, Hayward, H. H. Stephenson, Cæsar, Wilsher, Diver, Daft, A. Clarke, R. C. Tinley, and Tarrant. United: Lockyer, Caffyn, Carpenter, Lillywhite, Mortlock, Grundy, Hearne, Atkinson, Griffith, T. Sewell, jun., and Stubberfield. The Eleven of Kent play the next sixteen at Town Malling on Monday and Tuesday; and on the same days the MCC. and Ground play the University at Cambridge; the Surrey Club meet Southgate at the Oval; and the clubs of Hadlow Down and East Grimstead are pitched against the young players of the county at Brighton. The match at Sheffield has resulted in a draw; the Hallam Eighteen having nine wickets to fall and forty-two to get. Lillywhite's batting and Carpenter's slow bowling were very good. Waterfall's score was the largest for Hallam, and his slow bowling destructive; but some of the smartest hitting came from Lieutenant White.

Mr. Rarey has been meeting some pretty lively subjects in Ireland, and has also performed during the past week at Oxford, Plymouth, Exeter, and Bath, and on all occasions to very large audiences. On Tuesday he was summoned to the meeting of the Society for the Suppression of Cruelty to Animals at St. James's Hall, and presented with a twenty-guinea gold medal in testimony of his exertions and his gratuitous lecture to the cabmen last January. The Bishop of Lichfield, who was in the chair, presented it in a very appropriate address, and Mr. Rarey briefly replied. He observed that he was much more at home among the straps and the straw, and required a horse as a prompter; and then, in his quiet, simple way, told of his first efforts in horse-taming, and how, when in his Ohio home, he saw that calves and colts consorted together without any fear, he felt sure that similar kind relations might be established between man and beast. Dr. Bowring followed, and drew a contrast between Mr. Rarey and his compatriot, Heenan, the news of whose valour has caused the Broadway to be hung with flags.

AQUATICS.—Royal London Yacht Club: The first regatta of the season amongst the yachts of this very popular club took place on Tuesday. There were prizes of £20, £10, and £5, the first in plate; and for an extra match the prizes were £15 and £5; the course in both being from Erith to the Coal House Point and back to East Greenwich. The race finished in the following manner:—

	H.	M.	S.		H.	M.	S.
Haidee (Mr Bartlett)	6	5	—	Clara (Mr. Burney)	7	2	3
Violet (Lord de Ros)	6	28	10	Spray (Mr. Haines)	7	15	—
Surprise (Mr. Carr)	6	25	—	Mayfly (Mr. Roe)	7	21	—
Blue Bell (Mr. Ridgway)	7	—	—

The Commodore (Mr. Arcedeckne) then presented the first, second, and third prizes of the third class to Mr. Bartlett, Lord de Ros, and Mr. Carr; and the first prize of the extra match to Mr. Ridgway, the second being held in abeyance, owing to the Spray fouling, as it was alleged, the buoy.

CRICKET.—Marylebone Club v. The West Middlesex and London University Rifles: The attractions of this match at Lord's Ground on Monday were much marred by the very unfavourable state of the weather, as it rained nearly all day. It was only a one-day match, and when the stumps were drawn the score stood as under:—The Rifles, first innings, 54; second innings, 19. Marylebone Club, 50.

Cambridge University v. Town: This match, played last week on Fenner's ground, was brought to a conclusion on Saturday, the Town eleven eventually winning by one wicket only. The following is the score:—The University: First innings, 100; second innings, 155. The Town: First innings, 161; second innings, 96.

United Eleven v. Eighteen of Hallam: This match, played at Hyde Park, Sheffield, was brought to a close on Wednesday, resulting in a draw; the Eighteen having nine wickets to fall when the time arrived for drawing the stumps. The score was as follows:—United Eleven, first innings, 121; second innings, 107. Hallam Eighteen, first innings, 83; second innings, 103.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

THE reduction in the minimum rate of discount by the Directors of the Bank of England last week has not been followed by a corresponding decline out of doors. Since we last wrote there has been rather an active demand for money for commercial purposes, and the quotations, generally, have been well supported. In Lombard-street, and at the large discount-houses, the best short paper has been done at 4½ to 4⅝; three months', at 4¼ to 4½; four months', 4¾ to 4⅞; and six months', 5 to 5½ per cent. At those quotations there is an ample supply of capital; but holders make advances upon other than the best bills with considerable caution.

All Home Securities have continued flat during the greater portion of the week, and prices have had a drooping tendency, arising from the continued complications in the affairs of Italy, the stated designs of Russia upon Turkey, and the heaviness on the Paris Bourse.

Notwithstanding that most of the foreign exchanges are favourable to this country, several parcels of gold recently imported have changed hands for the Continent; hence the quantity sold to the Bank has been somewhat limited—viz., £12,000. The arrivals have exceeded £350,000, chiefly from Australia and New York. About £5300 in silver has been sent to the West Indies, and about £300,000 will be forwarded to the East by the next packet.

Nothing fresh has occurred in reference to the long-talked-of Russian Loan, but we are informed that the Bonds of the last Three per Cents are now accepted by the Russian Government as securities for contracts and supplies, and that the Imperial Bank is authorised to make advances upon them, at the rate of about 51 per cent.

The silver market is steady. Bar qualities have sold at 5s. 1⅜d. per oz. In Mexican dollars very little is passing, and the quantity on offer is limited.

The Great Northern Palace Company have for the present withdrawn their prospectus from the market; but it is now proposed to purchase the site at Muswell-hill, comprising 457 acres, for £135,000. About 150 acres will be reserved for the projected palace, and the remainder will be let for building purposes.

A new insurance company, entitled the "Thames and Mersey," has issued its prospectus. The nominal capital is £2,000,000, in shares of £20 each, on which £2 will be called immediately. Large transactions have taken place in the shares, at 1¾ to 2 premium. Those in the other new undertakings have been rather less active. Ocean Marine Insurance have realised 2⅜ to 2½ prem.; Universal Marine, ⅜ to ½ prem.; and South African Bank, par to ¼ prem.

The committee of the Stock Exchange have continued their investigations in the affairs of Pullinger. It now appears that fully £100,000 was lost by him in time bargains; but as yet, no traces have been discovered of any participation in Pullinger's frauds on the part of any of the members of the house.

Indian Securities, in spite of the income-tax of 4 per cent now levied at Calcutta, have sold steadily, and, in nearly all transactions, extreme rates have been realised.

On Monday Home Stocks were very inactive, and the quotations ruled lower:—The Reduced Three per Cents sold at 93⅛ ¼ 93; Consols, for Money, 94⅞ ¾ ⅞; Ditto, for Account, 95⅛ 94⅞ 95; New Three per Cents, 93⅛ ¼; Exchequer Bonds, 4s. to 7s. prem.; Bank Stock was firm, at 226½ to 227½; India Five per Cents realised 106⅜ ⅝; Ditto Five per Cent, Rupee Paper, 98½; Ditto Five-and-a-half per Cents, 104 103½; Ditto Debentures, 1858, 97; Ditto, 1859, 96⅞. Very little change took place in the quotations on the following day:—Bank Stock left off at 227½; Reduced Three per Cents, 93; Consols for Transfer, 94⅞ ¾; Ditto for Time, 94⅞ 95; New Three per Cents, 93¼ ⅜; New Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 78½; India Five per Cents, 106⅜; Ditto Five per Cent Paper, 98; Ditto Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 104; Ditto Debentures, 96¾; Ditto Bonds, 12s. dis.; Exchequer Bills, 3s. to 7s. prem. The dealings on Wednesday were comparatively limited, and the market left off heavily. Consols, for Money, at 94¾ ⅞; the Reduced and New Three per Cents, 93⅛ ¼; Long Annuities, 17 7-16; Exchequer Bills, 3s. to 6s. prem.; Bank Stock, 226 to 227½. Indian securities were very quiet. The Loan was purchased at 106⅜; the Five per Cent Rupee Paper, 98; the Debentures sold at 96⅝ ¾; and the Bonds at 13s. to 8s. discount. On Thursday, business was much restricted, and prices were again quoted lower:—Consols for Money, were done at 94½ ⅝ ½; for Account, 94 ⅝ ¾. The New Three per Cents and the Reduced declined to 92¾ 93; New Two-and-a-Half per Cents 78½; Exchequer Bills were firmer, at 4s. to 7s. prem. India Stock was 219; Ditto, New, 106⅝ ⅝; the Debentures were 96⅞.

At a meeting of the shareholders of the Provincial Bank of Ireland held on Thursday a dividend at the rate of 20 per cent per annum was declared.

The transactions in nearly all Foreign Stocks have been much restricted. Prices, almost generally, have shown a tendency to give way, but the decline in them has been by no means important. Annexed are the leading quotations:— Brazilian Five per Cents, 100¼; Brazilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 91; Buenos Ayres Six per Cents, 86; Chilian Three per Cents, 71; Chilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 85¾; Belgian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 95¼ ex div.; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 66; Mexican Three per Cents, 21½; Peruvian Three per Cents, 69¼; Russian Three per Cents, 64⅝ ex div.; Sardinian Five per Cents, 85¼; Spanish Three per Cents, 47¾; Ditto, New Deferred, 37; Ditto, Committee's Certificates of Coupon, not funded, 4½; Turkish Six per Cents, 75⅝; Ditto, New, 60. Turkish Four per Cents, 101¼; Venezuela Three per Cents, 26⅜; Ditto, One-and-a-Half per Cents, 18¼.

The market for Joint-stock Bank Shares has been rather flat; nevertheless prices, generally, have ruled firm:—Australasia have marked 63½; Bank of Egypt, 22½; Chartered of India, Australia, and China, 19⅞; City, 74; London and County, 35½; London Joint-stock, 33½; London and Westminster, 61½; National Provincial of England, New, 28; New South Wales, 41; Oriental, 42; Ottoman, 17⅝; Union of Australia, 44½; and Union of London, 25½.

A full average business has been transacted in Colonial Government Securities, as follows:—Canada Six per Cents, January and July, 114½; Ditto, 1879, 112¾; Ditto, 1880, 113¼; Ditto, 1882, 114; Ditto, Five per Cents, 101⅝; New Brunswick Six per Cents, 108½; New South Wales Five per Cents, 1871 to 1876, 100⅛; Ditto, 1888 and upwards, 99¾; and Victoria Six per Cents, 106⅝.

In Miscellaneous Securities the dealings continue restricted. English and Australian Copper have realised 2½; London Discount, 4; Madras Irrigation and Canal, 3½; Nerbudda Coal and Iron, 3; Netherlands Land, 8 per cent Preference, ½; Australian, Agricultural, 31; Peel River Land and Mineral, 48; Peninsular and Oriental Steam, 81; Ditto, New, 35; Royal Mail Steam, 49; Scottish Australian Investment, 125; Berlin Waterworks, 4¾; Chelsea ditto, 16; East London, 126; West Middlesex, 107; Waterloo Bridge, 2⅜; Ditto, Old Annuities of £8, 28; Ditto, New, of £7, 25.

The Railway Share Market has been wholly devoid of animation. Prices have ruled somewhat easier, but the decline in them has been by no means heavy. The traffic returns, almost generally, continue to show an increase, when compared with last year. The account has passed off tolerably well, with light rates of "continuation." Annexed are Thursday's official closing quotations:—

ORDINARY SHARES AND STOCKS.—Caledonian, 89⅞; Eastern Counties, 53½; Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee, 31; Great Northern, A Stock, 115; Great Western, 67¾; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 102⅝; London and Blackwall, 69½; Ditto, Eighths, 9¾; London and South-Western, 92½; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, 41½; Midland, 115¾; North British, 61½; North-Eastern—Berwick, 95½; Ditto, Leeds, 50¾; Ditto, York, 78¾; North Staffordshire, 13½; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 45; Scottish North-Eastern—Aberdeen Stock, 34½; South-Eastern, 85½; South Wales, 67.

LINE LEASED AT A FIXED RENTAL.—Wilts and Somerset, 93.

PREFERENCE SHARES.—Eastern Counties, New Six per Cent Stock, 125; Great Western, Irredeemable Four per Cent, 91½; Ditto Birmingham Shares, 74½; Midland—Bristol and Birmingham, 140; Newport, Abergavenny, and Hereford, Perpetual Six per Cent, first issues, 12; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 124; Waterford and Kilkenny, 50.

BRITISH POSSESSIONS.—Bombay, Baroda, and Central India, 96½; Ditto, B, 12⅝; Calcutta and South-Eastern, par.; Eastern Bengal, 4; East Indian, 101½; Grand Trunk of Canada, 32½; Ditto, Six per Cent Preference, 92½; Ditto Debenture, 66½; Great Indian Peninsula, 99; Great Western of Canada, 12⅜; Ditto Five-and-a-Half per Cent Bonds, payable 1877, 93; Punjaub, 8⅞; Indus Steam Flottilla, 94½.

FOREIGN.—Bahia and San Francisco, 6½; Dutch-Rhenish, 9½; Great Luxembourg, 6¾; San Paulo, 1⅜; South Austrian and Lombardo-Venetian, 11¾.

THE MARKETS.

CORN-EXCHANGE (May 14).—To-day's market was but moderately supplied with English wheat, the general quality of which, however, was tolerably good. Selected and useful samples moved off slowly, but at fully last Monday's currency. Low and damp qualities were dull, at barely late rates. There was an improved inquiry for foreign wheat, and, in some instances, the quotations advanced 1s. per quarter. In the value of floating cargoes no change took place. There was less activity in the barley trade, and malting parcels were rather lower to purchase. Malt was in fair average supply and steady request, at full quotations. Oats advanced 6d. per quarter, and the value of both beans and peas was freely supported. Flour sold steadily, on former terms.

May 16.—For nearly all kinds of produce, the show of which was rather limited, the demand to day ruled steady, at full quotations.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 42s. to 52s.; ditto, white, 44s. to 57s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 42s. to 52s.; rye, 30s. to 32s.; grinding barley, 28s. to 30s.; distilling ditto, 31s. to 32s.; malting ditto, 33s. to 46s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 49s. to 67s.; brown ditto, 48s. to 49s.; Kingston and Ware, 62s. to 68s.; Chevalier, 69s. to 72s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s. to 26s.; potato ditto, 27s. to 30s.; Youghal and Cork, black, 21s. to 24s.; ditto white, 22s. to 28s.; tick beans, 35s. to 37s.; grey peas, 34s. to 35s.; maple, 37s. to 38s.; white, 36s. to 40s.; boilers, 38s. to 41s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 43s. to 46s.; town households, 41s. to —s.; country marks, 34s. to 38s. per 280lb.; American flour, 25s. to 29s. per barrel; French 32s. to 40s. per sack.

Seeds.—The demand for both red and white clover seed has ruled heavy, at almost nominal quotations. Most other seeds rule about stationary. Cakes support last week's currency.

Linseed, English crushing, 49s. to 53s.; Calcutta, 49s. to 51s.; hempseed, 40s. to 42s. per quarter; coriander, 15s. to 16s. per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 9s. to 14s.; ditto, white, 11s. to 14s.; tares, 7s. to 7s. 6d. per bushel; English rapeseed, 60s. to 66s. per quarter; linseed cakes, English, £9 15s. to £10 10s.; ditto, foreign, £9 10s. to £11 10s.; rape cakes, £5 10s. to £6 0s. per ton; canary, 44s. to 50s. per quarter; red clover, 40s. to 54s.; white ditto, 80s. to 90s. per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7½d. to 8d.; of household ditto, 5½d. to 7d. per 4-lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 52s. 6d.; barley, 37s. 7d.; oats, 25s. 10d.; rye, 34s. 1d.; beans, 43s. 8d.; peas, 40s. 3d.

The Six Weeks' Averages.—Wheat, 50s. 5d.; barley, 37s. 4d.; oats, 24s. 7d.; rye, 33s. 6d.; beans, 41s. 7d.; peas, 39s.

English Grain Sold last Week.—Wheat, 105,363; barley, 9293; oats, 9157; rye, 19; beans, 4329; and peas, 721 quarters.

Tea.—There is a slight improvement in the demand for most kinds, and previous rates are well supported. The show of samples is only moderate.

Sugar.—Good and fine raw qualities have sold to a fair extent, at full prices; but low and damp parcels have met a dull inquiry, at barely previous rates. Refined goods are selling at last week's quotations.

Coffee.—Prices, generally, are fairly supported; but the business doing is somewhat restricted.

Rice.—All kinds continue to move off slowly; nevertheless, prices rule steady.

Provisions.—Nearly all kinds of butter move off slowly, at irregular quotations. Large supplies will shortly be on offer. The bacon market is heavy, on easier terms; but the value of lard and hams is freely supported.

Tallow.—Very little business is passing in this market, and P.Y.C on the spot, is freely offering at 52s. 6d. to 52s.; and for the last three months, 50s. 9d. per cwt.

Oils.—Linseed oil is still selling at 28s. 3d. per cwt. on the spot. Olive is firm, at £62 for Gallipoli. Most other oils rule about stationary. Spirits of turpentine, 34s. 6d. to 35s. 6d. per cwt.

Spirits.—There is a moderate sale for rum, at previous currencies. Proof Leewards, 1s. 8d. to 1s. 9d.; Proof East India and Penang, 1s. 7d. to 1s. 8d. per gallon. We have no change to notice in the value of brandy or grain spirits.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 0s. to £5 0s.; clover ditto, £4 0s. to £6 0s.; and straw, £1 6s. to £1 14s. per load. Trade dull.

Coals.—Best house coals, 17s. 9d. to 18s.; seconds, 15s. 9d. to 17s.; Hartley's, 14s. 9d. to 15s. 9d.; and manufacturers', 13s. to 15s. per ton.

Hops.—Although the bine is growing rapidly most kinds of hops are in fair request, at full prices.

Wool.—The public sales continue to be well attended both by home and foreign buyers, and the biddings rule steady, at, in some instances, a slight advance on the opening rates.

Potatoes.—The supplies are only moderate, and the demand is less active, at from 100s. to 180s. per ton.

Metropolitan Cattle Market (Thursday, May 17).—A very limited supply of beasts was on offer in to day's market. All breeds sold somewhat briskly, at fully Monday's prices—indeed, they were rather higher. Sheep—the show of which was very moderate—changed hands freely, at quite the late improvement in value. Downs readily produced 5s. 6d. per 8lb. There was rather less activity in the lamb trade; nevertheless, the quotations were well supported. The supply of lambs was by no means extensive. Calves sold somewhat freely, but we have no change to notice in their value. Pigs and milch cows were very firm in price. Per 8lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s. 6d. to 3s 8d.; second quality ditto, 3s. 10d. to 4s. 2d.; prime large oxen, 4s. 4d. to 4s. 10d.; prime Scots, &c., 5s. 0d. to 5s. 2d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s. 10d. to 4s. 0d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 8d.; prime coarse-woolled sheep, 4s. 10d. to 5s. 2d.; prime Southdown ditto, 5s. 4d. to 5s. 6d.; large coarse calves, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 2d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 4d. to 5s. 6d.; large hogs, 3s. 6d. to 3s. 10d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 10d.; lambs, 5s. 8d. to 7s. 4d.; suckling calves, 20s. to 22s.; and quarter-old store pigs, 23s. to 30s. each. Total supply: Beasts, 752; cows, 122; sheep and lambs, 5120; calves, 320; pigs, 240. Foreign: Beasts, 150; sheep, 700; calves, 194.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—The supplies of meat are very moderate, and the trade is brisk, as follows:—Beef, from 3s. 4d. to 4s. 6d.; mutton, 4s. 0d. to 5s. 4d.; lamb, 6s. 0d. to 6s. 8d.; veal, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 10d.; pork, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 0d. per 8lb by the carcase.

PIESSE'S ART OF PERFUMERY, Historical and Commercial Development, and the Methods of obtaining the Odours of Plants; with Instructions for the Manufacture of Perfumes for the Handkerchiefs, Scented Powders, Odorous Vinegars, Dentifrices, Pomatums, Cosmetiques, Perfumed Soap, &c.
By G. W. SEPTIMUS PIESSE,
Analytical Chemist,
Author of Twenty Letters on "Farm Science," "Chymical Magic."
London: Longman, Brown, Green, and Longmans.
OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.
"Mr. Piesse's book is curious, amusing, and instructive. He is a botanist and analytical chemist, and has been no careless reader of history. Perfumery, once a mystery to the million, is now an open volume to all who profit by Mr. Piesse's researches and disclosures; and no doubt it will find a place on every toilet table, for it deserves the patronage of the fair sex."—Illustrated News.
"In the history of perfumes there is not much that has been left untold. What Mr. Piesse professes he effectually accomplishes, and those curious in the matter of manufactured odours will find a competent guide in the author.
"The concoction of these pleasant essences has had dignity attached to it by the character of those who have addressed their faculties thereto. The richest merchants in very early days dealt in perfumes, or the materials for making that which was to incense the altar or perfume the palace."—Athenæum.
"Every druggist should possess this useful book as a standard work of reference in all matters relating to Perfumery and its manufacture. The retail Chemists are really very much indebted to Mr. Piesse for his publication."—New York Tribune.

MR. DARWIN'S NEW WORK.
Now ready, Fifth Thousand, post 8vo, 14s.,

ON THE ORIGIN OF SPECIES, BY MEANS OF NATURAL SELECTION; or, the Preservation of Favoured Races in the Struggle for Life. By CHARLES DARWIN, M.A., F.R.S.

II.

Also, uniform with the above, Tenth Thousand, post 8vo, 9s.,
THE VOYAGE OF A NATURALIST: being a Journal of Researches into the Natural History and Geology of Countries visited during a Voyage Round the World. By CHARLES DARWIN, M.A., F.R.S.
JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

MR. SCOTT'S WORK ON GOTHIC ARCHITECTURE.
Now ready, Second Edition, 8vo, 9s.,

REMARKS ON SECULAR AND DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE, Present and Future. By G. GILBERT SCOTT, A.R.A.

"Gothic architecture no one could well deny to be our national style, but the further question as to its capability of adaptation to modern requirements is one that may well demand consideration. Mr. Scott enters fully into this part of his subject. No class of building escapes his attention; no detail, however insignificant, but it is brought under notice."—Literary Churchman.
JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

UNIFORM WITH HALLAM'S HISTORY OF LITERATURE.
Just ready, One Volume, 8vo,

A HISTORY OF FLEMISH LITERATURE AND ITS CELEBRATED AUTHORS, from the Twelfth Century to the Present Time. By OCTAVE DELEPIERRE.

"Mr. Hallam in his introduction to 'The Literature of Europe' has in a great measure overlooked Dutch authors, quoting only a few names of European celebrity, of comparatively recent times, and he has altogether omitted Flemish writers and their works. The well-merited fame of his book, and its great authority, suggested to me the idea of making up in some degree for this omission, and of giving to the English public a sketch of these neglected authors."—Author's Preface.
JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

THE STUDENT'S MANUAL TO THE ENGLISH CONSTITUTION.
Now ready, post 8vo, 10s. 6d.,

A MANUAL OF THE ENGLISH CONSTITUTION: A Review of its Rise, Growth, and Present State. By DAVID ROWLAND.

"We hail the appearance of this work with great pleasure, not only as supplying a much-felt want in our historical literature, but as the work of an emeritus of our own profession. . . . . Up to the present time there has been no work which could be confidently recommended as an introduction to the study of the English Constitution. . . . . Mr. Rowland has divided his work into two parts. In the first, he traces the rise and growth of the Constitution from its earliest stage. The second part explains the actual working of Parliament, and of the whole machine of Government, and the present relations of the people to the Government."—Law Review and Magazine, Feb., 1860.
JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

COMPLETION OF "RAWLINSON'S HERODOTUS."
Now ready, with Maps and Woodcuts, the fourth and concluding volume of

THE HISTORY OF HERODOTUS; A New English Version, from the Text of Gaisford. Edited with copious Notes and Essays, Historical and Ethnographical, by Rev. GEORGE RAWLINSON, M.A., assisted by Sir Henry Rawlinson, K.C.B., and Sir J. G. Wilkinson, F.R.S.

"Worthy to take rank in its own kind with the works of Thirlwall, and Grote, and Mure, and Gladstone. And let it be said, once for all, that the book is a great book."—Guardian.

"A monument of learning, industry, and research."—Press.
JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

ARY SCHEFFER.
Now ready, with portrait, 8vo, 8s. 6d.,

MEMOIR OF THE LIFE OF THE LATE ARY SCHEFFER. By Mrs. GROTE.

"This memoir bespeaks in its author a perfect acquaintance with Scheffer, in all relations; and the estimate of his artistic power is just and discriminating, as resulting from a mature study of his works. It is one of the most interesting pieces of artist-biography we have ever read."—Art-Journal.
JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

THE FRENCH INVASION OF RUSSIA.
Now ready, with Plans, 8vo, 15s.,

THE SECRET HISTORY OF EVENTS DURING THE FRENCH INVASION OF RUSSIA, AND RETREAT OF THE FRENCH ARMY, IN 1812. By General Sir ROBERT WILSON, K.M.T., British Commissioner at Head-Quarters of the Russian Army.

"Sir Robert Wilson's book abounds in new and striking illustrations of events and incidents. He does justice to both parties in this war of giants. It is not to be read without many conflicting emotions of admiration, horror, and disgust."—Athenæum.
JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle-street.

MR. LESLIE'S PERSONAL REMINISCENCES.

DR. WM. SMITH'S BIBLICAL DICTIONARY.
Now ready, with Plans of Jerusalem and Woodcuts, Vol. I., Medium 8vo, 42s.,

A DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE; Comprising its Antiquities, Biography, Geography, and Natural History. Edited by WM. SMITH, LL.D., Editor of the "Dictionaries of Greek and Roman Antiquities, Biography, Mythology, and Geography."

Among the Contributors to this important work (which will be completed in 2 vols.), are the following:—

Bishop of Calcutta.	Dean of Canterbury.
Canon Stanley.	Lord Arthur Hervey.
Provost of Queen's Coll., Oxford.	Rev. J. S. Howson.
Professor Ellicott.	Rev. Dr Hessey.
Rev. B. F. Westcott.	Rev. George Rawlinson.
Mr. Fergusson	Mr. Grove. &c., &c.

"We may be quite sure that a work among the leading contributors to which we find such men as Alford, Cotton, Ellicott, Howson, Layard, Plumptre, Rawlinson, Stanley, Thomson, and Westcott, will afford a faithful representation of the existing state of Biblical knowledge. From such names as these the reader is unquestionably entitled to form the highest expectations; and we will venture to say that he will not be disappointed."—Literary Gazette.
JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle street.

NEW WORK BY PROFESSOR TYNDALL.
Just ready, with Illustrations, post 8vo,

THE GLACIERS OF THE ALPS. Being a Narrative of various excursions among them, and an account of Three Years' Observations and Experiments on their Motion, Structure, and General Phenomena. RECENT WORKS.

NEW ZEALAND; Past and Present—Savage and Civilised. By ARTHUR S. THOMSON, M.D., Surgeon-Major 58th Regiment. Second Edition. Maps and Illustrations. 2 vols. Post 8vo. 24s.

"Dr. Thomson's narrative is clear, concise, and comprehensive, and conveys a very complete and exact idea of the country, the climate, the natural history, the people, the language, &c. It is rare indeed to get so intelligent and satisfactory an account of any land."—Quarterly Review.

II.

MADAGASCAR; During Three Visits, including a Journey to the Capital, with Notices of the Natural History, and of the present Civilisation of the People. By Rev. W. ELLIS. Fifth Thousand. With Portrait and Illustrations. 8vo. 16s.

"The friends of the London Missionary Society may be fairly congratulated on the wonderful popularity of Dr. Livingstone's work. That another work, by another of our missionaries, should issue from the press, within little more than twelve months afterwards, bidding fair to rival its predecessor in celebrity, is matter for even greater surprise, and still more grateful congratulation."—Evangelical Magazine.

III.

SOUTH AFRICA: Missionary Travels and Researches, including a Sketch of Sixteen Years' Residence in the Interior, and a Journey from the Cape to Loanda, &c. By Rev. DAVID LIVINGSTONE. Thirtieth Thousand. Portrait and Illustrations. 8vo. 21s.

"Geographical discoveries are with Dr. Livingstone the prelude to missionary exertions."—Christian Observer.

"Dr. Livingstone is an invaluable pioneer, both to civilisation and Christianity."—Christian Remembrancer.

IV.

DANIEL WILSON, LATE BISHOP OF CALCUTTA; His Life, Letters, and Journals. By his Son-in-Law, Rev. JOSIAH BATEMAN, M.A. Third Thousand. Portrait and Illustrations. 2 vols. 8vo. 28s.

"Bishop Wilson could not pass from the stage of life without a strong desire being awakened, not merely to see the very last of him, but to trace out the course of his life, and, if possible, to detect the mainsprings by which the whole man was set in action, impelled, and controlled.

"This constitutes the real value of these volumes, and we are bold to say they will disappoint none of their readers."—Christian Observer. JOHN MURRAY Albemarle-street.

TO PURCHASERS of PIANOFORTES.— CHAPPELL and CO. have a large stock of SECONDHAND PIANOFORTES for Sale, by BROADWOOD, COLLARD, ERARD, &c., &c., at very reduced prices. Also, new Instruments of every description.—CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S FOREIGN MODEL PIANOFORTE, price Fifty Guineas. This instrument has (unlike the ordinary Cottage Pianoforte) Three Strings and the fullest Grand Compass of Seven Octaves. It is strengthened by every possible means to endure the greatest amount of wear, and to stand perfectly in any climate. The workmanship is of the best description; the tone is round, full, and rich; and the power equal to that of a Bichord Grand. The case is of the most elegant description, in rosewood; the touch elastic, and the repetition very rapid. Every possible precaution has been taken to ensure its standing well in tune. Chappell and Co. especially invite the attention of the public, the profession, and merchants, to the Foreign Model, feeling assured that no Pianoforte, in all respects comparable, has hitherto been made in England at the same price. Every instrument will be warranted, and (if desired) exchanged within twelve months of the purchase.—50, New Bond-street, London.

BOOSEY and SONS Holles-street.

JULLIEN'S LAST WALTZ, published this day, price 4s. The "Musical World" says, "We are much in error if the publication just issued by Messrs. BOOSEY under the above title fails to excite universal interest. As we have seen the manuscript, we can testify to the genuineness of its authorship; and assuredly this last production in his especial line of one who wrote such a multitude of charming dance-pieces deserves the attention of all upon whom this genial and attractive form of music exercises a sway. Jullien's Last Waltz is quite worthy of the pen that traced the Original Polka, the Prima Donna Waltz, the Moldavian Schottische, and a dozen more things as perfect in their way."
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

"SPRING—THE FIRST NOTES OF THE CUCKOO," FROM A DRAWING BY JOHN JACKSON.

SPRING: THE FIRST NOTES OF THE CUCKOO."

BY J. JACKSON.

MR. JACKSON, in the admirable drawing from which our Engraving is taken, embodies an agreeable and graceful pastoral, appropriate to that Spring season, which now, tardily, has vouchsafed to visit us. The scene is amid the stately and thickly-planted copse of some English ancestral domain, and here two young ladies have wandered, accompanied by their pet dog, to rejoice in the fresh evening breeze and admire the first glorious buddings of the coming year. From above the first notes of the cuckoo arrest their attention, and they listen enraptured at a sound so welcome as it echoes among the tall elms. Even the little dog seems to be momentarily struck by the sound, to which he listens with riveted attention. This little picture, so true to nature, and so true in artistic treatment, is charmingly suggestive of serenades and homely ditties full of young, hopeful aspirations and calm content.

"MISS FLITE INTRODUCES THE WARDS IN JARNDYCE TO THE 'LORD CHANCELLOR.'"

BY JOHN GILBERT.

MR. GILBERT fairly eclipses himself in this spirited and elaborate realisation of one of the most amusing passages in Dickens's "Bleak House;" and we remark it with the more interest as it differs in its whole character from the style for which very generally the artist has manifested strong predilections. In many of his more important productions Mr. Gilbert has evidently taken the grandeur and dignity of Rubens, with his noble colouring and breadth of handling, for his model. Now he takes a subject which Rubens's great pupil Teniers would have revelled in, and treats it with all the sharpness of humour, and all the minute and spirited touch of that great painter of genre. "The Chancellor," as he is here embodied, is an inimitable stroke of humour which we are sure would delight the great novelist; but even he must yield the palm to Miss Flite, whose unpretending proportions and rigid simplicity of outline are a perfect marvel of artistic "make up." The numberless contents—endless in variety—of a well-stocked marine-store shop are dealt with in a manner which shows equal facility for realising every description of material and surface.

To complete our description of this picture we give the passage in "Bleak House" to which it more directly refers:—

"'My landlord, Krook,'" said the little old lady, condescending to him from her lofty station, as she presented him to us. "He is called among the neighbours the Lord Chancellor. His shop is called the Court of Chancery. He is a very eccentric person. He is very odd. Oh, I assure you he is very odd!" She shook her head a great many times, and tapped her forehead with her finger, to express to us that we must have the goodness to excuse him. 'For he is a little—you know—M!' said the old lady, with great stateliness. The old man overheard, and laughed. 'It's true enough,' he said, going before us with the lantern, 'that they call me the Lord Chancellor, and call my shop Chancery. And why do you think they call me the Lord Chancellor, and my shop Chancery?' 'I don't know, I am sure!' said Richard, rather carelessly. 'You see,' said the old man, stopping and turning round, 'they—Hi! Here's lovely hair! I have got three sacks of ladies' hair below, but none so beautiful and fine as this. What colour and what texture!' 'That'll do, my good friend!' said Richard, strongly disapproving of his having drawn one of Ada's tresses through his yellow hand.' 'You can admire as the rest of us do, without taking that liberty.' The old man darted at him a sudden look, which even called my attention from Ada, who, startled and blushing, was so remarkably beautiful that she seemed to fix the wandering attention of the little old lady herself. But as Ada interposed, and laughingly said she could only feel proud of such genuine admiration, Mr. Krook shrunk into his former self as suddenly as he had leaped out of it. 'You see I have so many things here,' he resumed, holding up the lantern, 'of so many kinds, and all, as the neighbours think (but they know nothing), wasting away and going to rack and ruin, that that's why they have given me and my place a christening. And I have so many old parchmentses and papers in my stock. And I have a liking for rust, and must, and cobwebs. And all's fish that comes to my net. And I can't abear to part with anything I once lay hold of (or so my neighbours think, but what do they know?) or to alter anything, or to have any sweeping, nor scouring, nor cleaning, nor repairing going on about me. That's the way I've got the ill name of Chancery. I don't mind. I go to see my noble and learned brother pretty well every day, when he sits in the Inn. He don't notice me, but I notice him. There's no great odds betwixt us. We both grub on in a muddle. Hi, Lady Jane!' A large grey cat leaped from some neighbouring shelf on his shoulder, and startled us all. 'Hi! shew 'em how you scratch. Hi! tear, my lady!' said her master. The cat leaped down, and ripped at a bundle of rags with her tigerish claws, with a sound that it set my teeth on edge to hear."

RICHARD WAGNER.

We confess ourselves admirers of German music, and consequently of German composers. The works of Beethoven, Meyerbeer, and Mendelssohn seem to us to possess the solid beauties of that glorious harmony which has contributed so greatly to the progress of humanity and civilisation. There is often, however, so much seriousness in the motives of the compositions of the best German masters that the traces of their thoughtful labours remain impressed upon their features, as witness the case of Henri Litolff, whose likeness we gave in a former Number, as well as that of Richard Wagner, a Portrait of whom appears in our Impression of to-day. On looking at the latter the evidence of his nationality is easily recognisable, with all the additional marks of genius, firmness, ardour, confidence, and intelligence. Wagner's high forehead, pale complexion, and thin lips are but the material expression of his intellectual nature; but his entire countenance bears the impress of severe study, and of the emotions to which his musical struggles as an innovator have given rise.

Richard Wagner was born at Leipsic in May, 1813. He studied at Dresden, and devoted his attention alternately to literature and music, but the "heavenly maid" triumphed at length, and the subject of our notice made his début as an artist in the capacity of chapel-master at Magdeburg. He was only twenty years of age when his first opera, "Les Fées," appeared. In 1839 he went to Paris, where he terminated the opera of "Rienzi," which was performed at Dresden in 1841. While in the French capital, where he lived in comparative seclusion, he contributed several articles to the Gazette Musicale. He shortly afterwards wrote an overture to Goethe's "Faust, and subsequently composed the libretto and music of "Tannhäuser, which was produced in 1845, and is generally considered his principal work.

After the political events witnessed at Dresden in 1849, Herr Wagner, who had taken an active part in them, was exiled from his native country, and went to Zurich, where he was received with great cordiality, and was immediately invested with the direction of the musical society and the orchestra of the theatre of the Swiss capital. Here he increased considerably the list of his operatic compositions and musical criticisms, which were of a nature to raise up against him a host of opponents; so that the critics have since been divided into two camps—the pro-Wagners and the anti-Wagners; even the celebrated Liszt, whose mildness of character is as remarkable as his harmonious talent, has descended into the arena to defend the principles advocated by Richard Wagner, principles looked upon by some able judges as the mere eccentricities of a powerful imagination, and by others as the evidence of a genius hitherto unknown in musical celebrities.

The Portrait of Herr Wagner will be familiar to such of our readers as were present at the series of concerts given by the maestro in London in 1855, and which created great sensation at the time. On the 24th of January last he presided over the performance of a selection from his works at the Salle Ventadour in Paris, to which the pros and cons flocked in considerable numbers. The opinions of the musical critics still remain divided as to the style and principles of Wagner's compositions; but all agree in admiring the boldness of his views and the persevering energy of his nature in the pursuit of what he believes to be the true basis and correct demonstration of the harmonious attributes of the Muse of "early Greece," and, indeed, of all time. As he is still comparatively young, we hope that he may yet succeed in producing some work of such excellence as to convert to his principles those who have hitherto been but admiring sceptics.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

MARY DOWAGER COUNTESS OF STRATHMORE.

The Right Hon. Mary, Dowager Countess of Strathmore and Kinghorn, and Baroness Bowes, who died on the 5th inst., was the daughter of J. Milner, Esq., of Staindrop, in the county of Durham; and was married, the 2nd of July, 1820, to John, tenth Earl of Strathmore and Kinghorn by descent, and Baron Bowes by creation. The Earl died the day after the marriage, when his English Barony of Bowes became extinct, and his other honours devolved on his brother Thomas, the eleventh Earl, grandfather of Thomas George, the twelfth and present Earl. The Countess of Strathmore was married, secondly, the 6th of March, 1831, to the Right Hon. William Hutt, Paymaster-General, and M.P. for Gateshead.

SIR CHARLES BARRY.

This distinguished architect was the son of Walter Edward Barry, Esq., of Westminster, and was born there in 1795. After an education at various private schools, and close application to the study of architecture, including the usual architectural tour on the Continent, Barry commenced his professional career in London, and soon established his reputation. Public attention was early attracted to the grace and finish of the structures he erected, and especially to those of his favourite Italian style. His Travellers' clubhouse, built in 1832, in Pall-mall, with a beautiful front on Carlton-terrace, excited great admiration. His fame was, however, considerably enhanced by his subsequent work, the magnificent Reform Clubhouse, which, despite of all later competitive constructions, still bears the palm among edifices of this description. The Reform Club was completed in 1839; but in 1836 Barry had been selected as the architect of the new Houses of Parliament, and the first stone of them was laid on the 27th of April, 1840. Barry's whole existence had now become one of incessant occupation and indefatigable labour, which were only to cease with his death. His public and private buildings have been most numerous. Among the former may be mentioned St. Peter's Church, Brighton, a church at Islington, King Edward's Grammar School, and a chapel at Birmingham; the new buildings at Oxford, and the Athenæum at Manchester. Among his principal private mansions are the Earl of Tankerville's villa, at Walton-on-Thames; Bridgewater House, in the Green Park; and the Duke of Sutherland's two seats—viz., Trentham, Staffordshire; and Cliefden House, Maidenhead, splendidly reconstructed on the remains of the former house, the famous "Cliefden's proud alcove," which, all but the wings, was destroyed by fire in 1795, the very year Barry was born. Barry's remodeling of the Duke's town abode, Stafford House; his improvement of the Treasury buildings, Whitehall, and his restoration of the College of Surgeons, in Lincoln's-inn-fields, form also part of his most remarkable and effective works. Barry was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in 1840, and a Royal Academician in 1841. He was, in 1849, made a Fellow of the Royal Society, and he was also a member of the London Institute of Architects, and of the Academies of Fine Arts at Rome, Berlin, St. Petersburg, Stockholm, and Brussels. He was knighted in 1852. Sir Charles Barry married, in 1822, Miss Rowsell, daughter of Samuel Rowsell, Esq. Sir Charles died suddenly of paralysis on the 12th inst., at his suburban residence, the Elms, Clapham-common.

A JOURNEY FROM GOTTENBURG TO STOCKHOLM.

(By our Special Artist and Correspondent.)

I arrived at Gottenburg on Monday, after a fine passage from Hull, and soon heard that there were two Englishmen also bound for Stockholm. I called on the English Consul, and on a minister of the English church, who went with me to pay a visit to the Englishmen, who I was glad to find had decided to leave Gottenburg next morning and try, if possible, to get to Stockholm in time for the coronation—a journey that people in Gottenburg seemed to consider impossible to be done in the time. Next morning, at seven, we were at the railway station, which is a handsome building, and were seated in a comfortable second-class carriage with cushions. I was rather astonished at the number of fur cloaks, fur boots, rugs, &c., that my companions had. Before midnight I found out the use of them. Our railway journey was most pleasantly made, the scenery in parts being very beautiful and truly rural, with much rock and water. There were many curious costumes amongst the men and women on the platforms at the railway stations. At two o'clock we arrived at Torreboda, and then a sample of Swedish travel was met with. We had to hire a kind of vehicle somewhat between a gig and a cart. One of the Englishmen drove me and a boy drove the other. Nothing very particular occurred the first stage, save an impression that springs would have been an improvement. At the next changing-place we three were put into a four-wheeled waggon with two seats, and as we had much luggage we had to put our legs in all kinds of queer positions as we jolted on at a rattling pace up hill and down. Often our way lay through large forests of fir. In many parts the snow still lay in large patches and at the sides of the roads, whilst in places the roads were in a complete state of sludge. Evening came on, and I envied my companions their fur cloaks, boots, and rugs, one of which was placed at my disposal. The drivers went a stage—two Swedish or twelve English miles—and at each station both carts and horses were changed, an operation which generally occupied an hour. Just before dark, trotting briskly down a hill, we met another waggon. Some words were exchanged between the drivers, who stopped the waggons, and then coolly proceeded to shift the passengers and luggage to the other waggon. It was curious on arriving at the stations to find all in darkness; however, after divers raps, somebody turned out, and then went in quest of horses which the peasants are bound to furnish. At the last place at which we changed our waggons it was twenty minutes to five before we started for Orebro, from which town the train left for Arboga at seven. Three hours are allowed by the law to make the journey, and it seemed doubtful if we should catch the train. An offer of a few pence to the driver if he caught the train, and no end of penalties if he lost it, made him drive very fast, and a single passenger in a gig before us also trying for the train made our horses go at the top of their speed; and when we stopped half-way to have the horses fed it seemed as if the chances were in favour of our catching the train. By-the-way, the horses were not regaled with hay or corn, but a coarse kind of cake made of oats and bran. At half-past six we were in sight of Orebro, and rattled over the rough pavement of the town, past groups of peasants at the market, and arrived safe at the station at twenty minutes to seven, happy to think our night's work had not been in vain. The comfortable first-class carriage soon made me oblivious of the scenery. At 8.20 we arrived at Arboga. The train ran down to the stage alongside of which the steamer was waiting. We and our luggage were soon on board. After a rapid passage through a succession of lakes, we arrived at Stockholm about five o'clock, and, having got our luggage and selves safely housed, proceeded to make arrangements for viewing the important ceremony on the morrow. [Portraits of the King and Queen, and Illustrations in connection with their Coronation, from sketches by our Special Artist, will shortly appear in this Journal.]

Coronation of the King and Queen of Sweden and Norway. A letter from Stockholm of the 3rd says:—The coronation of the King took place to-day with great pomp. At ten o'clock the Royal cortége left the Palace under a salute of artillery. The procession was headed by pages and heralds on horseback, followed by the Swedish and Norwegian dignitaries of the Court, the deputation of the Storthing, the members of the Swedish Diet, and the Council of State. Next came the Marshal of the kingdom, followed by high functionaries carrying the Royal mantle and other insignia of the Crown. His Majesty followed immediately after on horseback, and wearing the mantle and coronet to which he was entitled as a Prince of the blood. By his Majesty's side was the Minister of State for Norway, and behind him were his aides-de-camp, and a number of the officers of his household. Next came Prince Oscar, and Prince Augustus, the King's brothers, followed by the officers of their respective households, and by a number of Knights of the Seraphim and other orders, deputations from the army and the fleet, civil functionaries, private citizens, &c. The third part of the cortége was formed by the Court of the Queen. Her Majesty was in a state-carriage, drawn by eight horses; the Duchess Oscar and the Princess Eugenie followed in other carriages. At the entrance of the church the King was received by the Archbishop of Upsal, assisted by all the bishops in full pontifical costume. The Archbishop addressed to the King the words, "Beatus ille qui venit in nomine Domini." After the sacred hymns and prayer the Archbishop delivered a short appropriate address. The King afterwards advanced towards the altar, deposited his mantle and coronet of Prince, and put on the Royal crown and mantle, and then, placing himself on his knees, with his hand on the New Testament, repeated after the Minister of Justice the coronation oath. The Archbishop then proceeded to the unction, and afterwards, assisted by the Minister of Justice, placed the crown on his Majesty's head, and handed to him the different insignia of Royalty, globe, sceptre, &c. The herald then, advancing to the side of the King, cried out in a loud voice, "Charles XV. is crowned King of the countries of Sweden and of the Goths, and of the other provinces under his rule. It is he and no other." A salute of cannon announced this part of the proceeding to the public. The same ceremony was repeated for the Queen. The Princes and Ministers then advanced towards the throne to take the oath of fidelity, and after the final hymn the procession was again formed, and returned to the palace in the same order as it came from it.

The Income Tax: Important to the Commercial World.—Some time since an information was filed by the Attorney-General against a Mr. Sulley for the nominal purpose of recovering a penalty against him for refusing to make a proper return of his income, but for the real purpose of trying the question whether a partner resident in this country, in a foreign firm, but not selling in the United Kingdom, was liable to pay income tax upon the whole income of the firm, or only upon his share as a partner. It appeared that Mr. Sulley was a partner in the American firm of Lottimer, Large, and Co., whose chief establishment was at New York, but having branches in several of the capitals of Europe. Mr. Sulley's business here was simply that of a buyer, and, although he possessed warehouses and a counting-house at Nottingham, they were merely used for the purpose of receiving the purchased goods until they were shipped for America, where they were sold. The branch establishments in the other European countries were occupied in the same manner—in purchasing the manufactured goods produced in such country, and sending them to America for sale. Thus an immense business was carried on, the profits of which were stated to amount to £10,000 a year, only a portion of which was derived from the sale of the goods purchased in this country. It was sought to compel Mr. Sulley, as a resident merchant in the United Kingdom, to make a return of the whole income of the firm, and to pay income tax thereon, on the ground that he came within the meaning of the words of the 16 and 17 Vict. c. 34, sec. 2, schedule D, which enacted that duties should be payable upon incomes derived from the trade carried on in any part of the world by any person resident in the United Kingdom, and that duties should be payable in respect of incomes derived from trade in the United Kingdom whether the person was resident in the United Kingdom or elsewhere. It was contended, on behalf of the Crown, that the above facts showed a trade being carried on in the United Kingdom and elsewhere by a firm, one of whose partners was resident in England, and that, therefore, their income was liable to taxation. The Court of Exchequer decided in favour of the Crown, but the decision was reversed, on Friday, in the Exchequer Chambers. Lord Chief Justice Cockburn maintained—and he was supported in his opinion by Mr. Justice Crompton, Mr. Justice Williams, Mr. Justice Willes, Mr. Justice Byles, and Mr. Justice Blackburn—that the profits of the defendant's firm did not accrue in this country, neither did they form a portion of the income of this country. They accrued in America, and formed a portion of the income of America. The defendant merely occupied the position of an agent, and, as such, he was not, in his opinion, liable.

A Frankfort journal states that M. Auer, the director of the Imperial Printing-office at Vienna, was to have been arrested on a charge of falsifying coupons, and of being an accomplice in the affair of Eynatten, but that he had absconded.

THE FARM.

Plentiful showers of rain, which came down on Sunday with such force that at one time the blossoms of the apple-trees seemed in imminent peril, along with a much milder state of atmosphere, have sent crops of all kinds wonderfully along. The only fear now is that lambs may die from the scouring effects of the fresh grass. Taking it altogether it has been one of the worst and most expensive seasons to farmers that has occurred for a long time. Still, the uses of adversity may be sweet, as not a few have been led to consider the necessity much more seriously of economising, and using different modes of preparing food for cattle, to prevent their being again left in the lurch with only scanty supplies of foreign hay to ward off absolute starvation.

Rather a hot meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society is expected on Tuesday next, as there is a general impression afloat, from sundry recent events, that the spirit of jobbery is showing a very bold front at the Council Board, and that the society is becoming less and less each year a parliament of practical agriculturists. The proposed "house list" is a sore point, and the leading implement-makers have also taken offence, and decline to exhibit at Canterbury. The society has been the means of bringing many of the latter into public notice in their humble days, and now that they are independent of it, they lift up their heel against the power which made them. To tell the truth, their absence will be no loss, as scarcely any one cares for the implement trials. They put the society to a great expense, and merely use the yard as a sale mart, by bringing scores of articles which are very remotely connected with agriculture, and they are scarcely ever satisfied with the decisions, on account of their exceeding jealousy towards each other. On their side they maintain that the judges are incompetent, and merely "strut about a little," with their minds made up from the first; and one of them goes so far as to print that, very recently, amid other judicial eccentricities, a prize was awarded to a machine which was not even tried.

The system of wheat-growing by the Rev. Mr. Smith, of Lois Weedon, has undergone a very full discussion at the Farmers' Club, where it was made the subject of a paper by Mr. Clarke, of Long Sutton. It seems that the wheat is drilled in triple rows, the spaces being ten inches each, and the "intervals" forty inches, so that from the middle of one stripe to the middle of the next is five feet. The next year's crop is sown upon the fallowed "intervals," and the stubble stripes fallowed in turn, so that instead of being a system of wheat after wheat it is in reality an alternate course of "dead fallow and wheat." By interspersing the stripes of fallow between the stripes of corn, the tillage operations of the fallow stimulate and support the growth of the corn. "I could tell," says its chronicler, "of winter beans in single rows five feet apart, branching so as to meet across the intervals, with stalks bearing forty or fifty pods each, and yielding over six quarters per acre; while in the fallow spaces between were raised eight or nine tons of carrots besides. I could tell of twenty-seven tons per acre of sweedes, also grown in single rows five feet apart, with their leaves touching across the intervals, and their bulbs flattening each other's sides, though singled with a 12-inch hoe—of prodigious weights of mangold wurtzel, and enormous drumhead cabbages 40lbs. in weight, cultivated with the same wide spaces. For the intercultural tillage is indeed a marvellous promoter of the growth of vegetation, the trenching being deep, as well as the manuring heavy, farmyard dung being buried fifteen inches below the surface, and artificials plentifully supplied. And latterly Mr. Smith has placed the manure along the middle of the fallow intervals, two feet and a half from the rows of plants which are to profit by it when they have matured their growth, and spread out their network of root-fibres like spiders' webs for some feet on all sides."

Mr. Smith's land is the ordinary heavy wheat soil of the oolite formation, generally rented at not more than 30s. an acre, and the four acres of lighter soil have chiefly a gravelly subsoil. The average outlay is £7 10s. per acre; and as the average of wheat grown has been 35½ bushels per acre for thirteen years, the clear profit per acre, with wheat at 40s., is £1 7s. 6d.—plus 1½ tons of straw. For the accounts of the process of the cultivation, we must refer to the report of the lecture itself, and Mr. Smith's own pamphlet. The system did not prosper in Mr. Lawes's hands, but he candidly avows that he did not follow it out in its integrity. Mr. Clark, the author of the paper, instead of committing the fault against which Mr. Smith always warns his followers, of beginning on ground in too rich a state, had his first yield of wheat after a crop of unmanured barley, which itself had followed unmanured wheat, but still he got twenty-four bushels per acre off his ten acres. The harvest of 1858 gave thirty bushels of dressed corn, and that of 1859, which had looked most promising, only twenty-five bushels.

The discussion which followed the paper was more than usually interesting, and, of course, as usual, every remark tending to show that the system was not nearly so good as "the good old ways" produced a plenteous crop of "Hears." Innovation is always distasteful to the farming mind. Mr. Greene, of Mortvale, near Chelmsford, who has carried out the system on fifty-eight acres, considered that the main objection to it was the large amount of labour required at one particular period of the year. We do not glean from his remarks that he uses Mr. Smith's rotary forker, which is drawn with wire rope by Fowler's horse-power capstan or his steam-engine and windlass; and his calculation for mere manual and horse labour together is £4 15s. per acre. He has not seen the quality of the wheat improved by the extra amount of light and air; but the ears are much larger. Mr. C. Howard thought that the Lois Weedon land was so good that the crops were not extraordinary, and doubted the system ever being successful except through the application of steam-machinery. Mr. Fisher Hobbs considered that rather too much wheat was grown in the country already, and also observed, with respect to the advisability of not making rows of wheat too wide apart, especially in the south, that on light lands he drilled from east to west, by which means the roots of the plant were shaded from the rays of the sun. The chairman, Mr. Coussmaker, considered that the Woolston and Lois Weedon systems might work very well together if the steam-machinery of the one could be got to replace the amount of manual labour required by the other, in order to trench up the land immediately after the harvest. The former will be shortly under discussion, but the latter, to judge from the general tone of the discussion, must not look to the Farmers' Club for advocates.

The Will of the late Count Stephen Szechenyi, drawn up in 1833, has the following singular passage:—"I wish my body, if possible, to be taken to England, a country in which I have learned so much, in order that it may there be dissected. My reason for wishing this is that my example may tend to diminish the dislike which is felt by the English to the dissection of the bodies of their relatives." In a will drawn up in 1841 Szechenyi expresses a hope that if ever a Walhalla should be constructed in Hungary its founders will give his remains a place in it, as a reward "for his good intentions" towards the land which gave him birth.

ENGLISH SEAL ATTACHED TO THE TREATY OF PEACE BETWEEN ENGLAND AND FRANCE, 1527.

THIS seal (see page 468) is a counterpart, so to call it, of that which appeared in our columns last week. It is appended to the English transcript of the treaty sent by Henry VIII. to Francis I., in 1527, and represents the former on his throne. Like its fellow, it is of pure gold, and of exquisite workmanship; and has attached to it such costly appendages as strikingly indicative of the pomp and magnificence of the two Monarchs. But these seals are unique, and refer to a very special occasion. The documents which they attest pretty clearly show that they were not sent merely from ostentation. Such gilded compliments did not throw dust—not even gold-dust—in the eyes of either Sovereign. In 1525 the nephew of Francis I. after the battle of Pavia, had left France at the mercy of his country. Henry had nothing else to do than walk into Paris and seat himself at Notre Dame with much greater ease and expedition than Henry V. had done. He—Indeed, was soon opportunely. For the last seventy years he had been opposing the French Monarch with might and main, sticking thorns in his sides, and putting grit in his shoes; and for the grit and the thorns he had paid in money but Englishmen would pay. Among other things, to annoy this enemy and keep the thorns to their work, we had been doing a number of little bills for that Imperial chieftain Charles V. Was he quite unshakeable to the French? Was he not worth fifty thousand rixdollars? Was he not going to fight our battles for nothing? So we accommodated him with a trifle of ready cash for his paper security, and he made prisoner our natural bag-o-bag, Francis I. Then was the time to realise all the blood and treasure that had been expended; and, to the delight of all true-hearted Englishmen, now was the time for Henry to turn his English flag from the Lilies to the Golden Dames. But "the hearts of Kings are insortable," as Bacon said of that shallow sort of monarchs, James I. "In the wonderment of his subjects, Henry did not know; he judged not his own heart, and was not unable for which he had been toiling all his life. Nay, he caused a treaty to be made public, wherein it was enunciated that "the divinest part of man is to give proof of his immortality," and that practical application of that abstruse maxim was that for certain considerations, to be hereafter mentioned, Henry and Francis had consented to an amity which should bind their kingdoms in perpetual love for all ages to come.

If our revered George III.—supposing him to have been compos mentis at the time—after adding millions to the national debt and sacrificing many thousands of valuable lives in caging Napoleon at St. Helena, had then, instead of clipping his wings and paring his talons, invited him to take house at the Home Office, and had made him with the precedence of civility—had furnished him with a fresh army and sent him back to his own country, such conduct could not have been more astounding than was this treaty with Francis I. It is true that the French King was glad to get out of the bargain, to pay a couple of million gold crowns, which we may suppose to have been the ratuable value of his kingdom. But he had neither the power nor the will to pay the two million farthings. Nor, in fact, did the English King expect payment; at least, not in gold. The real motive, not to be recorded on parchment, not even to be mentioned among Ministers of State, prompted Henry to propose this league with his ancient foe, and to send the astute Wolsey to negotiate the ratification, was his desire to strengthen himself with Francis against the ambition of Charles, a divorce from Queen Catherine, a Princess of Spain and near relation to Charles V.

The letters of Wolsey descriptive of his proceedings while on this mission are full of interest; but we can afford space only for two or three extracts relating to his interview with the French King:—

Wolsey to King Henry VIII.

SIR,—After my most humble and lowly recommendations, this shall be to advertise your Highness that, on Sunday last passed, I removed from Abbeville to a town called Pykeney (Poquigny), where, in a castle belonging to Mons. de Vidame, I encountered with the Cardinal of Lorraine, and some part of his and my train, leaving the residue at Flixe (Flixecourt), I was lighted that night.

On Sunday, after dinner, about one o'clock, I, likewise accompanied with the said Cardinal, the Count Brian, and such other gentlemen as were appointed with me for my first entry into this realm, I departed from Pykeney, taking my journey towards Amyas, [Amiens] where the day before, the 4th of this month, in the noon, the French King, with my Lady his mother, the Queen of Navarre, and many other nobles and great estates of this realm, were passing thitherward, approaching and drawing nigh to the said town, within two leagues of the same, not any considerable thing left behind thereof, with the Burgesses and Aldermen of the same, who, by the mouth of their secretary, made an oraate oration unto me, comprising our thanks and congratulations for coming and arrival of myself into these parts, but also by the same recognised, how as well they, as all other the subjects of the said French King, were singularly much obliged, and bound to your Highness, for that it pleased your Majesty (their Sovereign Lord being in captivity) to travail in the honourable pursuit and mediation of the excellent Princess Madame Reyent, with the realm of France, whereby they were not only delivered of your Grace's great displeasure, and formidable power, which in short time were insufficient and unable, but also, thereby, their King was restored to his said realm and dignity, peaceably and honourably, and accounted themselves, all their successors, and posterity, to be perpetually most entirely and lovingly bounden unto your Grace their hearty servitor, honouring the same no less than their own Sovereign Lord and Master. And, forasmuch as they knew that mine intervention and mediation toward your Highness did not a little confer thereunto, they, for the same, gave unto me their most hearty thanks; with divers exhortations, that coming into these parts was to their singular rejoice and comfort; with firm hope and confidence that, by my great gravities and wisdom and authority and mine intervention (it liked them so to say), the said peace was concluded and blest sooner delivered, as they trusted the French King's children should be restored, and universal peace throughout all Christendom ensue; with many other good eloquent words tending to that purpose and effect. By reason whereof, and answer made, we marched forward; and, within a little distance, effectual [immediately] met with me the Lord Admiral of France, brother of the said city, who, with a semblable oration of like purport, saluted and welcomed me; whereunto I made semblable answer made, we proceeded further; and, within a mile and a half of the city, the French King, riding upon a great jennet, appareled in a coat of black velvet, cut in divers places for showing of the lining thereof, which was white satin, accompanied with the King of Navarre, the Cardinal of Bourbon, the Duke of Vendome, the Count Saint Pole, Mons. de Gise, Mons. Vaudemont, the Great Master,* the Senechal of Normandy, with divers Archbishops, Bishops, and other noblemen, advanced himself towards me; to whose person (as soon as I had the sight thereof), dividing my company on both hands, in most reverent manner, sole and alone, I did accelerate my repair and accept; and his Grace, doing the semblable, for his part being discovered, with his bonnet in his hand, encountered and, with most hearty, kind, loving countenance and manner, embraced me, presenting unto me the King of Navarre, with the Cardinal of Bourbon, the Duke of Vendome, and the aforesaid noble personages; by whom, also, I was likewise welcomed: in the time of doing whereof, the French King saluted my Lord of London,† my Lord Chamberlain, Master Comptroller, the Chancellor of the Duchy, and such other your servants and gentlemen as accompanied me. After which semblable salute and welcome, he rides the said French King returned, with loving and joyous countenance, most heartily demanding of your Highness's poor welfare and prosperity, whereof to hear was next to his consolation and comfort, for your Highness was the Prince whom he most loved, honoured, and esteemed in all the world, and was more glad to speak of by your only means his realm was preserved from all peril and danger, and the French King at liberty, captivity, and thraldom; for his said realm and liberty, for the which your noblesse and gratitude is daily to be had, shall not only be by your Highness, but by the humble servant but as a slave, accumulating as many good and well set words to that purpose as could be devised, in such a constant, assured, and loving manner, as that the same seemed that he had studied not to proceed of an entire mind, affection, and heart.

And to the end your Highness should think that he greatly esteemed all such things as were sent from your Highness unto him; he caused the Great Saint Pole, M. de Guise, and M. de Vaudemont to ride next before him, upon three of the horses that your Highness had sent unto him, whereof the one, being a bay, he said was the best, the lightest, and most sure for the war of any that ever he saw, or could be found in Christendom, and most resembled, as he said, your Highness's. In the like sort Turkey, that surmounted all that might be found or recovered in the same. And thus entering and passing forward through the city, which was marvellously replenished with people, crying "Vive le Roi!" he forgot not, far above my deserts, to recognise unto him how he, his mother, and realm were bound unto you, for your hearty love welcome and favour.

And so still riding through the streets, in the principal place thereof, where your Highness's arms and devises were richly great desire that they have to pease, the reparation of Christ's Church and the Apostolic See, with the supreme dignity of the same, and such that the same shall succeed by your Grace's high policy, wisdom, authority, and mediation, intermixing me, in the behalf of your Highness, with such words as I could excerpt, the accomplishment and attaining thereof.

And, albeit I often demanded what his Grace's intent was, seeing we were past his palace, wherein he was lodged, to go and proceed any further through the city, supposing verily that he had commanded me to accompany me to my lodging which to do I refused, with as many persuasions and entreaties as I could devise, saying that it was not in my power to dismount him, but in any wise he would accompany me to the same, without suffering me to return with him to his palace; which, when I perceived, whether I would or no, I was fain to alight (whereof I showed myself to be very glad and desirous), I departed from his Grace, and, with my train, accompanied with the others, passed into my lodging, which I found richly and pompously appareled with the richest hangings that ever I saw, as well of cloth of tissue, cloth of tissue and silver, panel, embroidered with irenes knots, wherein was a great and large cloth of state of the same stuff as my bed, which was of cloth of tissue and silver, panel, embroidered, and replenished with large letters of gold of T and A, ycrowned, with a counterpoint and large cloth of state of the same. The Cardinal of Lorraine's bed, being my bedchamber, was appareled with rich cloth of tissue, raised, the one half with cloth of tissue and silver, and the fourth, being as a closet, was hanged with cloth of bawkiyn, whereunto was annexed a little gallery hanged with crimson satin, and after the bed was set a cupboard of plate, which was sent unto my lodging the Cardinal of Bourbon, the Duke of Vendome, with many other noblemen of this realm, and incontinent I, my said Lord Cardinal, who was lodged in the Bishop's palace, in the hall whereof, being large and fair, was made a cupboard of plate, richly and princely placed and set in right good order on both sides the French King's guard, my Lord Chancellor, the Cardinal of Bourbon, the Cardinal of Vendome, the King of Navarre's sister, with a great number of other ladies and gentlewomen standing in the midst; the said Cardinal of Lorraine likewise appareled and ordered in right good sort, and likewise saluted my Lord of London, my Lord Chamberlain, Master Comptroller, the Chancellor of the Duchy, and such of your servants and gentlemen as came with me, and most specially the Earl of Derby, whom it liked her Grace to kiss and right lovingly to welcome. The Queen of Navarre, sister of the French King, semblably saluted the Queen of Navarre, Madame Reyent, the Duchess of Vendome, the King of Navarre's daughter, and divers others of the other ladies; which done on both sides my Lady returned, and taking me on the right hand, and accompanied me into a great chamber, where, under a rich cloth of state, were set two chairs, garnished one with black velvet and the other with cloth of tissue, where unto her delivered the writing of your Grace's letters, which seemed to be very pleasant unto her, and making of your Highness most honourable mention, and of the great love and affection of your Grace's welfare and prosperity. Whereunto, after I had made answer, declaring unto her what way she should sit down to enter into further communication; in the beginning and commencing whereof she, with sad and considered words, declared the accumulated love, great benefits and gratuities which your Highness, in her perpetuity, heaviness, and adversity had exhibited and showed to her and the realm of France, with many other words tending to the like end, referred and ascribed unto your Highness; for the which, both she and the King, her son, and all the whole realm and lineage descent of him and his were bounden to do service unto your Highness, and to be ready to the same, as your Highness should think of the same.—Extracted from the State Papers, temp. Henry VIII., preserved in the Record Office.

THE ELLESMORE GALLERY.—Mrs. Elizabeth Ellison, of Subrooke Hall, near Ripon, has presented to the Science and Art Department of Art as South Kensington a most noble gift. It consists, for the present, of the splendid collection of pictures bequeathed to the nation by the late artists, the property of her late husband, Richard Ellison, Esq., who had purchased them at the sale of the Ellesmere Gallery, and which he intended to the nation. The main conditions annexed to the gift are:—The pictures are to be placed in the Ellesmere Gallery, Marlborough House, Pall-mall, or Kensington, commenced by the Department of Science and Art, until a separate and permanent room or museum is provided for that purpose, that the professional saviour for the preservation of the said water-colors may be employed by the Department of Science and Art, that the building and that they shall be exhibited to the public as constantly as the circumstances of the case will admit, and that the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings shall be requested to see that the said gift has been formally accepted by Lord Granville on the part of the public. The gift was made on the 7th inst., and communicated by letter of Mr. Redgrave.

THE NEW FRENCH ACQUISITION IN THE RED SEA.—M. Prevost Paradol writes in the Presse:—"The Nord contains some interesting details on the acquisition by France of the Island of Obock, situated in the Red Sea. The Bay of Aboulie, and the neighbouring islands of Issee and Oodi, have been ceded to us by the Sultan of Tadjoura, who reigns in Shoa, in Abyssinia, whose title, it is said, is sufficiently good to exclude all rivalries. It is added that the object of this acquisition will be less disputed than that of Perim: it is more advantageous in itself, for Perim is only a key of a valley over which nothing of some extent and fertility rises. The education of the island of Perim seems better in a military point of view since it commands the entrance to the Red Sea."

THE GOVERNOR OF MADRAS.—Sir C. Trevelyan, as was announced in the town edition of this Journal last week, has been recalled from the Governorship of Madras; and the vacancy caused thereby has been filled up by the appointment of Sir Henry George Ward. Sir Henry Ward was Secretary to the Admiralty in Lord John Russell's Government from 1846 to 1845, in which latter year he was appointed Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands. He held that office until 1855, when he was appointed Governor of Ceylon.

The screw-steamer, Normandy, Captain Child, from Hamburg, which arrived at Hartlepool on Thursday week, took fire in her cargo at 4 o'clock on Friday morning. The decks forward are burnt, and the cargo forward damaged by fire or water.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION,

(SECOND NOTICE.)

Mr. O'NEIL struck a chord in the great human heart when he produced his truly national work "Eastward Ho!" and again another when he followed it up with "Home Again;" but two such subjects do not fall to the lot of every painter, and it was hardly to be expected that this rising artist should crown his double achievement by a third of commensurate interest and importance. In his single exhibit this year, "A Volunteer" (223), Mr. O'Neil attempts a very difficult subject, one as difficult to describe by language as to depict upon canvas—namely, the horrors of a shipwreck seen from on board. To paint the boiling ocean, with ships boasting about and speeding to destruction, as seen from neutral ground, is possible enough, and the subject is full, the requirements for pictorial effect. But, to suppose oneself on board the hapless craft; to see the deck covered with broken spars and cordage, and the savage ocean already leaping over the bulwarks roaring for its prey; to see the harassed crew almost demoralised with the terror and confusion of the day, and the passengers crowding helplessly on the forecastle, awaiting their doom with every variety of agonised and bewildered expression depicted in their countenance;—deliberately, bit by bit, to paint all this unrehearsed scene of horrors is what art can hardly expect to do, and, having done, can only hope to come half way up to what the imagination of the spectator has already conjured up before his mind's eye. This subject, however, Mr. O'Neil has adopted, and from what we have said it may be gathered that, although he has done with it all that could be done by Art, he has failed of producing so great a work as we had a right to expect from him. The principal figures are the "Volunteer," who, stripped to the waist, is about to plunge into the sea in the attempt to convey a rope to the shore; and the Captain, who is apparently taking leave of him, and giving him his final instructions. But, even these figures are too metrical in their arrangement for the situation, and give no idea of the wild impromptu bustle which would inevitably surround every movement on such an occasion. The sailor, indeed, displays some little excitement and energy as he throws up his arm, as though he were exclaiming "Never fear, I will make it all right;" but the Captain, with his bland business-like smile and studied pose, and his telescope under his arm, which he cannot want at this juncture, being close to shore, is provokingly cool and self-possessed. The group of emigrants who fill up the middle of the picture, and amongst whom we recognise some of our friends in the "Eastward Ho!" present many features of touching interest, but they, like the rest, have too much the appearance of sitting to be painted. The most powerful bit in the whole picture is the group on the right, where a half-drowned man is being dragged on board by his comrades. So much for the moral of the picture—that is, for its success in realising a most critical situation. As for the execution of the various parts, it is in every respect—design, drawing, colour—masterly and satisfactory. Mr. O'Neil has avoided as much as possible crowding his canvas with physical objects—ropes, spars, bolts, &c.—but every portion of the ship which he has represented—the deck itself, the broken mast, &c.—he has put before us in a manner which almost borders on illusion.

J. C. Hook, too, has found the key to a wide and noble field, in which he is sure to be greeted with a large expression of public sympathy. The coast-life of England is full of pathos per se, which Mr. Hook seems to be determined to make his own. It abounds in passages of idyllic beauty, which, thrown with a feeling hand upon canvas, immediately rivet the attention and fill up the thought of a willing crowd of gazers. Look at "Stand Clear" (186), with the rough little fishing-craft rising to the last rolling breaker before it grounds upon the shingly beach. Does not the heart rise with it and claim fellowship and brotherhood with the hearts of oak aboard—the weather-beaten old tar who is taking in sail, the bronzed clear-eyed boy who is throwing the curling rope to shore, his brother who sits all eagerness with his legs dangling over the edge of the boat, ready to leap down as soon as they get into shallow water; and the third lad who sits in the midst, looking homeward too, and with a quiet air of repose in his face as he thinks of a temporary respite from the labours and dangers of his hardy calling. There is truth and poetry in all this, which needs but to be seen to command instant recognition. Of the same character is "Whose Head is on the Waters" (22), with the fishing-boat heaving over with the weight of the net which the crew are drawing in. In No. 408 we have a scene of glad insouciance—an idle boy and girl sitting in a boat, the latter dabbling with her hand in the clear, bright water, both in their hearts enjoying the calm in that little South-coast bay:—

> O well for the sailor lad
> That he sings in his boat in the bay.

s Near this last-named happy little picture we light upon a clever canvas, somewhat in unison with it in feeling, but the sight of which wakens up feelings of regret at the sudden and untimely fate of the talented hand by which it was produced. In No. 409 the last work of the late F. Stone, A., appears before us without name, but representing two strong, healthy-looking French fishwomen, carrying huge loads of seaweed on their backs, on a rough road near the seashore, and making nothing of it, as they sing

> A merry heart goes all the day,
> Your sad tires in a mile-a.

Of all his pictures of French sea life which Mr. Stone produced towards the latter part of his career this, we think, is the most agreeable in subject and the most perfect in treatment.

Dobson, the new Associate, sends in four works, illustrations of quiet character, painted with that delicacy, feeling, and purity of tone which have always been the characteristics of this artist. In "Die Heimkehr" (51) we have a couple of country girls, in a shady lane, gathering herbs or fodder—admirable for the sentiment of quiet and health inspired by it; health seen alike in the plump solid cheeks of the lasses, and the fresh, fragrant verdure with which they are surrounded. "The Plough" (234), though literally showing only a man teaching a boy to guide the implement mentioned, is something more than a mere sketch of rural life. The passage from Proverbs quoted in the catalogue, "Train up a child in the way he should go," &c., indeed, implies a moral suggestion, which the solemn patriarchal air of the father and the deferential attentive expression of the youth, as he gazes upward, fully bears out. "Seckhem" (241) is a scriptural subject, treated very impressively, though the traditions as to type in the faces are hardly supported by the humble naturalistic personages introduced. "Emilie au Gioviste" (284), is a study of a young girl, charming for its earnest simplicity of character.

Amid the general neglect of historical art Mr. C. Lacy deserves honourable notice for his large picture, "Lord Says and Sale Arraigned before Jack Cade and his Mob, A.D. 1451" (229). The charge made against the Peer is pointedly illustrative of the degrading prejudices which swayed the mob in those benighted days. Cade says: "Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm, in erecting a grammar school; thou hast caused printing to be used, and, contrary to the King, his crown, and dignity, thou hast built a paper-mill;" and then, after impatiently hearing a short speech in self-justification from the prisoner, he adds, "Take him away and behead him." Mr. Lacy has been very successful in the treatment of this scene of violence. The figures of Lord Says and Jack Cade are well contrasted—the one full of calm dignity, the other of insolent swagger. The rest of the personages display every variety of vengeful and brutalised passion. The colouring, however, is not so successful as the design, being somewhat coarsely laid on, and wanting in purity and depth.

Egg produces a single picture, "Scene from 'The Taming of the Shrew'" (270), a scene not now painted for the first, nor the fifth, time. It is the scene at table, where Petruchio quarrels with the mutton, and, seeing the unoffending gigot, throws it amongst the terrified servants, poor Katharine—meek creature!—looking on in absolute bewilderment and trepidation. The character of the hero is capitally hit off, without running too much into excess, which assumed characters are sometimes apt to do;—the lady is a perfect picture of strong-minded woman subdued. The varlets, victims of this unexpected outburst, are humorous enough, and, what is more, Shakspearean in their humour. "His only Pair" (267), and such a pair! "Sure such a pair, so formed"—was never seen in the regions of Hy-awl-strood or Rag-fair as Mr. Fasd's guid wife is cutting and patching, whilst the youthful owner of them, in very incomplete toilet, is patiently waiting for them, perched on the dresser hard by—and very hard, he doubt not, he finds it. Yet let him be hopeful as to the result of the operation, for and he will yet strut about, the admiration of all the village boys, in "his only pair." There is a great deal of quiet fun in the situation, which Mr. Faed has dealt with in his usual quiet but telling manner.

> The mother, wi' her needle and her sheers, > Gars auld claes look amaist as weel's the new;

J. C. Horsley opens before us, first left of the entrance, a work entitled "Showing a Preference" (57), but which, while it says much for the impressionable character of our sex, says very little for their gallantry. A young officer, fresh from his ship, is walking with two young ladies, (sisters), one on each arm. Clearly a preference he feels already unmistakably, hopelessly smitten with one of them, a very mild and exemplary young lady, and stoops down under her parasol to look at her face, and her shapely soft countenance in her ear, regardless of the distress of the other young lady, who still hangs on behind, heavily, and whose every sigh is breathe by the roseate. "Sunny Moments" (214) is a very choice little bit of sun-dappled shade, in a quaint old garden, with a little bit of a love-story told by the gardener to the young waiting-woman, who, of course, is the son of his existence—a pleasant little story, we should say, but the scene is not elaborated with care. Hooker's three contributions is "The Duenna's Return" (219), of which we give an engraving. The picture tells its own story, and also tells that it is of the romance "of other days." The mask on the door, the old spinet which has been hastily quitted by the fair occupant, the glove which are lying on the opened; the hurried farewell at the window, whilst little "Pico," with perked up ears, keeps watch against the coming of the gay cavalier who has stopped outside his lady's sanctuary but was not been ill founded, and that her "return" was but just in time to convict her into resting slumber of having fallen in love, or, at any rate, of having let in love very deep of her young life in spite of all she can ever against the folly of such nonsense. Every part of this little picture is marvellously filled, the whole being painted with a finish and sharpness of outline worthy of the Dutch school.

We are glad to see Mr. Webster endeavouring to strike out a new line, and quitting his favourite school-haunts for subjects of maturer and larger growth; and, if he be not entirely successful, the result of both his efforts this year, he is at least, done enough in them to show that the experiment he has made was worth the trial, and to encourage him, as we hope, to further exploration of human life in future years. His two pictures are named "Autumn" (216) and "Winter" (133). With the former, which represents a party of hop-gatherers in a cheerful landscape—we presume, in Kent—is by no means a new one, but possesses, nevertheless, not previously in every particular. "Winter" is more portentous and less pleasing. The allegory implied in the group of the young child leaning on the blind old man into the church door, whilst a new-made grave lies open at his feet, is too commonplace to be in any way striking; and in the middle distance we have the artist's favourite school proceeding to the church. The subject of this work is weak and purposeless, and the execution wanting of its inherent humour.

Mr. Cope ought really to attempt something more elevated and ambitious in character than his two modest and unobtrusive have exhibited it he would maintain his well-earned reputation and the predominance of the academic body of which he is a member. Both are evidently portrait groups, and from the same originals. "Rest" (142) is the prettier of the two—the child resting on its mother's arms is very natural and pleasing in effect, and admirable in drawing. "Evening Prayer" (149), represents the same child kneeling at lady's knee, with its head turned to the spectator—the most striking feature to attract the attention being the color of its feet, which are uncommonly red. The modelling of both pictures is poor, particularly that of the flesh, and the colour is opaque and poor in hue.

ROSA BONHEUR'S NEW PICTURES

Five new pictures by Mdlle. Rosa Bonheur have just been opened to public view at the German Gallery, New Bond-street. Of course they are all animal pieces, but they differ very much in subject and treatment. The very principal work is entitled "A Scottish Field" and "Spanish Bourgicos Crossing the Pyrenees." The Scottish Raid is one of the most spirited, most picturesque, and we may add, most truthful representations of Highland cattle and ponies and their landscape, though of subordinate importance, is remarkable for its exact adherence to local truth; the misty atmosphere, the rugged rocks and the long, coarse, poor-looking grass in the foreground indicate the period probably of approaching winter. In the "Spanish Bourgicos" Pyrenees is a marvellous group of donkeys, in the procession down a declivity in the Pyrenees, so admirably put upon canvas that you may almost single out each individual, and recognise them again in any part of the world. The other pictures here exhibited are all equally clever, though the most remarkable are "The Highland Shepherd," "Denizens of the Highlands," and "Huntsman Taking Hounds to Cover."

BARKER'S PICTURE OF "THE RELIEF OF LUCKNOW."

The crowds who flock daily to see Mr. F. C. Barker's picture of "The Relief of Lucknow," at the little gallery, 5, Waterloo-place, sufficiently attest the interest taken in the subject, and the recognition of the artistic merits displayed in the artist's treatment of it. We have in the picture being a commission from Messrs. Agnew, of Manchester, for the purpose of engraving, has, of course, been subject to the rules of the peculiar requirements of that process of reproduction; but even as a picture, and considered in art merely, it possesses considerable merit. The exact incident depicted is the triumphant meeting of Havelock and Outram with Sir Colin Campbell outside the walls of the city relieved after the memorable siege of September, 1857. The principal group, composed of portraits of some of the bravest heroes of the very grandest military achievement that the world is extremely striking; and stretching out on either side, and in their rear, are other portraits of men who have become equally famous and illustrious by the part they took in that glorious occasion—as Major-General Mansfield, Lieutenant-Colonel Norman, Captain Sir William Peel, Brigadier Adrian Hope, Major-General Sir H. Napier, Major Sir David Baird, Major-General Sir John Inglis, General Sir Henry Hope, Colonel Gordon, and others. Behind the successful group represent interesting passages in the eventful day, as here a party of wounded soldiers are being lifted into a brave fellow of the 93rd Highlanders lying prostrate, smitten by a round shot. In the background is the city of Lucknow itself, into which the troops are marching. The engraving of this fine historical picture is intended to Mr. C. G. Lewin. It could not be in better hands.

GOOD NEWS FOR THAMES ANGLERS.—(To the Editor.)—Will you, through the medium of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, let your angling readers know that at the meeting of the Conservation Society held on Tuesday, Mr. Wakefield in the chair, Mr. Farrell, the honorary secretary, informed the members present that so well had the appeal he had made through the papers at the commencement of this year succeeded, that a large number of trout and grayling in spawn had been placed in each of the weirs between Staines-bridge and Teddington. Through the exertions of the society all netting has been abolished; and from the evictions of Thames poachers during the past winter it is clear that the good water-bailiffs have done their duty. A very important fact was a unusual signed by all the respectable fishermen on the banks of the river, expressing their interest for preserving fish in the Thames, and stating as they are certain they shall benefit considerably by it, and shall soon make the Thames one of the finest fishing rivers in England.—ANGLER-ELECT.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C. F. L., Newcastle.—To us it appears that in the first game of the contact between the Berwick and Northumberland Clubs, Northumberland had to sit their own way at the finished bungler in move 34. In the second game the superiority of play was with the other side, but the result was a draw. We shall be glad to receive the games you mention to print.

W. H. Gossip.—Many thanks for your letter and problem. We hope to hear from you again shortly.

T. G., Baildon.—Accept our acknowledgments. The games have, previously reached us.

W. C. Pitt (Leeds).—Sent to "C. D."

C. D., Leeds.—In Problem No. 844, if White play 1. B to Q 3rd, Black can mate in three moves.

J. Hall (Leeds).—Your solutions are correct.

R. H.—Forward to a few examples; chiefly mates in three, four, and five moves.

J. Dixon (Manchester).—Your problem is very ingenious, and we make it a rule never to insert problems without solution.

J. R. W., and others.—We shall endeavour to give a list of the successful solvers next week.

W. H. Gossip.—Your solution of Problem No. 842 is correct. Your letter has been received, but we fail to know what you refer to.

W. F. Tudor (Leeds).—Will be forwarded.

C. C. H.—At Purnell's Coffee-house, Cornhill. Address the secretary.

F. W., Exeter.—We have not seen the game in question, but if it be so, how can mate be forced in five moves?

J. Dixon (Manchester).—We admire a second solution by 1. Kt to Q 4th; 2. Kt to Q B 7th; 3. Kt to Kt 5th, &c.

N. N., Cardiff.—Yes; an unquestionable improvement on the former example.

J. Hall (Leeds).—The game between Messrs. Lee and Mackenzie was played in 1876. It is exceedingly open, but not quite perfect, for at a very early stage in the game, Black might have played 4. P to Q 4th, and so have obtained the attack. The game of Hunt and Mackenzie, played at the recent Counties Match, is very fine.

MARIANA.—You rule as to touch and move in "Chess Praxis" is that "if a player not over the board touches a piece he must move it, or if he touches one of his own pieces he must move it, or if he moves an adverse piece, he must take it, or if he touches with his hand one of his own men when it is his turn to play, must move it; if it is impossible to move, touching it is not touching, and we would be the last to enforce such. And a player who touches one of his adversary's men (under the same conditions) must take it."

TOURNAMENT AT THE CAFÉ DE LA REGENCE IN PARIS.—This passage of arms, the arrangements of which were described in our Number for the 19th ult., has just terminated. Four separate tourneys have been fought, at the end of which three combatants only remained upon the field. These were M. Kolisch, of the first category; M. Allie, of the third category; and Mr. Borchester, of the fourth category. A good deal has transpired upon the following conditions—that two of the games played by her should first play together; then the winner of this bout should play with the third, and so until one of the three successively beaten his two adversaries. In the first round M. Kolisch vanquished M. Bourdonnais, and in the second M. Allie, the next, he defeated M. Kolisch, and in the third he defeated Mr. Borchester, who thereupon declared the victor of the honours.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

DR. FORBES WATSON'S Lecture "On the Chief Fibre-yielding Plants of India" is printed in No. 300 of the Society of Arts' Journal (price fourpence), illustrated with many wood engravings and a map. It should be obtained by every person interested in the progress of British manufactures and British India.

GEOLOGICAL SOCIETY.—The new number of the journal contains an eloquent address on the recent progress of geology and palæontology by the retiring president, Professor John Phillips; and many interesting short communications by members, including Sir Archibald Geikie's paper it by the Rev. S. Hislop, on the Geology and Fossils of Nagpur, in the East Indies, with woodcuts. Also a memoir by Professor Bonney on the basalts from the Giant's Causeway, in the Antrim coast.

ORNITHOLOGY.—The eminent chemist M. Nicklès has laid before the French Academy of Sciences an account of some experimental researches on the blowfly, which, he says, proves that the insect can live, grow, and in common with vertebrates, arsenic, antimony, and tungsten, establishes a broad analogy between the metabolism of the metals in animals and plants. Neither cuclin nor metallic compounds, qualities possessed by all bodies the metallicity of which is unquestionable.

RESUSCITATION OF DRIED ANIMALCULES.—The members of the commission charged by the French Society of Biology with the examination of the disputed point having agreed to make a great deal, in the presence of their authors, the experiments of MM. Doyère and Pouchet, have given the report. They admit that certain animals termed "reviviscents" may be reanimated, in varying degrees, by moistening, after having lost by desiccation, more or less completely the appearance of life. Rotifers and grades have revived after having endured for five minutes a temperature of 120° C., in dry air, and for many and some rotifers and tardigrades recalled after having remained eighty-two days in a dry vacuum and then been exposed for forty minutes to the temperature of 120° C. in dry air, and resistance of tardigrades and rotifers to high temperatures increases in proportion to the completeness of their previous desiccation.

ARSENICATING.—In the last number of the Pharmaceutical Journal, in a report of the meeting of the Midlands Branch, will be found many interesting details relating to this practice, said to prevail in certain parts of the country, especially the woodman and shepherds, who think it increases their strength and improves their personal appearance, without injury to their health (a statement on the warm belief of the coffee) stating: the fees at first the size of a pea's head, increasing to that of a pea. The habit is said to be acquired, and to remain when once tried a long time after death.

THE SUCKING FISH.—Echeneis Remora, or Sucking Fish, forms the subject of a very interesting paper by Dr. Albert Günther in the Annals & Natural History (April). The fish is well known to the ancients, and is described by Aristotle, Aelian, Pliny, &c. By a peculiar adhesive disc on the top of the head it is enabled to attach itself to ships, to the bottom of the sea, to the bodies of sharks, &c. Mr. Turton once found a cod with this disagreeable sticking opposite to the pectoral fin. Dr. Günther gives many historical details, and describes ten species, with illustrations.

THE CIRCULAR POLARISATION OF LIGHT was the subject of a discourse by Dr. J. H. Gladstone at the Chemical Society on Thursday week. These phenomena were discovered in France, and excited some attention in England, but in the meantime the attention of Germany was aroused only. The chief substances which have the property of rotating a polarised ray of light are quartz and oil of turpentine; but many essential oils, different kinds of sugar, tartaric and malic acids and their derivatives, camphor, and numerous vegetable alkalies and their salts. Dr. Gladstone referred to the influence exerted on this property by the state of aggregation and particles of the substance, the temperature, magnetism, and chemical combination. The power of rotating light to the right or left hand, and the intensity with which they rotate, are means of colours, is intimately connected with a peculiar one edness of the form of the crystals formed. The polarimeter as applied to the quantitative estimation of various kinds of sugar in a solution, and the determination of what is the best form of the instrument for the purpose, were also discussed by Dr. Gladstone, who thinks it will play no inconsiderable part in the chemistry of the future. The discourse was illustrated by a large diagram scope for the determination of sugar; a Soleil's saccharometer, kindly lent by Mr. Bates-Hubbard; and a collection of Mr. Ladd's, by Mr. Ford.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

PROFESSOR ASHTON gave the first lecture on Tuesday last week, his subject being "Earthquakes." He described the phenomena accompanying these convulsions; the varying, awful destruction; the motion, also, varying, from a simple tremor to a complicated movement of undulations, waves, &c., sometimes accompanied by subterranean percussions and sounds—a combination of the two. The theories respecting earthquakes were then considered, and reasons made to the scope of the volcanic action of heat, and of the chemical, electrical, and possibly magnetical forces upon the mineral substances in the interior of the earth. But the chief possible causes of these phenomena. Earthquakes take place all over the world; from Greenland and Iceland to Australia, from Japan to the Pacific and America. They happen more frequently in cold, than in warm weather. Lost of 50,000 deaths occurred from earthquakes in January and only 815 in July. On the average, there is one shock a-week somewhere. One shock in forty is violent, and there is one violent shock every month. Of the 365 days, there is one shock in nine days and thirty-three in a year. Till the present century reports of earthquakes were very imperfect. Of observations made up to the 15th century were 7; 17 to the 17th, 2804; from 1800 to 1850, 1,040; total, 3,861. Of these 1,000 have occurred in Europe, and 1,000 in United Kingdom during the present century. (Full information on the subject is given in Mallet's Report on Earthquakes and Recent Volcanoes, for the British Association.) The kindred subject of VOLCANOES, will be the next considered.

The Friday evening discourse was delivered by Dr. TYNDALL, the President of the Royal Society, on "Recent Researches on the Structure of the Public to the Science and Practice of Medicine"—the Duke of Wellington, V.P., in the chair. Dr. Tyndall said that the object of the Royal Institution of the knowledge required to maintain health and cure disease is not sufficiently appreciated by the public. It is to be hoped that it would in the same relation as lawyer and client; in the former case knowledge is required to win, and, in the latter, to keep health, which is often lost or gained by quacks, and, at the same time, from prejudice neglect what is really valuable in the art of healing. The importance of observations relating diseases by cold water did not receive the attention it deserved, although it comprehended a system to be employed by hydropathy, and by many eminent general Practitioners. Incredible benefit was derived from cold water in typhoid fever. Dr. Tyndall then described Dr. Blackwell and Miss Agnes Macdonald's experiments on the effects of alcohol, showing that if Nightingale are eminent examples of the value of abstinence from intoxication. Alcohol was also regarded as a species of conjurers. destruction. This would not be the case in the presence of the consuming fire. Alcohol was also a poison, and unfit to be taken internally. A public more enlightened on medical matters would not be so much in the hands of the practitioner, and the profession itself would be more disposed to investigation by the many new remedies which were being introduced. Dr. Tyndall then described the diseases of the mind be more studied; and that great attention should be paid to the study of hypnotism, which might be of value also, by treating the members of the medical profession with the respect due to them, and by not allowing the public to be misled by the specialist to the happiness of man.

MR. F. J. SMITH, of the Chemical Laboratory, Woolwich Arsenal) gave the fourth lecture of his course, "On Chemical Action and Heat," on Saturday last. He described the phenomena of chemical combination, and the consequent development of intense heat, were referred to, and some of the applications of the principle derived from the study of chemical-active substances were examined. Various schemes for employing hydrostatic pressure in the manufacture of steel, the production of phosphorus and sulphur, &c.—to the production of ingenuity skills and Captain Noble's experiments with gun-cotton. The new application of signals was illustrated; and the arrangements for the ignition of the Russian fuse were explained by means of diagrams. The fuse, which, as we late war, were described as being of a similar character. An account was given of the electric fuse, and the principles employed in its application, to the reduction of metals from their ores, especially in the application of the very powerful electric currents now obtainable from dynamo, or coal gas, and oxygen, as to the oxyhydrogen blowpipe was described, and the process of welding and cutting metals by its intense furnace recently invented and worked by Mr. Deville, in which coal gas and oxygen are constructed by Deville and Debray, in which coal gas and oxygen are employed, and in which a very large quantity of iron was readily fused in a gas furnace invented by Mr. Siemens.

Dr. Tyndall's lecture on December 6, on the Use of Animals, on the the cessation (or horrible) reminiscence—the Roman camel of Central Asia (with two humps), and to their domestication in Arabia, in South Asia (with two humps), and to their domestication in Africa, and the vicuna, America. Its llama (undoubtedly) living in the Zoological Gardens—the Specimens of all these are now living in the Zoological Gardens—the structure having been adapted to the present month. The organisation of these creatures is wonderfully adapted to their habits, and their great use to man, was described, especially their internal water-cells and the lungs—the accumulation of fatty matter stored up as a provision for famine. The fact that camels can carry from 850lbs. to 1600lbs., at a speed varying from five to eleven miles an hour, sometimes maintained during eleven hours. The llamas resemble the camels very closely, but have a structure more adapted to mountainous regions than sandy plains. It is thought that the camelus ruminants have, strictly speaking, never been wild animals, but have descended from a species of the great unicorn 1,000, when 2000 persons and 1800 camels perished.

GREAT AND LAMENTABLE FIRE.—
The calamity which has just taken place at the Warerooms of Messrs. BEECH and BERRALL, the celebrated Silkmercers, "The Beehive," 63 and 64, Edgware-road, W., is really awful to contemplate; piles of rich Silks, Mantles, Shawls, Fancy Dresses, Irish and Table Linens, Sheetings, Prints, and Printed Muslins, Ribbons, Lace, Hosiery, Gloves, Parasols, and various Fancy Goods, &c., all just purchased for the Spring and Summer Season, are all more or less damaged, and upwards of two thousand pounds' worth utterly destroyed.
In consequence of this misfortune, the Fire Insurance Company have kindly made over to Messrs. Beech and Berrall the whole of the salvage, which will be submitted to the public without the least reservation, and sold at what it will realise.
Ladies are respectfully solicited to pay an early visit on this important occasion.
N.B. The Sale is now proceeding.

SPORTSMEN and GENTLEMEN of the ARMY and NAVY.—S. and B. SOLOMONS, Opticians, 39, Albemarle street, Piccadilly, opposite the York Hotel. Portability combined with great power in FIELD, RACECOURSE, OPERA, and general out-door day and night powerful Waistcoat-pocket PERSPECTIVE GLASSES, weighing only four ounces each, containing 12 and 18 lenses, constructed of German glass, will show distinctly a person to know them at 2½ and 3 miles. They serve every purpose on the Racecourse and at the Opera house. Country scenery and ships are clearly seen at 8 to 10 miles. They are also invaluable for Shooting, Deerstalking, and Yachting. Her Majesty's Coast Guards are making use of them as day and night glasses. The term for them are powerful and brilliant telescopes for both eyes. The most powerful Telescopes, possessing such extraordinary power that some, 3½ inches, with an extra astronomical eyepiece, will show distinctly Jupiter's moons, Saturn's ring, and the double stars; with the same telescope a person can be seen and known three-and-a-half miles distant and an object from fourteen to sixteen miles. They are in endless variety, of larger and all sizes, with increasing powers, and are secured by her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent.

SPECTACLES.—Optical Improvements, to enable persons at an advanced age to read with ease, and to distinguish objects with perfect distinctness.—Messrs. SOLOMONS have invented SPECTACLE LENSES of the greatest transparent power. The valuable advantage derived from this invention is that vision becoming impaired is preserved and strengthened; very aged persons are enabled to employ their sight at the most minute occupation; can see with these lenses of a much less magnifying power, and they do not require the frequent changes, to the dangerous effects of further powerful assistance.—39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly.

DEAFNESS.—A newly-invented Instrument for extreme cases of Deafness, called the Sound Magnifier, Organic Vibrator, and Invisible Voice Conductor. It fits into the ear so as not to be in the least perceptible: the unpleasant sensation of singing noises in the head is entirely removed. It affords instant relief to deaf persons, and enables them to hear distinctly at church and at public assemblies. Every other kind of hearing Instrument, Messrs. SOLOMONS Opticians, 39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly, W.

"Gabriel's Treatise" should be read by all requiring a dentist It will save much money and more annoyance, and, emanating from such a source, may be confidently relied on."—U.S. Gazette.
American Mineral Teeth from £4 4s. the set, warranted.

TEETH.—Mr. ROGERS'S Improvements in Replacing ARTIFICIAL TEETH have entirely superseded those constructed upon the ordinary principles. They support the loose and tender teeth remaining, require no springs, wires, or any painful operation; while their natural appearance and durability are guaranteed. Charges strictly moderate. 18, New Burlington-street, corner of Regent-street. Particularly observe Name and Address.

YOUTH, BEAUTY, and ARTICULATION. Mr. EDWARD DAVIESON, Dentist to the Court of Spain, 448, West Strand, adjoining the Electric Telegraph Office, where he is prepared to supply Artificial Teeth of a manufacture superior in beauty and durability to any known in this country, at 10s. per tooth, which price can only be exceeded by expensive mountings.
Among the wonderful discoveries he made during his residence in the South, none exceeds the Liquid Enamel, which not only imparts a pearly whiteness to Natural and Artificial Teeth, but renders them impossible to discolour or decay. Sold, with full directions for use, at 10s. 6d. per case. It is also used a highly condensed form for stopping decayed teeth, and is invaluable for those who have decay in their front teeth.
Mr. Edward Davieson has to announce that the Fleur de l'Age; or, Bloom of Youth, that will add Youth and Beauty to any complexion, is now ready.—Sold in cases, price 11s., 22s., and four quantities in one for 33s. Attendance daily from Ten till Six.

TWO-YEARS' RHEUMATISM CURED
By the Mighty
AMERICAN HOMŒOPATHIC PURIFYING PILLS.
The following is from Mrs. Lane:—"Gentlemen, I wish this published for the benefit of suffering humanity. I was afflicted with acute Rheumatism for two years, and for thirteen weeks confined to my bed quite helpless; my body was in dreadful pain, and when touched I could not help screeching out as loud as my strength would let me; my feet and legs were frightfully swollen, my ankle bones grew out, and my hands were drawn inward and my fingers bent backwards the reverse way. My medical attendants could not relieve me, and said that I should remain a cripple all my life, when a friend told me to take the Great American Homœopathic Purifying Pills. And I am truly thankful that I did hear of them, and I took three large boxes, five pills every night until relieved, then two till cured; being, I think, the most miraculous cure ever performed by medicine I am now quite upright, and have the use of all my limbs, my knuckles are gone back to the natural shape, and I am a marvel to all around. The Pills have made a thorough cure. I am fifty-four years of age, and I shall feel it my duty to answer any questions, as the medicine has proved a great blessing to me, for in 1858 I was on my bed in agony, and in 1859 I give my testimony, waiting a twelvemonth to test the power of this powerful and astonishing medicine—Mrs. MARY LANE, Old Radford, near Nottingham."—To be had of Batters, Wholesale Agent, Nottingham; Sutton and Co., London; and of all Patent Medicine Vendors, at 1d., 3d., 6d., 1s., and 2s. 6d. per box. Postage stamps, 8d., 1s. 2d. and 2s. 10d., at 1, Angel-row, Nottingham.

WALTHAM ABBEY CHURCH RESTORED.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY MR. SALMON, OF CHESHUNT.

WALTHAM ABBEY.

THE increasing interest felt in all things pertaining to the early history of our country, an interest at once deep and strengthened by the frequent and varied boons on all hands—from buried cities and sacred tombs down to the worm-eaten covers of old books—warrants a few words on the works now progressing at Waltham Abbey. This church stands out as the connecting link between two important periods, and gathers around it the deep-seated feelings of our Anglo-Saxon nature from its immediate association with the last of our Saxon kings. Built by Harold as a church for the people's worship, it speaks of the national faith previous to its greater degeneracy and the deeper humiliation of the national glory before the Papal power in the reign that succeeded, and commemorating the brave man who of his piety and munificence called it into being, knelt at its altar, thence gave himself a sacrifice for his people's weal. On the 14th of October, 1066, Harold fell beneath his standard on the Hill of Senlac, buried, perhaps, first beneath a heap of stones on the Sussex coast. He was removed thence, at the earnest prayers of his mother, Githa, and, borne by the sorrowing brotherhood of Waltham, he, with the noble Gurth and Leofwin, was more fittingly interred in his own church.

From the best evidence it appears that this church was consecrated on May 3, 1060, by Kinsige, Archbishop of York, who died in the following December; but the confirmation charter was not executed until 1062. A long list of the Prelates and Princes who witnessed it is given by the writer of the "De Inventione Sancte Crucis Walthamensis," wherein the signatures of Baldred, Kinsige's successor, occurs; also that of Stigand, Archbishop of Canterbury; and Eaegar, the son of Æthestan, and grandson of Thorsi le Frude, the original founder of the church and village of Waltham. According to this charter the foundation of Harold was a college for a Dean and eleven secular canons, which he endowed with seventeen hirdships for their maintenance; he also munificently enriched the church with costly vessels and sacred relics.

The nave, with a portion of the south transept, is all that remains of this noble church, and of that the exterior has been so marred that it presents but a faint idea of its former glory; fortunately, the interior has not suffered to the same extent, but retains its general features and much of the original work is still untouched. Now that the whitewash and plaster have been taken off, the unsightly pews and galleries that disfigured the building removed, the massive pillars substantially restored, and their bases made visible by the lowering of the floor, this church is still more worthy of a visit. The somewhat lofty, huge, circular piers, alternately plain and decorated with spiral or bold chevron fluting, surmounted with corresponding capital and abacus; the noble arcade, the triporium with its simple ornamentation, the lofty clerestory with triplets of arches, and the magnificent arch of the Norman tower, strikes the beholder with its massiveness and grandeur, and calls forth a wish to have locked, it but for one minute, upon the splendid whole.

A new choir was added, and some repairs seem to have been done in the reigns of Henry I. or Stephen; and still more extensive repairs and additions by Henry II., who changed the foundation from seculars to Augustine monks, increasing the number to twenty-four, and promised to augment their revenue so that they should be sufficient to maintain eighty or a hundred Canons; but this he did not perform. Henry appears also to have determined upon building a new church here, but did not do so, contenting himself with the repair of the old one and the erection of the necessary monastic buildings.

In 1242 the choir was rebuilt and the church again solemnly dedicated by William, Bishop of Norwich. The foundations of the north pillars of this choir were dug up in 1795, when a coffin of blue purbeck marble was found at the bottom of the wall. This coffin lay 260 feet distant from the present east wall of the church, and shew the great extent of the edifice in that direction.

During the repairs that have been progressing for some months past under the able direction of Mr. Burges, which he has conducted in the true spirit of conservatism, several interesting details of Norman work have been revealed, such as the enriched capitals of the shafts of the south entrance, a Norman doorway on the north side, conclusive evidences of the vaulting of the aisles, circular windows to the triforium, and the corbel table of the south aisle; of later work, three corbels in the north wall inserted to carry the groined roof of the sicristure; these are of Henry II.'s time, and correspond with the vaulted building within the gardens, which was a part of the abbatial residence, erected doubtlessly by that Monarch; the remains of a noble pointed window of four lights, which has been restored with very beautiful flowing tracery, and a Newel staircase within the south wall. Some wall paintings were also discovered under the whitewash, which could not be preserved.

Of the work done we may further specially mention the square windows, the insertion of which so fearfully mutilated the north wall, have been removed and Norman windows restored; also two pointed arched windows on this side, and the Norman doorway. The wall itself has been refaced with ashlar, and the buttresses strengthened. The whitewashed ceiling has given way to a decorated one, after Peterborough Cathedral; and an elegant gallery erected against the west wall for the organ, which has been repaired and greatly enlarged. Much more, however, remains to be done. The east end, with its horrible factory window, must be removed, and a suitable composition be inserted; the south entrance restored; and the repair of the south wall has already been done on the north side. Up to this time about £3000 has been expended, and a further sum of £2000 is required to complete the work. The funds for this national undertaking have been collected through the instrumentality of the incumbent, Mr. James Francis, the parishioners having largely subscribed.

We have not been able to notice the beautiful Lady Chapel, with very much of its excellent work hidden by a false ceiling, and all its other disfigurements, which should be removed, and the large blocked arch connecting it with the church opened.

The interior of the Abbey Church having been sufficiently repaired to be again used for Divine service, it was reopened with special services on the 3rd inst., that day being the eight hundredth anniversary of its consecration. About £135 was collected, and the proceedings altogether were of a highly satisfactory nature.

INTERIOR OF WALTHAM ABBEY CHURCH RESTORED.

THE PORTA FELICE AND MARINA, PALERMO.

PUBLIC attention, long directed to the doings in Northern and Central Italy, has shifted to the southernmost part of the Italian peninsula, and, glancing from the mainland, now rests on Sicily. In pursuance of our plan of sending special artists and correspondents to every place where important events are likely to transpire, we have dispatched one to Sicily; and shall soon, we hope, be able to reproduce on our pages, from sketches by his facile pencil, faithful representations not only of the death-struggle being carried on in that island, but of the most salient points of its charming natural scenery, and some of the chief features of its principal cities.

We break ground in our present Number by presenting an Illustration of the Porta Felice and Marina, in Palermo, in which city, as is well known, the insurrection burst out early in the last month, and was not crushed until near its close—if, indeed, it be wholly so at the present time. Every town of any importance on the littorals of the Mediterranean has its Marina, or public promenade; and, according to the Rev. G. N. Wright, the Marina of Palermo is the most delightful spot on the Mediterranean. He says:—"A stranger glides into the port of Palermo always too rapidly, because every advance detracts from the sublime prospect of the Marina, with its fashionable as well as busy groups, in motion before a range of palaces one mile in extent; behind which the glorious city appears, seated on the fertile plain in Europe, and above which, in the background of the panorama, Monte Pelegrino rises precipitously, majestically, and with a form as strange as it is beautiful. Entering the inner harbour, the Cala Felice, or landing-steps, is now reached, and the busy hum of men assails the ear; new voices, strange dresses, different associations present themselves, yet all agreeable and full of interest. Here the Palazzo office, on the right, demands your presence—a crowd of idlers, and a considerable number of mendicants, impeding you at every step. To the left of the Marina and landing-place some remains of the ancient town walls are visible, and some military works of magnificent strength; but immediately in front stands the Porta Felice, through which the newly arrived passenger visitor issues forth, the Cassaro, at the accustomed hour, to enjoy the recreations of the Marina. This splendid piece of architecture, perhaps the handsomest city-portal in Europe, is purely Italian in its style and ornaments, and is a sufficient proof that the days of ancient grandeur and Rome may still be rivalled by the genius of after ages. From this perfect specimen of art—so constantly, from its position, the admiration of its owners—the parade extends towards the Villa Reale, a public pleasure-ground, and thence to the Botanic Gardens. These are tributary to the evening enjoyments of the Palermitans, and it is confessed by all voyagers in the Mediterranean that the delights of an evening on the Marina of Palermo are without a parallel in the south of Europe."

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Emperor has been on a flying visit to his farm of La Motte in la triste Sologne. After inspecting the different points where cultivation is being attempted in this sterile region, his Majesty received deputations from the surrounding poor villages, and invited the Mayor of La Motte to dine with him. Having learnt that the commune had lain an extraordinary impost on itself for the space of eight years in order to erect a new maire and schoolhouse, the Emperor undertook to defray the whole expense out of his private purse. His Majesty returned to town last Saturday, and presided at a Council of Ministers.

The Moniteur of Sunday announces that in the last sitting of the Legislative Body the project of law relative to sugar and coffee was agreed to by 233 against three votes.

The demand for shrubs and evergreens for the decoration of the numerous new gardens and squares at Paris has become so great that the municipal authorities have been obliged to have recourse to Holland for an increase in the supply.

The Imperial Horticultural Society has opened its annual exhibition of flowers, fruits, and vegetables in the nave of the Palace of Industry, which, says the Paris correspondent of the Guardian, "has been transformed, as usual, into what is politely called a jardin Anglais, though I doubt whether our gardeners would highly appreciate the compliment if they witnessed the effect produced. The place, however, exhibits a pretty specimen of that artificial nature which the French love to get up for themselves, and which I believe they in reality prefer to anything which unsophisticated Nature can accomplish for them. There is a petite rivière and a rustic bridge, and a cascade and a pelouse, or grass-plat, almost as big as a pocket-handkerchief. Many of the plants exhibited are extremely fine, and display, in the size and masses of their flowers, and the absence of all extraneous foliation, the highest skill in artificial culture and development. The azaleas and pelargoniums are especially remarkable in this respect, and unequalled, I should apprehend, in similar productions of any country in the world."

SARDINIA.

The Treaty of Zurich has been approved in the Sardinian Chambers by 215 against sixteen votes. The report of the Committee on the treaty of cession of Savoy and Nice to France concludes by proposing its approbation by the Chambers.

The official Piedmontese Gazette publishes an article refuting the accusation of Ministerial connivance in the affair of Garibaldi. The article says:—"The Government has disproved of the expedition and attempted to prevent its departure by such means as prudence and the laws would permit. The Sardinian ships of war had orders to prevent a landing, but could do no more than the Neapolitan vessels which were cruising in the Sicilian waters. Europe knows that the Government of the King does not hide its solicitude for the common country; but at the same time it understands and respects the principle of international law, and believes its duty to be to make that principle respected in the State, for the safety of which it is responsible."

The Sardinian squadron is concentrated in the Sardinian waters.

The committee for the subscription to a million muskets, which first refused to supply Garibaldi with funds for his hazardous expedition, have now taken measures, together with the Municipal Junta of Milan, to send the sums collected to the General. The money which flows in is mostly voted by municipal bodies in Lombardy out of the communal exchequers.

THE PAPAL STATES.

Garibaldi's partisans have attempted an inroad into the Papal States. Last Saturday there was an engagement near Montefiascone between the Papal gensdarmes and a body of 350 insurgents coming from Tuscany. Some five or six of the anti-Papal party were killed, and twenty-five others were wounded—a brother of Orsini being among the killed—while the gensdarmes had three men killed and two wounded. The insurgents were dispersed and driven back into Tuscany; and we learn by a telegram from Turin that they have been arrested, and will be brought to trial.

The Papal Government is organising an Urban Guard, and is making every provision to maintain order in Rome. General Lamoricière entered Rome on the 13th inst.

PRUSSIA.

The Prussian Chambers were closed on Wednesday by the Prince Regent, who, in his speech, said:—"Government is most seriously endeavouring to bring about such solutions of the questions which at present engage the attention of the European Cabinets as will be adequate to the maintenance of the political equilibrium. The principles which guide the Government in its relations with the German Confederation and the German Diet in regard to the present highly-important affairs have been explained during this Session. The Government also will in future adhere to these principles, and will continue to regard the maintenance of the recognised rights of others as necessary for the maintenance of its own rights. Notwithstanding the difference of opinion existing in reference to important questions, in one feeling all the German Governments and people are unanimous with myself and the Prussian people—that is, in unshaken fidelity to the common fatherland, and in the strong conviction that the independence of the nation and the integrity of the national territory are matters of importance before which all internal affairs and dissensions far recede." The continuation of his Royal Higness's speech treated of questions respecting the interior.

The Prince Regent was to proceed on Thursday, viâ Kreuznach and Saarbruck, to Trier, to be present at the opening of the Rhine, Nahe, Saarbruck, and Trier Railway. According to the Kreuz Zeitung, Marshal M'Mahon, Commander-in-Chief of the camp at Châlons, had received orders to welcome the Prince Regent, in the name of the Emperor of the French, on his arrival at the French frontier. The Prussian Ambassador at Paris, Count Pourtalès, was to be at Saarbruck, to join the Prince Regent.

The Chamber of Deputies adopted, on the 15th, the principal article of the bill concerning the credits for the army. To the regiments of infantry and landwehr which form each brigade, another regiment, composed of three battalions of the reserve of the landwehr, is to be added. The guard will consist of four brigades of infantry, and the eight corps will comprise thirty-two brigades.

The Committee of the Chamber of Deputies made their report on a motion of M. de Ronne concerning the inviolability of private property at sea in time of war, and they express their hopes that the Government will use every effort to obtain the recognition of such inviolability as a principle of international law.

The foundation-stone of the new Bourse was laid on the 16th inst., in the presence of the Prince Regent and the Princes Frederick William, George, Charles, Adalbert, and nearly the whole of the Ministers, and the authorities of the capital. Speeches were delivered by the gentlemen charged with the erection of the building, and, as the choir of the cathedral sang a hymn, the stone was fixed, when the Prince Regent uttered the words, "In the name of the King," and gave the customary three blows with a mallet. The ceremony concluded with another choral display, and cheers were given for the King and the Prince Regent.

Reviews and inspections of troops by the Prince Regent have been very frequent of late.

The Danish Government has lodged a protest at Berlin against the discussion in the Chamber of Deputies respecting Schleswig, and against the attitude assumed by the Minister for Foreign Affairs, Baron von Schleinitz, upon that subject.

SPAIN.

The Madrid Espana of the 17th has this paragraph:—"According to information which we have received the Cabinet has resolved to inform the Government of Naples that the present state of Europe and the necessities of the service in the dominions of Spain will prevent it from lending to the Neapolitan Sovereign the assistance of 25,000 Spanish troops which it had applied for." The semi-official Correspondancia also says that though the Cabinet "deplores the disturbed state of the Two Sicilies, and the attacks of daring adventurers in that kingdom, it will not undertake the responsibility of counselling intervention which prudence condemns."

General Concha has been elected President of the Senate.

An official return shows that the number of infantry in the Spanish army is 80,000 men.

The railway station of Almansa, in Valencia, has been entirely destroyed by fire.

AUSTRIA.

The Wiener Zeitung officially announces the fresh concessions offered by the Emperor Francis Joseph to the Hungarian Protestants, and the proclamation of a general amnesty.

The Council of the Empire will hold its first sitting on the 29th inst., when the Minister of Finance will have concluded the elaborated statement of the budget, which will be the first question to be discussed by the Council.

A Trieste telegram, dated the 18th, says:—"The foreign Consuls will shortly be instructed that all vessels belonging to any Italian port annexed to Piedmont must strike the tricolour flag before entering any Austrian port."

In consequence of Garibaldi's departure for Sicily the Austrian Government has resolved to send a flotilla to cruise off the coasts of the island. All war-steamers which were stationed in Pola have been united under the command of the Commodore Willersdorf, and have set sail for Sicily. They will be provisionally confined to cruising off the Neapolitan coasts in the Adriatic, without crossing the Straits of Messina.

A Turin letter says:—"At Mantua the Austrians are pushing on the works with great activity. They are not merely constructing a line of defence on the left bank of the Po, but they have traced out new forts, and one of great strength is in course of construction at Consolina Montecchi, to command the road of St. Guttaldo."

TURKEY.

It seems that the physicians, self-appointed, are again consulting on the case of the "sick man." According to a despatch from Vienna, Austria, Prussia, and England have agreed as follows:—1. As to the maintenance of the integrity of the Ottoman empire. 2. Should an inquiry into the situation of the European Christians in Turkey take place, it is by no means to be instituted exclusively upon the basis of the facts given by Russia, but in an independent manner, and upon the facts reported by the different Ambassadors and Consuls in the East. It is said that the Sultan, relying on the terms of the Treaty of Paris, disputes the right of the great Powers to institute an inquiry into the condition of his Christian subjects, and that the Turkish Envoy at Paris has protested against any such interference in the internal affairs of the Turkish empire.

M. de Lavalette, who has arrived at Constantinople, and who has been received by the Sultan, has made to the French residents in the Turkish capital a speech which has been so favourably regarded as to have caused a rise in the exchange.

Advices from Aleppo to the 28th of April state that an address had been posted up at the gates inciting the inhabitants to massacre the Christians. The Governor, who has 800 men and cannon, had interfered and arrested the principal leaders. The garrison was considered insufficient. The Christians, being unarmed, feared a fresh explosion of fanaticism.

The Bulgarians have drawn up a monster petition requesting a complete separation from the orthodox Church.

An inquiry has been instituted respecting the charge of appropriation of 28,000,000 piasters against the late Lord Chamberlain of the Sultan, whose property has been confiscated. The disturbances are suppressed in Thessaly. The leader of the movement has been arrested. Agitation prevails in Epirus. General apprehension exists in all the provinces of the empire. The demands of the Servian deputation are increasing. Riza Pacha has again refused the office of Grand Vizier.

THE UNITED STATES.

The proceedings in Congress were of little interest. The Senate was engaged in debates upon the slavery question; and in the House of Representatives the tariff was the principal subject of discussion. The Senate has adopted a resolution authorising the employment of a vessel to transport not more than five astronomers to some point where the eclipse of the sun, on the 18th of July next, can be best observed. It was understood that Senator Simmons and his friends had perfected their amendments to the Mexican Treaty, and that the consideration of the subject would be shortly resumed by the Senate. The resolution raising the American mission to Sardinia to a first-class one was passed by the House of Representatives without debate. The post-office committee of the House of Representatives has decided unanimously in favour of establishing a steam line around the Gulf of Mexico.

A convention of delegates from the remains of the "Know-nothing" party was about to assemble at Baltimore for the purpose of choosing a candidate for the Presidency; and General Houston, of Texas, was deemed likely to be selected.

The Board of Aldermen of New York has passed a resolution requesting the Mayor to invite the Prince of Wales to visit that city.

Ex-Governor Tazewell, of Virginia, died on the 6th inst., aged eighty-five years.

A bill giving a bonus of 60,000 dollars and 40,000 dollars to the first and second companies who shall carry telegraphic lines across the continent had passed the California Legislature.

Twenty-nine boys and girls had been drowned in a lake in South Carolina, in consequence of the sinking of a boat in which they had embarked on a pleasure party.

INDIA.

The following telegrams were received at the India Office on Wednesday:—

"SIMLA, April 28.—The Governor-General and the Commander-in-Chief are still at Simla, but will return to Calcutta on the 7th proximo. Mr. Wilson, in a speech in Council, answered the objections of the Madras Government to his scheme of taxation. On the morning of the 20th the Wuzeerees attacked Colonel Larkins' (?) column, with some damage to the cattle and camp followers; but they were driven out with heavy loss, and pursued for three miles over the hills, and to all appearances have been broken up."

"SIMLA, May 4.—The Governor-General held a durbar at Simla on the 3rd inst. for the reception of the hill chiefs. Cholera has been prevalent in Oude, but is now disappearing. The force under General Chamberlain joined that under Colonel Lumsden on the 28th ult. The Wuzeerees gave up their intention of holding Shapoor and Petray, and retreated."

The Times and Standard announce the visit to England of Sir Cursetjee Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, the eminent Parsee merchant.

CHINA.

A telegram received on Monday by one of the first houses in the China trade states that the Chinese have refused to accept the English and French ultimatum, and that all the ports have therefore been blockaded.

From Hong-Kong we have intelligence to March 29, as follows:—Two regiments of infantry, one battery of artillery, and one company of Royal Engineers proceed on the 31st instant to Chusan. Mr. Bruce is to receive a final answer from the Emperor on the 10th of April. The 1st, 3rd, 31st, 44th, 67th, and 99th Regiments, and the 1st battalion of the Military Train, are here. Sir Hope Grant takes a trip to Chusan and Shanghai in a few days. General Sir C. Van Straubenzee goes to England next mail. No horses have arrived yet from India. The whole army will be ready to move about the 15th of April. The 7th Bengal Native Infantry are going to Calcutta on the 31st (March) in the Prince Arthur, having been relieved by the 3rd Bombay Native Infantry.

The Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands has warned the inhabitants against disquieting rumours.

Advices from Vera Cruz are to the 1st instant. The Constitutional Government has rejected the mediation of England, and Miramon has been defeated on all sides.

On the 19th ult. a fire in a valley of Trinidad, in Cuba, swept over eighteen miles of ground. The loss was estimated at 500,000 dollars, and a reduction in the sugar crops of 8000 hogsheads was expected.

CANADIAN LOYALTY.—A preliminary meeting of the citizens of Hamilton, Canada West, was lately held, to take measures for the erection of a monument to her Majesty, to be built by subscription. The Mayor and a number of other gentlemen were appointed a committee to that effect.

GARIBALDI'S EXPEDITION.

The intelligence respecting the insurrection in Sicily is of the most contradictory nature; but, confused and obscure as it is, we are, nevertheless, led to the conclusion that the rebels and their cause are prosperous. All that can be done is to pick our steps as best we may by the flickering and feeble lights afforded by the various telegrams. On the 13th the invaders started from Marsala, and began to march on Palermo, a distance of about sixty or seventy miles. One telegram, dated Palermo, brings Garibaldi to a place called Alcamo, more than two-thirds of the way, on the 15th, and speaks of a repulse of the Royal troops at Lioppo. But it seems certain that between this time and the 18th an encounter took place between a portion of Garibaldi's men and the Neapolitan troops, at Calata Fimi, a place some ten or fifteen miles in the rear of Alcamo. The Neapolitan accounts speak of the Royal troops attacking the invaders with the bayonet, and totally routing them; of the capture of a flag; and of a great number of killed and wounded, among whom was one of the chiefs. Other accounts in the French papers, among them a French Government despatch, represent the affair as a success on the part of the Neapolitans, and speak of a desperate resistance and an orderly retreat on the part of Garibaldi's men, but of the loss on their part of killed, prisoners, and cannon. A later official telegram from Naples speaks also of two columns being sent in pursuit of the "remnants of the dispersed Garibaldians;" and this is dated May 20. But the same day we have other accounts, nonofficial, and certainly as much to be relied on. Morreale, a position commanding Palermo, has been invested. The provinces of Palermo and Trapani are deserted by the Royal troops, flying at the approach of the Garibaldians, who are joined by 3000 insurgents, and the "enthusiasm is general." In spite of the official declaration that the population remain tranquil, we hear of the insurrection extending, of Sicilians joining the invading force, of fresh emigrants arriving in Sicily to swell it. And we are told from Paris that "no telegram about Garibaldi dated Rome or Naples is worth a button," and that, as nothing to be relied upon transpires about his doings or whereabouts, people infer from the silence of the Neapolitan officials that the revolution is everywhere advancing morally and materially.

As samples of the conflicting nature of the accounts from Sicily, and of how they are coloured by the medium through which they pass, we append two despatches received on Thursday. An official despatch from Naples, dated the 23rd inst., informs us that "the rebels encamped at San Martino, near Monreale, have been beaten twice, driven from their positions, and pursued to Partanico, with very considerable losses. One of their leaders, Rosolino Pilo, was killed. The heights, which were occupied by the rebels, have been taken by the Royal troops." By way of contrast to this we hear from Paris, on the same day, that "the despatches just received confirm, without giving further details, the successes of Garibaldi. A proclamation has been issued by him, in which he takes upon himself all the responsibilities of the dictatorship of Sicily."

The most significant indication of the formidable progress of the Sicilian revolt is afforded by a statement which is forwarded by the Paris correspondent of the Morning Post, and which purports to be founded on a despatch received by the Marquis Antonni, the Neapolitan Envoy in Paris. According to this statement, the King of Naples is about to send General Filangieri to offer to the Sicilians a general amnesty, a Viceroy, and a separate Government. It has been previously reported that General Lanza, a Sicilian by birth, has been authorised to tender the Sicilians a Constitution and an amnesty; but a telegram affirms that General Lanza's proclamation conveying these promises has been received with contemptuous indifference by the Sicilians, who are certainly not likely to place faith in any assurances of the Neapolitan Government, which has so often and so flagrantly broken the most solemn obligations contracted towards them.

M. De Carafa has remitted a circular to the diplomatic corps bitterly accusing the Piedmontese Government of having, notwithstanding its promise, allowed bands of volunteers to be enrolled, armed, and despatched to Sicily. M. de Carafa adds that this violent attack against international laws exposes Italy to sanguinary anarchy and compromises the whole of Europe. He throws the responsibility on the authors and accomplices of such criminal actions. The Marquis de Villamarina has, in the name of Sardinia, protested against this accusation, which he says is false and injurious.

GARIBALDI'S LANDING AT MARSALA.

A letter, of which the following is the substance, written by an officer on board an English vessel lying off Marsala, on the 11th inst., gives a vigorous description of the landing of Garibaldi's expedition:—

At ten o'clock on the morning of the 11th inst. two English vessels bring up off Marsala, and shortly afterwards are both at their anchorage. Two Neapolitan steamers, which had accompanied them, "to watch their proceedings, no doubt," stand on, apparently to take a look along the coast, or to tell a frigate on the station of the arrival of the Englishmen. Hardly, however, are the two steamers out of sight when two other steamers are seen coming in from seaward at full speed. As they approach they hoist Sardinian colours, and come so close round the stern of one of our ships that it was impossible to mistake who or what they were. The foremost of these strange steamers was the smaller of the two; and "but few men were to seen on her deck." But on the bridge, beside the captain or pilot, was an officer in a red blouse (like the rest), and with "a feather in his cap." All are armed, and a field-piece points out from an opening in the bulwarks just above the starbord paddle-box. The other and larger vessel was "literally crammed with men," some in red, some in dark green, most "in plain citizens' attire." This is how the two strange steamers looked on that memorable morning. Both steamers make straight for the mole; the smaller one gets in "all right;" the other grounds about a hundred yards short of the molehead. The landing from the inner one begins at once, and it is surprising where all the men who now come steadily over her side could have been stowed. So they land and walk up in small parties to the town, as leisurely as a party of English yachtsmen from Malta. There was the usual fussy health-officer hurrying to ask them "if they had pratique," but that was the only difficulty. Except indeed "that confounded semaphore swinging its arms about as if in a rage;" and straight to this semaphore the health-officer is ordered to march in front of the landing party. In ten minutes that semaphore had ceased from troubling. Then there was another fussy "Commissioner from the Government" taking down a list of the names of compromised persons. This gentleman's papers are quietly "distributed in much smaller pieces than he had intended." And then the prison gates are opened, and, though there was no time to make a systematic gaol delivery, there is no reason to fear that any but political offenders were released. The Government at Naples has no room to spare for ordinary crime. Meantime the small steamer has been cleared of men, stores, guns, and ammunition, and the latter laid along the mole for removal, just as if it belonged to his Majesty's regular troops. Presently, after a little delay, boats "in any numbers, and of all sizes," run alongside the steamer aground, and the men come down the ladder in perfect order. What a moment for our gallant fellows, staring with all their eyes and glasses! There are the two Neapolitans steaming back "as hard as they could come, and cleared for action, too." And not only the steamers but the frigate is running down to her anchorage with every sail set before a beautiful breeze. Nearer and nearer they come; well within range, and still there are hundreds to land. It is a splendid sight to see them stepping into the boats as coolly as the crew of a captain's gig at Spithead. Now the Government steamer stops: every eye aboard the British ships is on her bow gun. "Why doesn't she fire?" But no! she's backing, and filling, and signalling to the frigate "which is by this time getting disagreeably close." And Garibaldi's men—"why, they are all landed, formed into fours, and marching off, "as if from parade." At last comes a shot from the steamer—short: another—"the men on the mole dip, and it passes over them," and on they march again. Here's the frigate! she has shortened all sail, and, as she comes in a line with the molehead, crash goes her broadside of grape and canister, down go the volunteers, over goes the storm, and up they are again, "marching as orderly as before." Frigate and steamers now sheer off a little, and are content to throw a stray shot or two at the working parties who are clearing the mole of the landed stores, with an amply supply of horses and carts. A ricochet shot half smothers them in dust every now and then, and that is nearly all the harm done. One man was wounded out of the twelve hundred who had thus been landed, with arms, ammunition, and four field-pieces, "in just one hour and three-quarters, in the very teeth of a frigate and two steamers, without hurry or disorder, and without returning a shot."

FALL OF ROCK AT BRISTOL.—Yesterday week a mass of rock, supposed to have been loosened by the late frosts, fell from a height of nearly forty feet at the back of the Hotwell House and Baths, Bristol, doing considerable damage to the outbuildings and laundry. One piece of rock weighing over half a ton fell through a skylight to the very spot where, the moment before, two servants had been standing, the débris filling the tubs at which they had been engaged.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegrams were received through Mr. Reuter's office yesterday (Friday):—

THE INSURRECTION IN SICILY.—Paris, May 24.—The Patrie of this evening, after giving the Neapolitan despatch announcing the defeat of Garibaldi, says:—"A second despatch state sthat Garibaldi is said to have attacked the Royal troops, who were strongly intrenched, and to have completely beaten them. According to the same despatch, this conflict would lead to the immediate evacuation by the Royal troops of Palermo, Messina, Trapani, Catania, and Syracuse." The Opinion Nationale publishes the following despatch dated Messina, the 22nd inst:—"There is a great panic among the authorities. The inhabitants are joining Garibaldi in crowds. Great numbers of strangers are quitting the towns. The soldiers have taken refuge in the forts."

HUNGARY.—Vienna, May 24.—Counts Antoine Szecheny and Audrassy and a Hungarian prelate are spoken of as having been been chosen by Government to replace the three Hungarians who declined their appointments to the Council of the Empire. They are also said to have formally consented to their nomination.

THE CAPE MAIL.—Plymouth, May 24.—The Cape mail-steamer Athens, Captain Clarke, arrived here this afternoon. Sir George Grey was expected daily. Public business was generally deferred until his arrival. Parliament was to meet on the 27th ult. The Session was expected to be a busy one. £10,000 per annum wanted to maintain the clergy of the Church of England. An appeal to the laity for voluntary contributions had been unsuccessful, as they were jealous of the power of the clergy. No sales of wine had taken place as, the price offered being lower, the farmers declined selling.

COUNTRY NEWS.

The foundation-stone of a new school at Poltimore, Devon, was laid a few days since by Lady Poltimore, who performed the ceremony with a gold trowel.

MURDER OF A FAMILY.—Yesterday week Sergeant Whitworth, of the Coast Guard Brigade of Royal Artillery stationed at Sandown Fort, Isle of Wight, destroyed his wife and six children, by nearly severing their heads from their bodies. He afterwards attempted to cut his own throat, but failed to do this effectually. He then rushed into the presence of the commanding officer, and made a declaration of having committed these dreadful deeds. Whitworth is supposed to be insane.

FATAL BOILER EXPLOSION.—A steam-boiler explosion took place last Saturday afternoon at the saw-mill in Newton-green, Ayr, belonging to Mr. Potts, wood-merchant. The boiler was 26-horse power, of tubular construction, and had been only four months in use. Both ends of the boiler were blown out. The following were killed:—James Cook, engineer; Dines Gilpin; two boys named Young; and M'Turk, and another boy, whose name is not known. Several persons also were severely injured.

THE IRISH EXODUS.—The Cork Examiner bears testimony to the fact that the Irish exodus has not been magnified, and also draws attention to the fact that, as is abundantly proved by the emigrants' appearance, none but persons of some means are leaving the country:—"The stream of emigration still continues to flow with unabated rapidity through our port, and so far as regards numbers there is little or no change to be recorded. Each week sees the departure on an average of 600 persons, the great majority of whom are young men and women between eighteen and thirty years of age. To imagine the effect of this drain upon the community, we might instance that if these 600 were drawn from a town like Bantry there would hardly be a young man or woman left in it. The actual numbers are greater than the population of many large villages, and a fortnight's draught at that rate would utterly depopulate so considerable a town at Mill street. Remembering that almost every one of these individuals is of condition to be of actual value to the community—the men as farm labourers or mechanics, the women either in agricultural labour as servants, or, still more important, as the healthy mothers of strong children—it is easy to conceive how terrible a loss to the country. Nothing can impress this fact upon the mind so strongly as actually witnessing the crowd preparing for their departure. Amongst the entire there is not an indication of squalor or misery—not a single rag on the back of its owner indicates that he or she is flying from poverty—not a weak limb or a pale cheek—scarcely a wrinkled face indicates that the country is getting rid of a burden. Sturdy athletic young men, healthy and strong girls—often of extraordinary beauty—form the great bulk of this departing crowd."

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The authorities at the Horse Guards have directed a board of Royal Engineer and other officers to be assembled for the purpose of making a survey and reporting upon the condition of the Government stores at Purfleet, Tilbury Fort, and Chatham.

The annual return showing the figures of merit established in the Army during the yearly course of rifle instructions is published. The 22nd Foot, first battalion, is at the head of the list; and a militia regiment, the Royal Wiltshire, stands second.

The Queen's birthday has been made the occasion of a large batch of promotions and new appointments to the Order of the Bath, which appear in the Gazette of yesterday se'nnight. Among them are several members of the United Service, as well as many Indian officials who rendered valuable service during the recent crisis in the East.

The Duke of Cambridge has issued a general order directing that the Chaplains to the Army, both at home and abroad, are in future to wear the military uniform which has been decided upon. The general order states that the uniform is not to be worn by the Chaplains at all times, but on State occasions, reviews, field-days, in camp, and on other important occasions. The same uniform is to be worn by the Episcopalian, Presbyterian, and Roman Catholic Chaplains.

The Gazette of yesterday week publishes two general orders by the Governor-General of India, in which his Excellency takes the opportunity afforded by the return of the 53rd Regiment and the 60th Royal Rifles to England to record the sense entertained by the Government of the services rendered in that presidency by those regiments. The first-named regiment has been in India since December, 1844, and the latter since October, 1845, and both took an active part in the suppression of the mutinies.

The Ellison Water-colour Collection of Paintings has been deposited in the South Kensington Museum, and will be first exhibited to the public on Saturday (to-day).

The special Summer Exhibition at Peel Park, Salford, was inaugurated on Wednesday evening, by a soirée given by the Mayor, J. W. Weston, Esq., to nearly 500 ladies and gentlemen. It will be opened to the public on Monday next.

THE PRINCE OF WALES AND THE NEW YORK ALDERMEN.—At a meeting of the New York Board of Aldermen the following communication was read:—"To the Mayor and Common Council of the city of New York—The undersigned, citizens of New York, venture to call your attention to the visit which the Prince of Wales, the heir apparent to the throne of Great Britain and Ireland, is about to make to America, on the invitation of the British provinces. This is to be regarded as the visit, not merely of a person of great distinction, but of a future ruler, to his federal subjects, and partaking of an official character. Considering the intimate relations which exist between our country and England, and by how many ties we are bound to that great people, over which the Prince of Wales will hereafter reign, and not forgetting that international courtesies tend to promote good understanding between nations, and lessen the chances of war, we beg leave to suggest that he should be invited to visit this city, and receive its hospitalities." Signed by Cyrus W. Field, William C. Bryant, H. Grinnell, James Brown, and by many of the most influential merchants of New York. The President of the Board offered a resolution to the effect that, it being currently reported that his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales is about to visit her Britannic Majesty's dominions in North America, and as an extension of his visit to the city of New York would tend to more strongly cement the friendship existing between Great Britain and the United States, therefore resolved—"That his Honour the Mayor be requested to invite his Royal Highness to visit the city and partake of its hospitalities." The resolution was adopted by a vote of 9 to 3, and was sent to the Councilmen for concurrence.

AN EXPLOSION FROM FIREDAMP occurred on board the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Orissa, lying in Southampton Docks, on Thursday afternoon. The deck cabins, bulkheads, &c., were blown to atoms. Five men were taken ashore and sent to the infirmary.

ABYSSINIA.—Information has been received in Egypt of the death of Mr. Plowden, her Majesty's Consul in Abyssinia. He is stated to have died of wounds received in an attack made upon him by one of the chiefs under Negoussi, the rebel Governor of Tigré, while he was travelling through that province on his way from Gondar to Massowa. He was ransomed by King Theodore for 1000 dollars, but was already in a dying state. The assistance rendered to the Governor of Tigré by the French, in return for the grant of territory which he has made to them on the seacoast, is said to be largely contributing towards enabling him to resist the authority of Theodore.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE race meetings of next week are confined to Manchester on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday; and Hungerford on Thursday and Friday. The sale of her Majesty's and Mr. Grevile's yearlings is fixed for Saturday. There are nine Orlandos among the nine colts and eleven fillies which make up the Royal lot, and Barnton, West Australian, Stockwell, Voltigeur, Flying Dutchman, and Hobbie Noble contribute the remainder. The Grevile lot consists of fourteen, of which ten are Orlandos. Mr. Milward's seventeen ponies averaged 37½ gs. at Tattersall's on Monday, and 54 gs. was the highest price.

The two elevens—a list of which we gave last week—meet on Monday and Tuesday at Lord's. Thursday and Friday will be rather busy days, as the M. C. C. and Ground play the University at Oxford; Surrey confronts Sussex at the Oval, and the Household Brigade plays the Quidnuncs at Lord's.

The yachting and boating men are all up and doing once more. On Wednesday the Royal Thames Yacht Club have a sailing match with their smaller-class yachts round the Nore from Erith. Thursday is appointed for the Royal Mersey Club trip; and the Prince of Wales Yacht Club also sail their club yachts of twelve tons and under, and centre-board boats of eight tons and under, from Erith to Chapman and back, for the Vice Commodore's and the club prizes.

THE DERBY DAY.

Never within turf memory had such a number of Derbyites, with high-class two-year-old characters, been engaged to meet, and the weather and the company was worthy of the congress. As regards numbers we have seen quite as many spectators, both in Fifty-one and other years; but, certainly, the holders of paddock tickets seemed fully one fourth larger. In fact, we have never known such difficulty in getting even a glance at the horses, as the serried crowds of supporters got round their favourites, and never left them till the canters began. The Corner operations of the three or four days previous had been quiet. Umpire and Wizard bravely kept their places, and Thormanby crept up at last in that slow and sure way which is such a certain sign that the clever owner means mischief. Thunderbolt and Upperhand followed suit with St. Albans, whose tremendous Metropolitan Stakes and Chester Cup preparations have fairly used him up for the present; but Mainstone came again, and, as it transpired that his decline had been entirely owing to his off fore-leg having filled on the Monday week before, his backers felt a ray of hope, although his noble owner and the stable have for some time past thought him a moderate horse. The backers of Langton Wold were strong in their allegiance, and reported with truth that John Scott had never been more confident. The Nutbournites began, as the saying is, to be very "nutty" on their pet, who was trained, as they averred, by a pupil of old Forth, and had done all that had been asked of him. Sutton, too, had pleased John Osborne so much that he would not give up his son for Thormanby, upon whom "Johnny" won several of his best races last year. It was also said that Buccaneer had only been beaten a head by Tame Deer at even weights; and that Woolcot had got him into capital trim. Horror was regarded as the outsider who would be there or thereabouts to drop on to the favourites if they made the smallest mistake.

The Richmond men had got up a wonderful story about Lanchester, 9st. 5lbs., beating Volatile, 7st. 8lb., in a trial on Saturday; but the weights seemed apocryphal in two ways, and as it transpired that the horse had a sore shin, and that Templeman had, in consequence of a sprain, been unable to get to the weight for him, the Voltigeur fealty of '50 was not revived by the Londoners. Wonderful stories were afloat about Umpire. Another American had arrived, it was said, as "consulting council," and the horse, after doing scarcely any work till within the last six weeks, had been latterly having a severe round with each of his Mentors daily. English trainers shook their heads when they heard of such "hurrying," and declared that the Americans' own 'cuteness would ruin their chance. They had engaged Marlow and brought him to ride, but Fordham, the jockey they really wanted, was claimed by Mr. Padwick for The Drone, and Luke Snowden, who had been coloured for Horror, was the selected one at last. The "Merrymen" did not conceal that the stable considered Thormanby a good stone better than Brother to Rainbow, but those who had only seen the chestnut out at exercise reported that he was hardly changed one whit since last year. One or two were found bold enough "to pin their belief on the Tiger, and a friend of ours who had dreamt that 'red and black cap' won, found to his disgust, on looking over the card, that there was nothing for him but 'The Rising Sun.'"

Out of 224 only thirty-three were left on the card, headed by Lord Palmerston's Mainstone, who was steered by Sam Rogers, as Alfred Day was still rather bruised from his Woodcote Stakes accident of the day before. Derby winners were well represented by their sons—to wit, Flying Dutchman by six; West Australian (whose dam Mowerina foaled a filly to Kingston on the 8th inst.) and Wild Dayrell by two; and Andover, Daniel O'Rourke, Pyrrhus the First, and Voltigeur, by one; and it will be seen that they ran second and third. Buccaneer was one of the first to show in the paddock, and in appearance and power he was well worthy of Wild Dayrell—nearly sixteen hands, and with immense stifle joints and gaskins. Woolcot had done wonders for him in the time, but still he lacked an appearance of thorough fitness, though he looked thrice as well as we expected. Scott's lot of five were soon on parade, and their veteran trainer and Lord Derby by their side, with the neat lads in livery. The Wizard walked fourth, and was very much admired for his perfect condition; but still there was a lingering notion that he was one of the flash Rat-trap school of horses who die half way up the distance, and the layers of 5 to 2 were much more numerous than the takers towards the close.

Umpire, who was guarded by a fierce-looking trio, caused an immense rush, but very soon the word was passed that he wouldn't do; and certainly we were most wofully disappointed. His head is not nicely put on; and, although he has a wonderfully good arm, and looks like a stayer, there was neither the fine substance of which we had heard so much nor the dash or style about him in any way that one expects in a Derby winner. Mainstone was scarcely looked at, and his round off fore-leg told its own tale. Still, he is a fine, big horse, with more of the Wild Dayrell than the dubious King Tom out about him. We did not see his noble owner near him; but Lord Derby stuck to Cape Flyaway to the last, and gave Clement his instructions as he quitted the paddock. Cramond looked sadly out of sorts, and has not improved one whit since last Christmas; and, despite the favourable weather, Ashmall could not get to the weight for him. The Frenchman, Dangu, was a plainish, straight-backed chestnut, and some at first thought that he was Thormanby. Horror was, beyond all doubt, the handsomest horse there, and the owner of Wild Dayrell might well be proud with such a brace as he and Buccaneer, as they walked from the "Paddock" to the "Post" side by side. Lanchester was a nice, clever-looking horse, and bearing very little resemblance to the general Voltigeur stock; and Thormanby looked as dangerous as ever, but had certainly not thickened, as we expected. High Treason was flash and pretty to an extreme, but not of a staying kind. Great doubts had been felt as to who would ride him, but Upperhand's scratching left Withington at liberty. Sutton was useful-looking, but with no class about him; and Nutbourne was not so handsome as we expected, but still a stout-built, workmanlike sort of horse, who might well come to 7 to 1, as he did towards the close.

The start was more than usually successful, and was effected at the second time of asking. Brother to Rainbow was conspicuous amongst those who broke away, and he went back so far that, instead of making a pace for Thormanby, he seemed to be about the last but five from the post, and the pace was so good that he could never quite make up his ground. The blue jacket and black belt of Lord Stamford was soon forcing the running at a tremendous bat, half-a-dozen lengths in front of everything; while Thormanby, Nutbourne, Horror, Buccaneer, Wizard, and Umpire were all close together. Bentinck's powers soon failed, and then Charlton, who wore the Baron's colours once more, came along on Restes, with the view of giving the suspected staying powers of Wizard and Buccaneer no peace. Nutbourne was going like a winner, with a slight lead, and well placed next the rails at Tattenham Corner, with the five other favourites handy; but his leg gave way at the road, and Hughes pulled him up immediately. It then seemed Wizard's race, and long and loudly was his name shouted as he strode up the middle of the course, towards the distance. Here it was the old Dervish tale again, as Thormanby, full of running, went past him like a shot, and the Derby of '60 went to "the boy in yellow" once more. A length and a half was the fiat, and Horror finished three or four lengths behind the pride of Whitewall, and as many in front of Dangu; with Sir William, Umpire, Buccaneer, Man-at-Arms, Cape Flyaway, and Restes next nearly in this order. Loiterer, whom Mr. Ten Broek sold to Sir Joseph Hawley for 2000 gs., whipped in, a sorry contrast to the place which the cherry jacket has held for two years before, and Buccaneer pulled up lame. Thormanby twice over jeopardised his chance by stumbling; but his little jockey, who carried some 22 lbs. of saddle and saddle cloths, and never rode in a Derby before, recovered him very cleverly. Considering his condition, Umpire ran well. It is said that Heenan stood to win £1100 upon him; but, like Mr. Ten Broek, he did not come to see him in the paddock. Tom Sayers was also in the Stand, and, having now determined to cultivate the arts of peace, he has made a good beginning by joining a volunteer rifle corps, of which he ought most certainly be captain. The pace was pretty good throughout, and three seconds quicker than last year. The stakes amount to £6050, and Mr. Merry, who never does things by halves, is said to have won upwards of £60,000 in bets. Thormanby is a son of old Alice Hawthorn, by Windhound or Melbourne, but we should certainly fancy that the honour rests with the former of these two. He was foaled at the Cawston Paddocks, from whence the old mare went on to Sweetmeat. He won nine races last year, ran second twice, and third four times, and the only wonder is that with such powerful recommendations he should not have been more generally fancied by the public. Their impression seemed to be that a horse of iron could not go through such incessant work as this in one season and be got ready for a Derby the next, but Mat Dawson's careful judgment has placed all such calculations at defiance. He has thirteen engagements, and Umpire, Horror, Wizard, and Buccaneer are all with him in the St. Leger, which Mr. Merry won two years ago with Sunbeam. The following is a return of the running:—

EPSOM RACES.—TUESDAY.

Craven Stakes.—Gallus, 1. Clydesdale, 2.
Brighton Stakes.—Harry, 1. Clio, 2.
Woodcote Stakes.—Dundee, 1. Blisworth, 2.
Rous Stakes.—Benbow, 1. Horace, 2.
Horton Stakes.—Miss Emma, 1. Annan, 2.
Heathcote Plate.—Little Lady, 1. Louise Le Clercq, 2.

WEDNESDAY.

Epsom Town Plate.—Parmesan, 1. Yoicks, 2.
DERBY STAKES.—Thormanby, 1. The Wizard, 2.
Manor Plate.—Nerio, 1. Pescatore, 2.
Bentinck Plate.—Yoicks, 1. White Rose, 2.
Burgh Stakes.—Birdcatcher, 1. Reaction, 2.

THURSDAY.

Two-Year-Old Stakes.—Brown Duchess, 1. Walloon, 2.
South-Western Stakes.—Gallus, 1. Curlew, 2.
Grand Stand Plate.—Convivialist, 1. Doeskin, 2.
The Epsom Cup.—Newcastle, 1. Wild Rose, 2.
Walton Stakes.—Fanscombe, 1. Royal Oak, 2.
Queen's Plate.—Petra, 1. Cecilia, 2.
Four-Year-Old Stakes.—Luff walked over.

LATEST BETTING.—THURSDAY.

THE OAKS.—3 to 1 agst Rupee (off), 5 to 1 agst Sagitta (t), 11 to 2 agst Seclusion (t), 6 to 1 agst Emily (t), 10 to 1 agst Contadina (t), 10 to 1 agst Cheesecake (t), 10 to 1 agst Butterfly (t) 11 to 1 agst Avalanche (t), 14 to 1 agst Vistka (t).

CRICKET.—Southgate v. the Surrey Club, with Three Players: This match was commenced at the Oval on Monday morning, and brought to a conclusion on Tuesday, Southgate winning by 26 runs. The following is the result of the score: Southgate—first innings, 161; second, 83. Surrey—first innings, 144; second, 77.

CHANTILLY RACES.—Perhaps since horse-racing has existed in France there never was a more brilliant Derby Day than that of yesterday. Prince Napoleon and Count de Morny were present. The field for the Derby was a very good one indeed, not fewer than seventeen horses out of twenty entered having been taken to the post. The winner was Mdme. Latache de Fay's Beauvais, who figured in the betting as second favourite. The second was M. Verry's Gouverneur, but so little was he esteemed that no bets were laid about him; and the third, Count F. de Lagrange's Pierrefonds, was the fourth in the betting. The success of Beauvais was greeted with enthusiastic applause. It was only gained by a short head. The pace was not good, and a sad accident occurred in the race—M. Fasquel's Croquefer in going up the hill broke his leg. The amount which the owner of the winner will have to receive for stakes, entries, and forfeits will be, after deducting the entry paid and the sum to go to the second horse, not less than 52,800 francs.—Galignani.

THE CHAMPION'S BELT.—After much bluster and bravado, and a good deal of diplomacy, on both sides, Sayers and Heenan have signed a treaty of peace. The momentous transaction took place yesterday week. The highly-coveted belt "is to remain where it is," and the Champion and the "Boy" are each to be presented with a belt "equal in every point of value and magnificence" to the great prize of the ring. Each of the candidates is to head the list for that to be held by his opponent. The old belt will remain in the possession of the proprietor of Bell's Life, to be fought for by whoever may aspire to the honour of wearing it. Sayers has engaged to retire from the prize-ring. As there has been so much talk about "the belt," a description of it may be interesting. In consists of a black breast-band of patent leather, upon which is fastened seven silver plates, each being about four inches square. Running along the edges of these plates, and standing out in clear relief, are model representations of the ropes and stakes, beautifully cut by the tool of the silversmith. If the spectator were looking at the belt, as it would stand upon its edge upon a table, the first plate would show the figure of the British lion quietly sitting upon all fours, or couchant, as the heralds would say. The second plate represents the men at what is called "the scratch," or standing with their fists up in fighting attitude opposite to each other. The third plate has the word "Championship" in large capital letters. The fourth has the armorial shield of Great Britain. The fifth is a blank shield, on which the vicissitudes and fortunes of the belt are to be ultimately engraved when its final possessor wins it. Plate six represents a boxer standing "in position" as if before an opponent; whilst the seventh and last contains "the union hands," or four hands, joined crosswise, in the centre of a fine star. The whole of the work is splendidly cut out of the solid silver, and nothing can be finer than the workmanship. The belt is laid at full length in a red morocco, velvet-lined case, which is again inclosed in one of strong trunk leather. The value of the prize is about 100 guineas.

A BOLD BOY TRUMPETER.—A letter from Madrid says:—"In the triumphal entrance of the troops here, the heroes of the day (with the exception of General Prim, who was so greeted that he had to deliver half-a-dozen speeches as he went through the streets) were a trumpeter and a dog. Their glory obscured that of all the army, and they obtained an ovation which will disturb the repose of Espartero at Logrono. The trumpeter belongs to the Bourbon Regiment: he is only fourteen years old, and is of short stature. When in Africa, he happened one day, whilst in the advanced posts, with his company, to be excessively hungry, and he could not get any food. At last he perceived a number of oak-trees, and said to himself, 'Where there are oak-trees there are acorns, and acorns at a pinch can be eaten!' He accordingly slipped away, and, passing unobserved by the sentinels, climbed up the tree and began eating. He was suddenly interrupted by a strange noise, and to his dismay he perceived that the tree was surrounded by a number of ferocious-looking Moors. Flight was impossible, and resistance out of the question; but a bright idea struck him; he seized his trumpet and sounded the charge. The Moors, thinking that they had fallen into an ambush, took to flight. This exploit of the trumpeter excited great admiration at the time, and on the entrance of the troops the crowds not only greeted him with enthusiasm, but he was borne in triumph on men's shoulders and crowned with laurel! From time to time, at the request of the people, he sounded the charge which had struck terror into the breasts of the Moors."

RELIGIOUS REFORMS IN RUSSIA.—A letter from Odessa, dated April 29, says:—"Russia is at the present moment engaged in accomplishing two religious reforms. The first is a careful translation into the Russian language of the Holy Scriptures and the prayers of the Church. Hitherto the old Sclavonic tongue was the language used, and as the Latin in the Roman Church is a dead letter to the congregation, so the Sclave has been to the Russians. The translation of both Old and New Testaments had already been commenced. The second reform is the abolition of the seminaries, where up to the present not only the priests themselves received their education, but were obliged to bring up their children. The male portion of the family were thus compelled to adopt the sacerdotal profession, whether they were so disposed or not. Thus the priestly character was rendered in Russia purely hereditary as well as compulsory. Those young persons who were admitted, notwithstanding their not being children of any priest, had to embrace the profession notens volens. In place of the seminaries which are now to be abolished, it is proposed to have a theological faculty in all the universities, so that persons may have it in their own power to choose the vocation they are to pursue, and not be made priests by force."

RECOLLECTIONS OF BARON GROS'S EMBASSY TO CHINA AND JAPAN IN 1857-58. By the Marquis de MOGES, Attaché to the Mission. Griffin and Co.

The special mission to China and Japan undertaken by Lord Elgin on the part of England has been recorded by no mean narrator, and in the work before us we have an account of the French section of the embassy under Baron Gros, written by a member of his staff, who may be supposed to have had equal opportunities with Lord Elgin's secretary for acquiring a knowledge of the proceedings from the French point of view. In this country there has been, we believe, a tolerably extended feeling which implied a doubt of the advisability of he junction of France with England in this mission, and a questioning of the exactitude of the grounds on which the French claimed to be participators in the diplomatic and warlike action which was taken immediately after the rupture of our peaceful relations with the Chinese Empire which followed the famous case of the lorcha Arrow. The opening sentences of the work before us seem to put the matter on its true footing, so far as France is concerned; for, although the language used is of the simplest, it is full of signifiance. It is asserted that the case of the Arrow was a mere pretext in the hands of Sir John Bowring for bringing to an issue differences and disputes between Great Britain and the Celestial Empire which had long existed and had been increasing in importance from day to day. The indorsement by the home Government of the hostile measures taken by the English officials in Southern China, the sending out of a large naval and military force, and the appointment of a special commissioner on the part of her Britannic Majesty to China, excited, it is said, the deepest public interest all over Europe. The French, we are informed, could not remain inactive while events of such magnitude were taking place in the far East. It was proper and necessary that they should take a part both in the diplomatic and military proceedings. They had besides, on their own account, insults to avenge, and just causes of complaint for which to demand redress. The continued refusal on the part of the Chinese Government to give suitable satisfaction for the barbarous murder of Père Chapdelaine, put to death by the authorities at Si-lin-hien; the impertinent and arrogant attitude assumed by Commissioner Yeh, the Governor-General of the two Kwangs, towards the French Minister at Macao; the bad faith of this official; and the serious injuries sustained by Frenchmen and persons under the protection of the French Government during the destruction by fire of factories at Canton, afforded, independent of other considerations, ample ground for the interference of France in the struggle which was about to take place. This is the case of France, which was acceded to by England; and accordingly Baron Gros soon followed Lord Elgin. He was accompanied by M. du Chesne de Bellecourt, a first-class secretary; the Viscount de Contades, a third-class secretary; the Marquis de Moges and Count de la Tour Maubourg, attachés to the mission; the Marquis de Trévise, and the Vicomte de Flavigny, completed the personnel of the embassy; while M. de Besplas, a Lieutenant in the Navy, who had served in the Crimean campaign, and had been with Prince Napoleon in his expedition to the Polar Seas, was, at the special request of Baron Gros, added as a supernumerary to the naval officers of the frigate Audacieuse, in which the Ambassador and his suite were conveyed to China. The career of Baron Gros in the diplomatic service of France, as here stated, was undoubtedly such as to justify his selection for this mission. He had belonged to that service since 1823. He was long Chargé d'Affaires at Bogota, and was afterwards intrusted with several important missions, more especially with one to the Republic of La Plata, and with another to this country, whither he came on the occasion of the French expedition to Rome. He was also sent on a mission to Athens as Commissioner of Mediation and Minister Plenipotentiary of France in the settlement of the dispute pending at one time between the kingdom of Greece and England. Subsequently Baron Gros was the Plenipotentiary in the settlement and demarcation of the frontier between France and Spain, and his negotiations resulted in a treaty, signed at Bayonne in December, 1856. The refusal of the Russian and American Governments to join in the demonstration about to be made against China is stated to have arisen in the case of Russia from the difficulty which she would have had to find ships of war for the purpose; and, as regarded the United States, on the ground of that country holding it as an invariable principle of policy never to become bound by treaty with a European Power, and always to maintain an entirely separate and independent position. This, probably, was only half the truth; the fact being that the relations of Russia and the United States with the Chinese Government were such as to have rendered it highly impolitic for those nations to take any share in measures destined to coerce the authorities of the Celestial Empire. Subsequent events have proved the wisdom of that policy.

Having so far disposed of the starting-point of the diplomatic question, the work of M. de Moges immediately becomes narrative in the strictest sense of the word. The incidents of the voyage are detailed with a pleasant minuteness, as may be gathered from a statement in the ninth page of the work, where we are informed that when off the coast of Spain, the weather being cold and rainy, and the wind blowing fresh, "the sea began to heave, and the Embassy felt slightly indisposed. Under these circumstances Baron Gros, whose six-and-thirtieth voyage this was, stood out, with his imposing stature and firm tread, a marked man among subordinates, who, it must be confessed, had lost somewhat of the spirit and fire with which they had embarked at Toulon." In an agreeable, gossiping (by no means in the lowest sense of the word) manner the record runs along, assuming a diary-like form; and we may here at once say that all through, where occasion requires the English to be spoken of, the tone is friendly and appreciative, and there appears to be generally a spirit of fraternisation which is very creditable to the good feeling and good sense of the writer. The description of the attack on Canton and the capture of Yeh are most graphically done; and, although we do not know if it will be accepted as praise or not, we will venture to state that the book all through is written as if it had been the production of a very first-class "special correspondent," carefully revised and polished. In the style of the present translation there is so much ease and neatness that it is hardly possible but that the original must partake of those qualities; and there is a calm impartiality running through the whole narrative which renders the interest of the book complete. Altogether, it is well calculated to be received in England as an agreeable contribution to the history of this remarkable mission, and worthy to be read even after the more elaborate work of Mr. Oliphant.

THE WILD SPORTS OF INDIA; with Remarks on the Breeding and Rearing of Horses, and the Formation of Light Irregular Cavalry. By Captain HENRY SHAKESPEAR, Commandant Nagpore Irregular Force. Smith and Elder.

The title of this book is certainly comprehensive enough; but a perusal of it will show that there is by no means a necessary want of connection between the three subjects of which it professes to treat. In his introductory remarks the author argues by implication that his experience as an Indian hunter has tended to fit him for the duties of a soldier, both in body and inclination, and it is for the instruction and guidance of those who by the demands of their profession are called on to take service in India that he conceived the idea of writing this work. He does not hold that hunting and shooting in India are to be considered as mere amusements, but are in the nature of training, both as regards the body and the intellect, for the peculiar warfare of that country. He contends that during the recent mutiny in Bengal, in many cases, young and gallant gentlemen, descended from the chivalry of England, fell helpless and almost unresisting victims to the attacks made upon them, who, had they been acquainted with the use of their weapons, and accustomed to handle them, as well as to manage their horses at speed, might have escaped, or at least have sold their lives dearly, and died in arms. Courage without skill will not avail in the time of danger, and men of great natural courage will, from being unaccustomed to scenes of peril, lose their presence of mind at such moments. Knowledge such as is called for in the examinations of candidates for cadetships is very useful and actually necessary; such also as is acquired in the parade-ground is necessary; but they are not the only kinds of knowledge required by the soldier. One man accustomed to look danger in the face, feeling the consciousness of superiority over his enemy from knowledge of his weapons, is at the hour of peril worth a host of men who have not had a similar training. Danger which would appal others is to such a man a delight, and almost as necessary to him as the breath of life is the excitement attending such scenes. Few will be disinclined to indorse these opinions, the result of Captain Shakespear's varied experience, addressed as they are to those of his countrymen—not a few even in this practical generation—who are imbued with that thirst for adventure which has made India our great military school, and which has produced so many admirable officers in the course of our Eastern warfare. It is, of course, quite inconsistent with our purpose to follow Captain Shakespear through his amusing chapters on hog-hunting and tiger-shooting, his adventures with panthers, bears, buffaloes, wild elephants, and all the incidents which make the pursuit of sport in the forests and hills of India so grand and impressive; but we must be content with stating that his book is a minute manual of information relating to the chase and its accessories—from the requisite firearms down to the shape and colour of the covering for the head best adapted for the pursuit.

WALTHAM ABBEY SEAL.—SEE SUPPLEMENT, PAGE 507.

The chapter on the different breeds of horses used in India is full of knowledge of the subject; and here again his personal experience is so large that he is able to give information which is interesting to the general reader, as well as to those who look at the subject merely from a horse-dealing, or rather a horse-fancying, point of view; and the conclusion that even the most uninitiated must come to is, that horsemen par excellence have a fine field for the exercise of their tendencies and qualities in India.

The dissertation on the formation of light irregular cavalry is admirable in itself, and of moment as a guide to the improvement of a military arm which is, or at any rate ought to be, in process of rapid transition. Captain Shakespear, as a cavalry officer, naturally enough protests against the use to which cavalry is put in modern warfare. He complains that it is no longer employed to decide battles, that is, kept back sometimes until the flight of the enemy and the end of the battle—the men sick from vainly longing to attack; the horses tired out from having been without food perhaps for many hours, and from being crushed with the weight of the modern dragoon and his cumbersome accoutrements. This arm, then, is only employed to cut up a flying enemy, or to intercept the baggage. Either duty is repulsive to the feelings of a soldier, and especially of a soldier on horseback. Starting with that which is now almost a truism—namely, that the error into which the great nations of Europe have fallen in the formation of their cavalry is in imposing such an excessive weight on the horses, on riders, and accoutrements, and instead of reducing this enormous weight by recruiting only light, active men, and putting them into light saddles, disencumbering them of sabretaches, valises, and other useless paraphernalia, they continue to retain the heavy soldier and his heavy accoutrements, and vainly endeavour to obtain an animal capable of carrying it all—our author proceeds to lay down his ideas of the mode in which a really effective cavalry may be formed. His observations on this subject are every way worthy of consideration, and bring to a conclusion a book which is as full of instruction with regard to the matter with which it deals as it is modest and unpretending in its tone and style.

EL FUREIDIS. By MARIA S. CUMMINS. Sampson Low and Co.

The authoress of this book is known to the public as an American lady who has written one or two popular works in that peculiar style of which Mrs. Stowe has been the founder, and among which "The Lamplighter" is, we believe, the best known. In the work before us she essays a higher flight, and breaks altogether new ground. There appears to be a growing inclination on the part of travelled Americans to give to the world the benefit of their experience of other lands. Of course, we in Europe would rather that they continued to afford us specimens of their national literature, in the sense of works written on American subjects, and descriptive of American life and manners; but, in so thinking, we do not consider that, in taking up subjects which relate to foreign countries, they are yielding only to a natural feeling which influences them when they are addressing their own home public. In the present work Mrs. Cummins has done for the East something like that which Nathaniel Hawthorne has recently done for Rome—that is to say, she has interwoven in a romance, the main characters of which are natives of the Western World, Eastern scenery and Eastern habits. "El Fureidis," the name which gives the title to the book, is a village, lovely and picturesque, situated in Mount Lebanon, watered by the springs of Barak—the home of the mountain rose, the garden of Lebanon. The words themselves signify the paradise, the happy valley. Here is brought an English traveller on whose adventures are founded a tale which is made the vehicle of descriptions of Syrian scenery and manners, including, of course, Beyrout and its neighbourhood, Maronite convents, and so on—all of which are introduced naturally, and as accessories to the story, the work being something on the plan of Mr. Disraeli's "Tancred." There is some good painting of Bedouin life, and, on the whole, we have an agreeable book of travels under the guise of what we suppose we must call a novel, which, if it does not take us into wholly unknown regions, yet bears with it all the freshness of first impressions and strong traces of fidelity.

INTRODUCTION TO THE HISTORY OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. By ROBERT DEMAUS, M.A. A. and C. Black.

Mr. Demaus is already favourably known as the author of more than one excellent educational work. His "Class-book of English Prose," which comprehended specimens of the most distinguished prose-writers, from Chaucer to the present time, has been universally accepted as a valuable contribution to scholastic literature. The book before us is, in some sense, a supplement to the volume in question. It has been the author's aim to provide a manual which, though brief, shall be sufficiently comprehensive to serve as an introduction to the history of English literature, and to prepare the reader for entering profitably on the study of more elaborate compilations. The work is divided into four periods. The first includes the earliest times down to 1590, and it dwells on early Celtic, Saxon, and Latin literature, the Anglo-Saxon language, Saxon poetry, the English language after the Conquest; the semi-Saxon period, the old English period, Chaucer and his contemporaries, literature in Scotland, English literature from Chaucer to Caxton, that under Henry VII. and Henry VIII., that connected with the Reformation, early Elizabethan literature, progress of the drama in England, and literature in Scotland from 1450 to 1590. The second period ranges from 1590 to 1702, and is equally comprehensive, but the subject matter becomes more familiar. The third, from 1702 to 1789, brings us to Pope and his contemporaries, and is by so much less recondite; while the fourth and last, from 1789 to 1860. The mode in which all this is done, the arrangement, and the succession of matter, are exceedingly good, the process being takingly inductive. Altogether this is an admirable proof of how good a small book may be.

OUT AND ABOUT. By HAIN FRISWELL. Groombridge and Sons.

This book contains a boy's adventures, written for adventurous boys, by a hand which has been well tried in this by no means facile class of literature, and which has been eminently successful. It is certainly true, as Mr. Friswell observes in his preface, that it is no mean thing to write a book for boys; possibly to write a thoroughly good book for them is one of the most difficult achievements in literature, for the boys whom a writer wishes to address are great workers and thinkers too. The object of this book being to help and teach, to amuse, and to silently instil love and faith, boldness of heart, trust and honesty, in such boys, it may safely be said that such an object has been successfully attained. The incidents, though striking, are not exaggerated and are naturally introduced, while each of them, we are assured, has the great merit of being true. When we add that the book is illustrated by George Cruikshank, we hope we have put forward the crowning claim to its favourable reception by those for whom it is intended.

THE SEVEN SISTERS OF SLEEP. By M. C. COOKE.

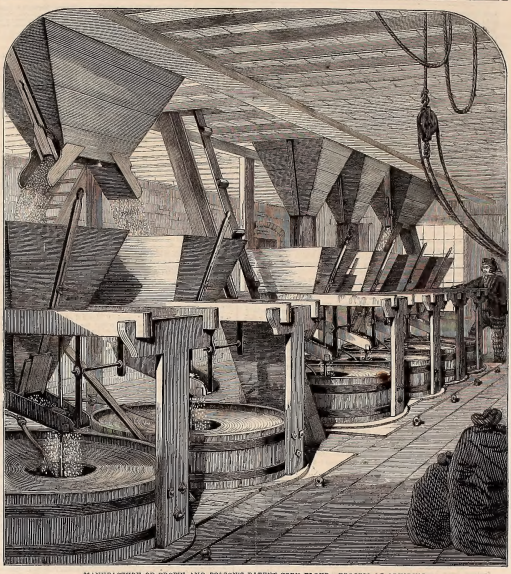
This is not a fairy tale, but a popular history of the seven prevailing narcotics of the world, including tobacco, opium, henbane, stramonium, &c., in all the various forms in which they are used in different parts of the world. The work opens somewhat fancifully and allegorically, and the general vein of its more precise portions is that of banter. Nevertheless, there runs through it an elaborate description of narcotics, their sources, preparations, the mode in which they are administered, and their effects, while statistics of their consumption are given with great fulness, and we presume with sufficient accuracy, the history of soporifics is traced from the earliest times, half fabulously, half seriously, and the book, taken altogether, has a touch of originality about it which, notwithstanding the nature of the subject, is well calculated to keep the reader awake. It need hardly be said that its opinions are condemnatory of the use of narcotics, and its purpose that of warning by example.

MANUFACTURE OF PATENT CORN FLOUR.

ONE of the most important constituents of food derived from the vegetable kingdom is the amylaceous matter which is contained in all plants. This substance exists in the form of minute grains or granules which can only be seen by the microscope, but which are easily separated from the substances in which they are contained by the knowledge of the fact that they are insoluble, and easily dispersible through water. It is in this way that the amylaceous matter is separated from various plants, under the names of sago, tapioca, starch, and arrowroot. This amylaceous matter is one of the most important constituents of all vegetable food; and by being separated from the other parts of the plant it is more easily cooked, and thus rendered more digestible.

Amongst other vegetable substances which have been employed for the production of this amylaceous matter are the grains of wheat, rice, and other cereal grasses. But it has been found that none of these plants yield it so abundantly and of such excellent quality as the grain of the maize or Indian corn. This is a native of the continent of America, and was not known in Europe till after the discovery of the New World. What wheat is to the natives of Europe, rice to the inhabitants of Asia, maize is to the inhabitants of both North and South America.

The maize plant is called by botanists the "Zea Mays," and belongs, with wheat, barley, oats, rye, rice, and the sugar-cane, to the family of grasses. The produce of this plant is very large. The stalk grows seven or eight feet in height, and bears two sorts of flowers: those bearing the stamens are in separate panicles at the top of the plant, whilst those bearing the pistils, which become the grain, are borne on the sides of the plant. When the grains are ripened they are arranged in five or six rows around a common axis, and are then called cobs, which contain as many as 700 or 800 grains. There are many sorts of maize which differ in the size of the cobs as well as in the size and number of the grains which they contain. Some sorts are of a pale or golden yellow, whilst others are reddish or purple. The grains are roundish and compressed, and vary in size from a grain of wheat to a kidney-bean.



The maize plant is said to grow wild at the present day in the northern regions of Mexico and in the southern districts of the Rocky Mountains. It is, however, now cultivated in the tropics of America, and its culture extends to lat. 40 deg. in both North and South America. It yields its greatest produce in damp tropical climates. Since the discovery of the New World its culture has extended to every other quarter of the globe. It is extensively cultivated in Europe as high as 50 deg. and 52 deg. north latitude. It is also produced in the West India Islands, on the coasts of Africa, and in the East Indies and China. In many of these countries its culture is rapidly extending, and it bids fair to vie with rice and wheat in feeding the human family. In the United States alone the yearly produce of this grain is estimated at 600,000,000 bushels.

The productiveness of this plant being so great it is not to be wondered at that efforts have been made to cultivate it in Great Britain, and many years ago the late William Cobbett of political celebrity wrote a book on its virtues, recommending it to the British farmer. The leaves and straw make good paper, and Mr. Cobbett's book was printed on paper made of this material. Many experiments were tried, but these have always been failures, arising from the fact that the average temperature of our seasons is not sufficiently high for ensuring the constant ripening of the grain. In some seasons it will succeed, but in others it entirely fails, and on this account it is probable that maize will never become a constant field crop in Great Britain. It is used as food in various stages of its growth. The green cobs are gathered and cooked like peas or asparagus, and afford a very agreeable article of diet. For this purpose the maize might be grown in England. This plant has also been employed in the manufacture of sugar. Like the other cereals, it contains a considerable quantity of sugar in its stem, which may be extracted in the same way as from the sugar-cane.

The consumption of maize in England was very small till the occurrence of the potato disease in 1856. As a substitute for the deficiency of this crop it was largely imported in that year, and from that time about 1,800,000 quarters have been annually imported into Great Britain. More than half of this is furnished from the ports of the Mediterranean and Black Sea.

When the grain is ripened it is usually dried before a fire and ground into meal, which is called "hominy." This is used like oatmeal for making porridge, or for puddings and cakes. It does not make a pleasant bread, but is made use of for this purpose by mixing with wheaten flour. It is a wholesome and nutritious food, and contains, naturally, a larger quantity of fatty matter than other cereal grains. The following gives the constituents of a pound of Indian corn meal:—Water, 2 oz. 105 grains; gluten, 1 oz. 402 grains; amylaceous matter, 9 oz. 262 grains; sugar and gum, 21 grains; fat, 1 oz. 101 grains; woody fibre, 350 grains; ashes, 70 grains. It will be seen that the amylaceous matter exists in the proportion of sixty per cent, or nearly ten ounces in the pound. It is to the extraction of this substance, and preparing it as an article of diet, that English ingenuity has been recently applied, and a great success has been the result. By the application of machinery on a large scale Messrs. Brown and Polson, of Paisley, have succeeded in obtaining a farina which is superior to any which has been produced from the other cereals, and is at the present moment extensively consumed.

In the annexed Engravings are given two Views of the interior of the establishment at Paisley where Messrs. Brown and Polson's "Patent Corn Flour," as it is called, is manufactured. The process of preparation is a very simple one, and easily understood. The grain which is used for this purpose is generally the round variety, shipped from the ports of the Black Sea. It is first steeped in water, in order to soften it, and render the subsequent separation of the amylaceous matter more effectual. It is also thus thoroughly cleansed from any external impurities. It is then placed in large hoppers, and conducted to the grindstones whilst still in a moist state, as seen in the first Engraving. The grindstones are worked by steam power, and the whole of the grain is reduced to a pultaceous mass, in which the gluten, the husk and other matters, are mixed with the amylaceous matter. The next object is to separate the latter from the former. This is effected by placing the semi-liquid mass in long tables or runs, called inclined planes, which are arranged along the upper part of the building, as seen in the second Engraving. During the slow descent of the fluid along these planes the amylaceous matter is deposited on the bottom of the inclined plane, whilst the more liquid portion, carrying the glutinous portions of husk and woody fibre, passes from these runs through long pipes into large cisterns below. These latter substances are afterwards taken out of the cisterns and dried and ground. As they still contain valuable constituents of food they are sold under the name of "gluten."

The pure farina which is deposited on the inclined planes is then transferred to large vats, where it is further cleansed by repeated washings in pure water. After its final deposition it is removed and placed in frames, and dried at a low temperature. It is then conveyed to a separate establishment, where it is made into packages of various sizes previous to being sent to the warehouse.

Brown and Polson's patent corn flour is a food adapted for general family use, and may be employed in making puddings, custard, blancmange, ice-creams, and for thickening soups. It is especially adapted for the same uses as arrowroot in the diet of young children and invalids.

We are informed that specimens illustrating this valuable manufacture have been placed in the Museum of the Royal Botanical Gardens, Kew, and the Food Department of the South Kensington Museum.

PROTESTANT CHURCH AT LUCERNE.—A GERMAN PROTESTANT CHURCH is now being erected at Lucerne, but, as a large sum is still required to complete the building the generous aid of the English is solicited, not alone on the broad principle of Protestantism, but because the gratuitous use of the new Church has been most willingly granted for the performance of the English Church Service at Lucerne—an accommodation which will be the more appreciated by all English visitors to one of the most beautiful spots in Switzerland, as the Roman Catholic church used hitherto is so difficult of access that invalids are generally excluded from all possibility of attending. Donations will be thankfully received in London by John Rapp, Esq., Consul-General for Switzerland; Messrs. Nisbet and Co., Booksellers, 21, Berners-street; Rev. Messo Thomas, 9, Serjeant's-inn, Fleet street; Messrs. Coutts and Co., Bankers, to the credit of Messrs. Knorr and Son, Bankers, in Lucerne.

THE INSURRECTION IN SICILY.—Garibaldi's descent on Sicily having drawn public attention in an extraordinary degree to that island, we have dispatched thither, as Special Artist and Correspondent of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, Mr. Frank Vizetelly, who was engaged in a similar capacity throughout the whole of the recent campaign in Northern Italy; and we trust soon to receive from him Sketches and Descriptive Details of a deeply-interesting character.

ADVERTISEMENTS for the DOUBLE NUMBER of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS next week cannot be received later than midday on Thursday, the 31st inst.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 26, 1860.

IT would not be surprising if Lord Derby himself, when the flush and fever of his triumph in the Upper House has subsided, should feel that he has originated a difficulty, the end of which he has by no means calculated on. There can be little doubt that the recent proceedings of the Conservative party are aimed against a section of the present Ministry, which includes Lord J. Russell, Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. Milner Gibson. We thoroughly believe Lord Derby's disclaimer of any desire to enter on the responsibilities of office at this juncture in public affairs. There was much significance in his statement that, looking at the critical condition of European politics, and even considering the state of things at home, it would be undesirable to remove Lord Palmerston from the Premiership. The deduction from this is obvious enough. If the Cabinet could be weeded of those statesmen whose policy is indorsed by Mr. Bright there is little to prevent a sufficiently cordial co-operation between those officials who might remain under the Leadership of Lord Palmerston and the party which follows Lord Derby in the one House and Mr. Disraeli in the other. Parliamentary Reform and financial tentativeness might then, it is hoped, be indefinitely shelved, and political action be reduced to that humdrum condition which, without being positively obstructive, would be at least sluggish in its progress. Assuming this to be the motive which has influenced recent transactions, we cannot help wondering at the judicial blindness which has dictated the choice of the machinery for effecting the object in view. If the House of Commons had rejected the bill for the repeal of the duty on paper it could hardly have had any other result than the resignation of Mr. Gladstone, Lord J. Russell, and Mr. Milner Gibson, and so have led to that reconstruction of the Government at which the movement of the Conservative party is supposed to be aimed. But the course taken—of bringing the House of Lords into direct opposition to a vote of the House of Commons, and that on a question of taxation, is calculated to produce exactly the contrary effect. In the first place, it is plain that a hostile division in the Lords is not received as such a condemnation of the Ministry as involves their resignation as a body, or the retirement of any particular section of the Cabinet. In the next place, there is a probability, almost amounting to a certainty, that a feeling will be aroused in the country in reference to the propriety (we say nothing about the abstract right to reject money bills) of the Lords dealing directly with a question of taxation, and that in a sense adverse to the declared opinion of the Commons. There has been for some time past no disposition in the public mind even to canvass the advantage of a second Chamber in the Legislature of the character and organisation of the House of Lords; and, more than that, the conduct pursued by the Peers has been so prudent, and at the same time, as a general rule, so dignified, that it is not too much to say that they have been held in estimation and respect as a valuable constitutional establishment. Now, however, they have invited criticism, they have forced on the public mind the consideration even of their admitted legal rights; and who shall say, when once an inquiry of this sort is instituted, where it will stop? With every readiness to allow the value of the House of Lords as a machine for the final filtration of legislative measures, consenting to its necessity as a Parliamentary court of review, we cannot refrain from hinting that in its elements and its construction it possesses no such principle of invulnerability as to cause its members to be utterly indifferent to its being submitted to the test of popular judgment, even under the calmest and most deliberative cirucmstances. We should sincerely deprecate any wild and thoughtless attacks upon or any mere clamour against that assembly; but what we would desire to indicate is that, if brought to the test of reasonable and statesmanlike examination, there would be found no such inherent strength in its constitution as to render it unapproachable to amendment, or to exclude the consideration of its being comprehended in a general scheme of Parliamentary reform.

When the immediate question involved in the vote of the House of Lords has been disposed of, however that may be done, a much larger and a much more enduring subject for reflection will arise, if it has not already arisen. However acute lawyers and subtle rhetoricians may reason, the fact stands confessed that by departing from the prescription of many years the House of Lords has initiated a system of legislation that, to the present generation at least, is wholly novel, and the effect of which is too important to be neutralised by powerful speeches contending for—and, if you like, proving—constitutional and legal rights. It is impossible to disguise that a tax has been imposed on the people of this country by the House of Lords in direct contravention of the vote of the House of Commons. No doubt a minority of that House was of opinion that the time was not opportune for repealing the excise duty upon paper; but it should be remembered that the removal of that impost was an incident in a great plan, a main feature of which was the imposition of an additional penny to the income tax. The opponents of the repeal of the paper duty in that House coupled the amount of the income tax with the question of that repeal, and they formally attempted to retain the duty on paper, or, in the alternative, to reduce the percentage on the income tax to 9d. in the pound. But in no sense did the House of Commons consent to, and they did not discuss, any proposition to retain the 10d. income tax and the excise duty on paper as well. The consequence has been that the House of Lords has taken upon itself the responsibility of fixing a burden of taxation on the people of this country which the Lower House not only did not impose, but which they refused to impose. The obvious deduction from this state of things is that there has been an absolute and immediate violation of the great principle that taxation and representation are inseparable. The two branches of the Legislature have thus been placed in a false position in relation to each other, to say the least of it. It remains to be seen whether they may not yet be brought into direct collision. Of the final issue of such a contest it is, of course, useless to speak. Any serious struggle between the representatives of the people and hereditary legislators, however worthy they may be personally and collectively of their high position—one adapted, as we freely admit, to be of the utmost service to the country—will soon cease to be confined to two classes of combatants; a third, and a mightier than either, will inevitably intervene, and the issue will not be for a moment doubtful.

It is because we conscientiously desire that the House of Lords should retain its fair share of power in the governing system of the country—that it should continue to hold its place as an institution of the country which exercises an influence which is not the less valuable because it is, to a certain extent, latent and insensible—that we seriously hope that the false step which has been taken, if it cannot be retraced, will be by implication disavowed. If—taking counsel of the experience of facts rather than of the special pleading of some of its members, who, in the nature of things, must suffer from a dimness of vision in reference to the spirit and the feeling of a generation from which they themselves have practically passed away, and who seek to introduce the technical refinements and niceties of the forum into the discussion of great constitutional and popular subjects—the House of Lords will, as they may easily do, show signs that they recognise the commission of an error, and indicate an intention of abstaining from falling into such a mistake again; it is quite possible that that which is actually and in itself a crisis in our Governmental and Parliamentary system may be averted. But if—in the fulness, not to say the foolishness, of their hearts, and trusting to the numerical strength of a party, the bulk of the members of which, in the Upper House at least, can be collected together and driven together in a manner characteristically bucolical—they persist in maintaining an attitude of hostility to the representatives of the people in Parliament, let them be assured that they court no temporary peril and face no passing danger, but they will be simply inaugurating a state of things in reference to their existent constitution which will be simply the beginning of the end.

THE great metropolitan holiday of Wednesday was favoured with the most splendid weather, and it might have been that fact, or it might have been the desire to witness the lutte between the famous American horse and his British competitors, or it might have been the increased prestige given to the festival by the Premier making the Derby "a Government measure," but the assemblage on Epsom Downs was exceedingly large, and the road was as crowded as it used to be in the days before railroads were invented. There are but two real sights in the world, said a great man—Niagara and the Derby; and assuredly our American visitors, already acquainted with the first, had a magnificent opportunity of enjoying the second. The appearance of the myriads of eager faces when the start was effected was almost appalling—one would have said that there was a concentration of mesmerism there which would have secured the triumph of any given animal if the operators could only have been unanimous in their desire. As it was, neither of our leading politicians, Lords Palmerston and Derby was doomed to be successful, nor could the American win, nor was Sir Joseph to add a third to his Derby laurels—Mr. Merry's Thormanby winning in a brilliant manner after a beautiful race. The thousands on thousands that turned out to see and cheer the Derbyites on their return by road were as wonderful a sight as the Downs, and, in short, the Derby Day of 1860 was a "great day."

Lord Brougham has been inaugurated as the head of Edinburgh University, and has delivered a very vast oration, perhaps more remarkable for the excellence of its parts than for its structure as a whole; but it is ungrateful to cavil at a speaker who poured out such a flood of wise things, great and small, as Lord Brougham bestowed upon the alumni and others who assembled to grace his day of honour. As usual, Lord Brougham recommended the extreme of perseverance and energy, and was specially earnest in enforcing upon those who wished to become orators the duty of preparing and considering their speeches, citing his own experience in proof of the splendid effect which can be produced by well-studied passages. This doctrine may be offensive to but it will commend itself to the thoughtful. As an exhibition of intellect and power Lord Brougham's inaugural speech will rank very high.

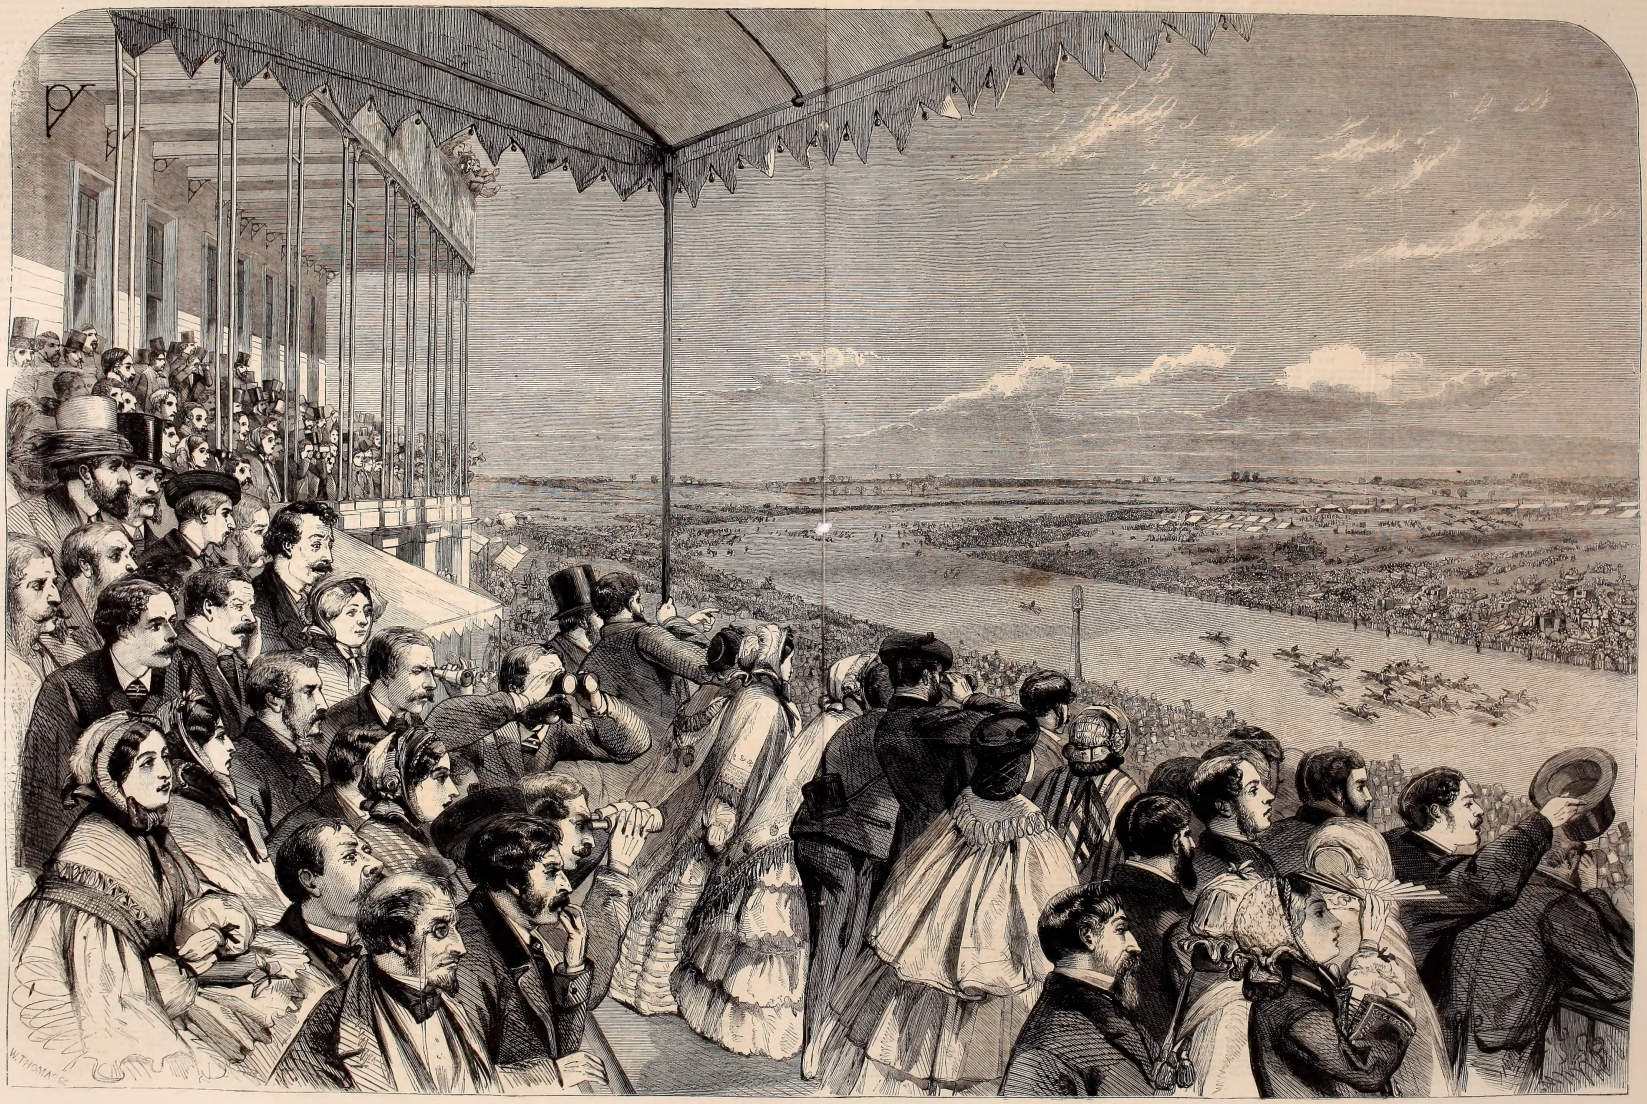
The death of Mr. Albert Smith, who it was hoped had recovered from the effects of a recent visitation of illness, has produced a painful sensation both among the public, with whom he was deservedly a first favourite, and in the large circle of his private friends, to whom he was endeared by his genuine good heartedness. His death has certainly "eclipsed the harmless gaiety of a metropolis." Mr. Albert Smith's last entertainment was given on Saturday afternoon, and early on Wednesday morning he yielded to the combined influences of congestion of the lungs and bronchitis, dying on the day before his birthday. He was for a considerable time the theatrical critic of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The Dowager Countess of Mansfield: The will and two codicils of the Right Honourable Frederica Countess of Mansfield were proved in the principal registry of London on the 21st of May, by Sir George Clerk, Bart.; William John Law, Esq., the nephew; and the Right Honourable Lady Elizabeth Anne Murray, the daughter, the executors and trustees. The personalty was sworn under £70,000. The will and codicils were made in August, 1851. Her Ladyship disposes of her property amongst her sons and daughters, with the exception of a small bequest to her sister. To each of her four daughters she leaves a pecuniary legacy, and to the three who are unmarried she leaves for their joint use the whole of her furniture, plate, linen, china, jewellery, ornaments of the person, carriages, and all other effects, except funded property; the latter her Ladyship has left to be equally divided—one moiety to the children of her late son, the Hon. Charles John Murray; and the other moiety to her son, the Hon. David Henry Murray, and to his wife and children; and, should they not acquire vested interests therein, then to devolve to those who may be surviving of her said younger son and daughters. The Countess survived her husband, the late Earl, twenty years, his Lordship having died in 1840. Her Ladyship was in her eighty-seventh year, and was the daughter of the late Dr. Markham, Archbishop of York.



The Honourable D. Hooft: The will of the Hon. Daniel Hooft, Jacobzoon, Knight of the Order of the Netherlands Lion, late of the city of Amsterdam, was proved in London on the 7th of May by the Hon. Hendrick Baron van Slingelandt van Goedschalkxoort and Jacob Baron van Slingelandt, both of the Hague, the executors. This is a Dutch testamentary instrument, and it contains the peculiarity incident to the customs of the country. The directions of the testator are that his effects in Great Britain and Ireland should be administered to by the gentlemen above named, but without reference to any disposition thereof. It bears date the 11th of April, 1850, and he died at Amsterdam on the 18th of February last.

Sir Peter Soame, Bart.: The will and codicil of Sir Peter Soame John Everard Buckworth Herne Soame, Bart., formerly residing at Heydon, Essex, but late of Little Chishill, in the same county, were proved in London on the 10th of May by Thomas Benjamin Proctor, M.D., of Stockwell, one of the executors, G. B. Gregory, Esq., the other executor, having renounced. The personalty was sworn under £18,000. The will bears date the 3rd of May, 1843. He has bequeathed to each of his two brothers, John and Charles, a legacy of £1000, or to their children, and the residue of his property he leaves to his wife and children.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS IN THE CHURCH.—The Rev. W. W. Harvey, Rector of Buckland, Herts, to be Surrogate for the diocese of Rochester; Rev. J. Thornhill to be Prebendary of Tassagard St. Patrick, Dublin; Rev. J. Cross to be Rector of Mursley, Bucks; Rev. H. J. Muskett to be Rector of Clippesby, Norfolk; Rev. R. Mollan to be Vicar of Ballinakill, Tuam; Rev. W. Riddin to be Vicar of Meriden, Warwickshire; Rev. A. Delap to be Perpetual Curate of Millford, Ireland; Rev. S. Martin to be Perpetual Curate of Convoy, Raphoe; Rev. J. Smithard to be Perpetual Curate of Cramlington, Northumberland.—Guardian.

The examination of candidates for admission to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, by the Council of Military Education, at the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, will commence on Monday, June 4, and will extend over the five following days; the next examination of candidates for admission to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, is to be held before the Council of Military Education, at the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, on Saturday, the 30th of June; and the examination of candidates for direct commissions by the Council of Military Education is appointed to commence at the Royal Hospital, Chelsea, on Wednesday, the 20th proximo, and will occupy six days.

THE FRENCH MEDITERRANEAN FLEET.—The Moniteur de la Flotte contains the following information relative to the Mediterranean fleet:—"Some journals have announced that the Mediterranean fleet had sailed, some giving Constantinople for its destination, others Sicily. We are informed, on the contrary, that Admiral De Tinan has not quitted the anchorage at the Isles of Hyères, and we have further reason to believe that he will not leave it unless some unexpected circumstances should arise. One division, however, under the command of Rear-Admiral Jehenne, is about to sail for the Bay of Naples. The Mediterranean fleet is at present composed of the following ships:—The Bretagne, of 140 guns, bearing the flag of Vice-Admiral Lebarbier de Tinan; the Algesiras, 90 guns, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Paris; the Donawerth, 80 guns, bearing the flag of Rear-Admiral Jehenne; the Alexandre, Eylau, Imperial, and Redoubtable, each of 90 guns; the St. Louis, of 80 guns; and the steam-frigate Foudre, of 60 guns. The steel-plated frigate Gloire, [illegible] guns, is being fitted fo Toulon."

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

ON Monday evening the state of things in Palace-yard and all the accessible avenues of the Houses of Parliament was literally an affair of police. One formed some sort of idea of those occasions when Lord George Gordon led his No-Popery mob down to overawe the Senate of England, and when the Duke of Wellington rode grimly through a pelting and hooting crowd of outside Parliamentary Reformers, the most courageous of whom ran away from the Marquis of Londonderry's unloaded pistol, which was not even a revolver. Nevertheless, if the demonstration was meant to indicate an idea that the Constitution was in danger, the feeling could not have been very deep-seated, for the spectators were quiet enough, and they were by no means good continuers, for by eight o'clock they had all dispersed, and the deliberations of the House of Lords were not interrupted by any external uproar, any more than the dullest of all possible debates was excited or stimulated by cheers within. At an early hour there was little evidence in the gilded chamber of the Peers of the advent of what has been irreverently called an "opera night" in the Upper House. The Peers were comparatively few, and the ladies sparsely scattered over the seats in the gallery in the vicinity of the throne. No doubt this arose from the belief that the debate on the Paper Duty Bill would be commenced by Lord Monteagle, and the customary attendants on gala occasions in the Lords did not think it necessary to hurry themselves, even if they did not take care not to be in time for an oration of that Monsieur Jourdain of Parliament. Of course Lord Derby was in his glory, every line of his expressive but not beautiful countenance lighted up with that animation which runs riot through his veins when he is pursuing that great idea of his political life—namely, labouring hard at cutting the ground from under his own feet. Once more he was eagerly engaged in ruining himself and his party; playing with his utmost energy that losing game in public affairs which he has always seemed to love so much; exhibiting his intense prejudice in favour of impossible causes, and so making up his political book that under no possible circumstances could he ultimately win.

As we have said, the first appearance of things was not indicative of an extraordinary display either as regarded the actors or the spectators; but when it was found that Lord Granville meant to move the second reading in a set speech, and not to reserve himself for a reply at the end of the night, the House began to fill in all its departments; and in a short time, as one looked at the benches on each side, it was notable that the demonstration was to be ocular, visible, and palpable, as well as moral—that is to say, that votes were to be given in person as far as possible, and without much trusting to proxies. On both sides the regular frequenters of the House looked on a long array of unknown faces, and, especially on the Conservative side, it was apparent that the peerage had been assiduously galvanised for an occasion when they were to meet and to beard the Commons' House of Parliament. Lord Granville played his game all along on the losing hazard. He seemed to anticipate no other result than defeat, and all he could do was to urge his opponents, for their own sakes, to take care lest they did not find their victory something like that of Pyrrhus over the Romans. The next move in the debate certainly showed admirable tact. Instead of allowing the mover of the amendment, which was to defeat the bill, to come forward at once, the course was taken of ministering to a prime and enduring delusion under which the House of Lords suffer, by putting up Lord Lyndhurst. There was something effectively melodramatic in such proceeding. No one denies the miraculous aspect which was displayed by that noble and learned, and—but for his persistence in wearing a youthful wig, and the elaborately-fitting garments of a man of thirty—venerable Peer, when on his eighty-eighth birthday he stood up, and, leaning on a handrail which had been specially constructed in front of his seat for his use, he spoke a series of clear, well-turned, and consecutive sentences, dealing solely with the constitutional question of privilege, and that certainly with a dexterity and adroitness worthy of the best days of that Copley who was the subtlest arguer at the Bar in the days when there were giants in the Courts at Westminster. There can be no doubt of the effect; but still there was something painful in witnessing the glimmering of a Mephistophelian intellect; and again, as often before of late years, one could not but hope that this was the last appearance of Lord Lyndhurst on a scene where he is tempted to linger by that scarce kindly adulation with which he is greeted and encouraged by his friends. When he had concluded, that critical moment had arrived when Peers feel that they are but men; and that they must dine; and, with a still greater exhibition of tact, Lord Monteagle was called on to do his prosing, and to occupy the time while the process of restoration was going on. He was indulged to the top of his bent, and he got his hour and three-quarters of bald, disjointed chat, delivered to an empty House, and with only one or two lingering occupants of the steps of the throne, which previously and afterwards were crammed to suffocation by Peers' sons and Privy Councillors, among whom Sir John Lawrence was conspicuous. It was not a little amusing to see the way in which Lord Granville actually pulled the Marquis of Clanricarde, who rose next, into his seat, in order to make make way for Lord Dufferin, who, besides the hereditary right of a Sheridan on the mother's side to speak for literature, and especially for Mrs. Norton and the authoresses and lady poets, has himself a well-founded claim to argue in favour of untaxed paper. Nothing could be neater or more graceful than his speech, delivered, too, with a modesty amounting to hesitancy, which was every way becoming in a young legislator.

About this time Lord Shaftesbury was observed to take a seat on the Bishops' bench, and, looking to the manner in which he afterwards cheered Lord Derby's speech, and also to the fact that he voted against the Government, the circumstance gave rise to a sarcastic remark that he was endeavouring to use his influence with the Prelates assembled, the great majority of whom had been appointed by the Whigs, most of them by Lord Palmerston, and, as the rumour goes, by consequence on Lord Shaftesbury's recommendation, to seduce them from their allegiance to the Premier, and to lead them into the hostile lobby. The debate had by this time reached a point at which the Duke of Argyll deemed it worthy of his interposition. It is very difficult to repress the sense of the ludicrous which the demeanour of this noble Lord inspires all who see and listen to him in debate. There is but one word to express what that demeanour is. It is essentially "cocky;" an epithet which is explainable to the uninitiated by a reference to the movements and attitudes of a sparrow on the housetops. It is censoriously said that the Duchess of Sutherland has declined to allow any Liberal Government to be formed of late years in whih the Duke of Argyll is not a Cabinet Minister. Her Grace therefore feels that she is responsible for her son-in-law, and on this as on all other occasions she made her appearance in the gallery, to watch and inspect her protégé, who, under the consequent inspiration of the presence of his patroness, thought it necessary to speak for a length of time, and in a tone which, if the issue of the contest had ever been doubtful, would have tended very much to strike the balance against his own party. Everybody knows that Lord Derby, who is a confirmed humorist, is infinitely amused at the notion which the Duke of Argyll seems to have adopted that it is his mission on every possible occasion to measure himself with the leader of the Opposition; and, when the Duke has not the opportunity of replying to the eloquent Earl, why, Lord Derby facetiously indulges the whim of one who probably reminds him of a spoiled child, and rises to follow him. In this case his doing so was a necessity if the debate was to be closed that night. It is to be remarked that Lord Derby's voice has very much weakened of late, and he speaks in a reedy, squeaking tone, and with a thickness of utterance which renders his elocution extremely like Lord Stanley's. This time there was nothing in the subject matter of his speech to stir him to that pitch of impassioned energy which causes him at times to talk like a modulated whirlwind and to roll out those long, grand, and beautifully-turned sentences which seem to reverberate and to swell like the tones of an organ. It may have been fancy, but we thought we detected a touch of nervousness, and certainly there was an absence of that heartiness, that abandon, which usually characterises his speeches. No doubt the line he took was not calculated to bring out his special qualities, for his address was all Gladstone, in the literal sense of the phrase. He Hansardised the Chancellor of the Exchequer in the most unsparing style, and, strangest of all, he did not indulge his audience with one of those perorations for which he is so famous. In truth, it is a treat to those who love oratory to see Lord Derby, after he has concluded the argumentative part of a speech, pause, draw himself up to his full height, and then, with a rushing noise, as of a trumpet loud but with a silvery sound, sweep to a conclusion. Now, he merely read the closing sentences of a speech of Mr. Gladstone, which so presented fell tamely on the ear, and he sat down without effect enough to produce a hearty cheer. Indeed the absence of all cheering during the debate was remarkable, and, on the whole, it may be said distinctly, as has been before hinted, it was decidedly dull; and certainly the ladies who sat it out must have wondered whether it was worth while to have occupied for such a lack of entertainment the time which would have enabled them to get through half a dozen balls that evening. If a great deed, and one which is to produce great consequences, was done that night, be sure it was very quietly done.

Next day the excited stranger who turned into the House of Commons, expecting to see a crowd of outraged members babbling and gesticulating their complaints of a breach of their high privileges, would have been surprised to see a very thin and a particularly languid House. Some were reckoning on seeing Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Milner Gibson giving that overt sign of resignation of office which consists in passing to a seat behind the Treasury bench, and ideas were entertained of beholding Lord John Russell strutting with an air of offended dignity to the remote corner in which Whig ex-Ministers brood over their blighted hopes. Others even hoped for the stimulating sight of Lord Palmerston rising and declaring that his Government only held office until the appointment of their successors. Nevertheless, the deflowered officials walked quietly into their usual places, and Mr. Gladstone methodically declared his arrangements for the progress of the measures under his immediate care; and when Lord Palmerston, in a very offhand, matter-of-course way indicated that he had some knowledge of a little event which had come off in the House of Peers the night before, by giving notice of a motion for a Committee to search for precedents as to proceedings of the Lords on money bills, nobody seemed to think that anything particular need be said at present, and the House rather indorsed the pooh-pooh manner in which the Premier and Sir George Lewis replied to the interpellations of such impressive and influential members as Mr. Whalley and Mr. Digby Seymour, who, of all others, seemed to suppose that the vindication of the privileges of their order was demanded at their hands. Every one else was content to wait until the following Thursday, the record of the proceedings of which exigencies of time and space compel us to postpone until next week.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS—MONDAY.

THE PAPER DUTY REPEAL BILL.

The scene presented on Monday night in the House of Lords, and in all the approaches thereto, can perhaps best be compared to the House of Commons on the Budget night. The House itself was crowded and in a flutter of excitement, while the lobby and the various passages were filled with persons who evidently took a deep interest in the great question which was about to be debated.

Earl GRANVILLE moved the second reading of the Bill for the Repeal of the Duty on Paper, a tax which he stated to have been imposed in the time of Queen Anne, and was stigmatised in both prose and verse by Swift. In 1832 an agitation commenced against the tax, and in 1835 the report of a Royal Commission recommended its reduction by one-half, which was done, and in consequence the consumption doubled, and the price became less. After the passing of resolutions of the House of Commons against it during the Government of Lord Derby, the present Government proposed its abolition, which was carried, after three divisions, in the House of Commons. It appeared that the opposition now made to it in their Lordships' House was not to be based on its merits, which had been repudiated by most of the leading men of Lord Derby's Ministry, and by that noble Lord himself. The objections to the tax were that it was vexatious in the collection, and it was so stated by the Board of Inland Revenue this year; it tended to prevent improvement in the manufacture of paper, and interfered with the application of new materials for the purpose. (The noble Earl created some laughter by reading an extract from Captain Osborne's book on Japan, showing the uses to which paper is put in that country.) He argued further, that the impost pressed on literature, and on newspapers, and particularly on cheaper books and school books, which were diffused among the poorer classes; and this was shown by the evidence of Messrs. Chambers and Charles Knight, while it had no effect on high-priced books, and still less on licentious works. With regard to the financial part of the question, the Government had come to the conclusion that this tax would not only be a greater relief to the consumer than that on tea and sugar, but was a less tenable impost. As to the improvidence of the Government in removing this tax, he was not going into financial statements, but from the course about to be taken that night he thought that financial statements would be necessary and a Vice-Chancellor of the Exchequer required in that House. He only contended that the financial scheme was based on principles calculated not merely to provide for the present year, but which would secure elasticity and give permanence to the revenue. As to the Chinese war, the financial scheme was made without knowing whether there would be war or not; and it was only that evening that it was known that there would be war. At this moment the balances in the Exchequer were two millions higher than last year, and he had it on the best authority that there was no fear of any deficiency in the revenue next year. Referring to the proposed amendment, he said that Lord Derby had always been unlucky in his prophecies, end especially in those of finance; and when he came forward to induce that House to take on themselves the functions of the House of Commons and the executive Government he ought to show some grounds for his financial estimates. The course proposed to be taken on the second reading of this money bill was, as he conceived, not in the spirit of the Constitution, for that House could not originate a tax or indirectly charge the people, although he did not deny their legal and technical right to reject it. It was also unjust to attempt to reverse a measure intended to relieve the people from the burden of taxation. Was it wise for that House to set the example of stretching constitutional rights to the utmost, and to take by surprise numbers of persons engaged in a trade which they supposed had been relieved from an excise duty by the House of Commons—a course which might bring the two Houses into difficulty if not into collision, leading to a series of jealousies and recrimination that would have a detrimental effect on the condition of the country in any eventuality which might arise out of the complication of foreign affairs, while just cause of complaint would be given against their Lordships' House, which never stood higher than now in public estimation?

Lord LYNDHURST, in reference to the question of privilege, admitted that that House had no right to amend or to originate a money bill, but there was no instance in which the Commons controverted their Lordships' right to reject a money bill. The noble and learned Lord quoted numerous authorities in support of this latter right. If they had not this right what was the use of discussing money bills, of which a remarkable instance was the debate which took place on the Succession Duty Bill? He also quoted several instances in which bills of this kind had been rejected by that House, and contended that there was no distinction in this respect between bills to relieve from, or to impose, taxes. The circumstances of the present time were such as to justify the House in exercising this right in reference to the preservation of a large source of revenue.

Lord REDESDALE here moved that the bar be cleared of all strangers except members of the House of Commons.

Lord MONTEAGLE then moved the rejection of the bill; and, having dealt with the question of privilege, proceeded to argue that in the present condition of the revenue, with the small surplus which was included in the calculation of the Budget already given, a war in China imminent, the affairs of Europe unsettled, and a large deficiency in the revenue of next year in prospect, it was not justifiable to give up a permanent resource like the paper duty. He especially urged the necessity of providing by anticipation for the revenue of the coming year.

Lord DUFFERIN, in supporting the bill, argued that the question at issue was one which involved the character of that House; and, while he fully admitted the power of the House to reject any bill sent up to them, it was contrary to precedent, to practice, and the usage of the Constitution, that that power should be exercised except in most extreme cases, of which the present was not one.

The Marquis of CLANRICARDE would, if the question had been merely a criticism on the Budget generally, have coincided with much that fell from Lord Monteagle, nor had he any doubt as to the constitutional right of the House to reject this bill; but he thought after the acceptance of the Customs Bill and the Income Tax their Lordships were bound to accept this bill as an integral part of the financial scheme which had been agreed to. The noble Lord argued very decidedly on the obstructive nature of the tax in reference both to its effect on literature and on manufacture.

The Duke of RUTLAND having spoken in favour of the amendment,

Lord CRANWORTH urged that the course proposed to be taken, if not strictly unconstitutional, was so thinly separated from it that to ordinary minds the difference would be unintelligible, and he contended that since the Revolution no such step as that of rejecting the repeal of a tax had been taken by that House. He pointed out that the precedents quoted by Lord Lyndhurst were cases all peculiar in their circumstances and exceptional in their nature.

Lord CHELMSFORD contended for the constitutional right of the House to reject this bill, which the opinion of the country justified them in doing. Unless they did so they would establish a precedent against their admitted privilege.

The Duke of ARGYLL entered on a general defence of the financial plans of the Government, and argued that a high rate of income tax in time of peace ought to be connected not only with a deficit of revenue, but with commercial reforms. The Government could not have proposed a high rate of income tax without some corresponding commercial reform. The circumstances in which the duty on paper was confessedly placed made the choice of that impost for remission very natural and proper. He did not deny the legal power of that House to reject any bill whatever, but legal power and right were wholly different matters from constitutional practice and prudence, and there was an accumulation of reasons why they should maintain that practice and exercise that prudence.

The Earl of DERBY, having briefly dealt with the argument on the constitutional part of the question, proceeded to consider the ground on which he objected to the abolition of the paper duty. He was glad that the Opposition had been initiated by a supporter of the Government, as it removed all chance of motives of a party character being attributed to him; and he sincerely assured the House that he had acted with no desire to embarrass, and still less to remove, the present Government. He had no desire to assume their responsibilities, nor did he think that in the present state of affairs in Europe any step which was likely to depose Lord Palmerston from office ought to be taken. His only object was to preserve for a deficient revenue a large available sum. He had agreed with Mr. Disraeli in the opinion that the paper duty was not a fitting subject for permanent revenue, but the circumstances of the finance of the country at the time he was in office were not such as to permit its abolition at that time, and he held that the circumstances which justified his assenting to the repeal then remained not only in existence but in aggravated force at this moment. Unskilled as he might be in finance, every argument he would use against the repeal of this tax would be those which were used by Mr. Gladstone himself in opposition to a Budget of Sir George Lewis. The noble Earl then proceeded to dissect the financial plan of the Government, arguing that it was founded on the paradox that the proper time to make financial alterations and remissions of taxations was when revenue was at its worst and deficiency at its height, trusting to throwing double or quits; and this he characterised not as the proceeding of a statesman but of a reckless and improvident gambler. The remission of the paper duty had, in fact, gone to swell a large deficiency for this year, and which would reach to twelve millions in the next. He then proceeded to quote from speeches of Mr. Gladstone in 1853 and 1857, which he maintained were utterly condemnatory of his present financial policy. The tendency of that policy was to substitute direct for indirect taxation, which was the object of the Manchester party. It was not solely on account of the loss incurred by the repeal of the paper duty, but with a view to counteract that tendency, that he opposed the bill now before the House.

Earl GRANVILLE having replied, the House divided.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

THE INSURRECTION IN SICILY.—In answer to Mr. Dalglish, Lord J. RUSSELL said that there was an instruction from the Foreign Office, issued in 1849, directing officers commanding British ships of war to extend the protection of the British flag to all persons, refugees or others, on the coasts of Naples and Sicily, as well as to persons similarly situated in other places.—In answer to Mr. A. Kinglake, Lord J. RUSSELL said he could not undertake to say what view the Powers of Europe, and especially France, took of the Sicilian insurrection, but, as far as he knew, neither Austria nor Spain intended to take any part on behalf of the Neapolitan Government.

THE REFRESHMENT HOUSES AND WINE LICENSES BILL, which stood to be considered as amended, was recommitted, for the purpose of adding certain clauses, after which the House resumed.

BANKRUPTCY AND INSOLVENCY BILL.—The House went into Committee on this Bill. The discussion of the clauses of this bill up to 24 occupied the greater part of the sitting.

The other orders were disposed of.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The Petitions of Right Bill passed through Committee.

The report of the Selling and Hawking Goods on Sunday Bill was received and agreed to.

The Weights and Measures Bill and the Adulteration of Food and Drink Bill were read a second time.

The Bankrupt Law (Scotland) Amendment Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Consolidated Fund (£9,500,000) Bill was read a second time.

CHURCH OF ST. GEORGE-IN-THE-EAST.—Viscount DUNGANNON called attention to the continued disturbances taking place on each succeeding Sunday in the church of St. George-in-the-East, and moved a resolution that sufficient power and energy had not been displayed in putting down the same, and bringing its perpetrators to punishment.—Earl GRANVILLE denied that any want of energy had been shown by the Executive, considering the difficulties and peculiarities of the circumstances with which they had to deal.—The Earl of WICKLOW asserted that both the police authorities and the police had neglected their duty. The noble Earl was referring to a letter of Mr. Bryan King, reflecting on the character of the Rev. H. Allen, when Earl GRANVILLE appealed to the House not to allow such a discussion to go on.—The Bishop of LONDON, however, proceeded to vindicate the character of the Rev. H. Allen, and added that he would do all in his power to put an end to the unseemly proceedings in the parish of St. George-in-the-East.—After some further discussion the subject dropped.

CEYLON RAILWAY.—In answer to the Earl of Carnarvon, the Duke of NEWCASTLE entered into a statement of the position of the Ceylon Railway, pointing out that its unfinished condition and the stoppage of the works arose from a report which had been received from the surveying engineer, raising the estimate of the expense of continuation from the original sum of £856,000 to upwards of two millions.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

THE HOUSE OF LORDS AND THE PAPER DUTY.—Lord PALMERSTON, in moving the adjournment of the House over Wednesday (the Derby Day), gave notice that he should move on Thursday for the appointment of a Select Committee to examine the journals of the House of Lords for precedents with reference to the course which had been adopted by that House with regard to the bill for the repeal of the paper duties. The noble Lord, however, disclaimed all intention of taking any step on the part of the Government which might bring the two Houses into collision, but said he thought it desirable that there should be an inquiry in order that the real position of the question might be ascertained.—At a subsequent period of the evening Mr. WHALLEY asked whether the Government contemplated any other step in connection with the unconstitutional proceeding of the Lords than that of the appointment of the Select Committee?—Sir G. C. LEWIS said he could add nothing to the statement made by Lord Palmerston.—Mr. DIGBY SEYMOUR charged the Government with being apathetic on the question, and suggested (amid ironical cheers) that the House should meet on the Derby Day to appoint the Select Committee.

ORDER OF PUBLIC BUSINESS.—On the motion of Lord PALMERSTON, it was agreed that on Thursdays, after Whitsuntide, Government orders of the day have precedence of notices of motion; and notices of motion have precedence on Fridays.

THE REGIUM DONUM.—Mr. BAXTER moved the following resolution:—"That this House is of opinion that the grant now annually made to non-conforming ministers in Ireland (commonly called the Regium Donum) should cease and be extinguished as speedily as is consistent with the just expectations of the recipients thereof, and, with this view, that no further grant should be made on account of 'new congregations,' nor to any existing congregations after the present ministers thereof shall have ceased, by death or otherwise, to be the ministers of such congregations."—Mr. CROSSLEY seconded the motion.—Mr. CONOLLY moved an amendment to the effect that the grant, having been so long sanctioned, ought to be no longer submitted to the criticism of that House, but ought to be charged upon the Consolidated Fund.—Mr. R. P. DAWSON seconded the amendment.—Mr. CARDWELL opposed both the motion and the amendment, contending that the Regium Donum was originally a grant substituted in lieu of tithes, and that it had always been productive of great good to the clergy and the country generally. On the whole, he regarded it as a most satisfactory settlement, for disturbing which no cause could be shown. The amendment was then withdrawn, and the House, dividing, negatived the original motion by 217 to 58; majority 159.

CORONERS' BILL.—Mr. COBBETT called attention to the report of the Select Committee on the office of coroner, and moved for leave to bring in a bill in accordance with its recommendations. Leave was given to bring in the bill.

THE DECAYED GUN-BOATS.—Sir F. SMITH moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the circumstances which have caused the alleged defective state of a considerable number of the gun and mortar boats and vessels of the Royal Navy. While the gallant member was speaking the House was counted out.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

CHURCH RATES.—Lord LYVEDEN gave notice that he would move the second reading of the Church Rates Bill on Thursday, the 14th of June.

UNION OF BENEFICES BILL.—This bill and the Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Bill severally passed through Committee.

The Consolidated Fund Bill (£9,500,000) was read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE PAPER DUTY QUESTION.—Lord PALMERSTON moved the appointment of a Committee to inspect the journals of the House of Lords in reference to any proceedings upon the Bill for the Repeal of the Duty upon Paper made in the United Kingdom, and to make a report thereof to the House.—The motion having been agreed to without observation, the noble Viscount then proceeded to the bar of the House and brought up a report containing the entry in the Lords' journals of the rejection of the Paper Duty Repeal Bill on Monday night. Upon the motion of the noble Viscount, the Committee were ordered to look for precedents.

Licenses Bill.—Upon the consideration of this bill as amended, several additional clauses proposed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer and other hon. members were discussed.

CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES.

Mr. Laing moved that the House should go into Committee of Supply in order to vote certain sums on account of the Civil Service Estimates, amounting in the aggregate to £400,000, and extending over ten votes.

Mr. A. Smith objected to going into Committee until the Estimates had been produced. The practice of granting money on account was a most objectionable one, and had increased of late years. He should, therefore, divide the House upon the proposition.

Mr. Walpole was of opinion that those Estimates ought to have been produced at an earlier period of the Session; but he could not assent to oppose the Speaker leaving the chair, because the Government might have reasons for the course they asked the House to take, which they might better state in Committee of Supply.

Lord H. Vane said the vote now asked was a small one, and he hoped it would not be made a precedent for voting larger sums on account in future.

Sir S. Northcote said that the question at issue was not one of amount, but of principle. If the sums asked for were granted it must be upon the understanding that the Estimates should be laid upon the table immediately after the Whitsuntide holidays.

Mr. Disraeli said that hitherto those votes on account had been granted only in extraordinary circumstances. No such case now existed. He, therefore, objected to the House being now called upon to create an entirely new precedent.

Lord Palmerston assured the House that there was a financial necessity for the proposed vote, not because the Exchequer was empty, but because the Government had not yet obtained a Parliamentary authority to apply the money. In the absence of that authority great inconvenience must arise. It was not the fault of the Government that the Estimates had been delayed to so late a period of the Session.

After some further conversation the House divided, when the motion for going into Committee of Supply was carried by a majority of 185 to 109.

The House then went into Committee of Supply, when the votes alluded to were agreed to.

Amongst the votes taken was one of £2500 in aid of the works for the improvement and enlargement of the harbour of Malta. The estimate for the whole was £111,000, half of which was to be paid by the colonial Government.

The Annexation Question.—On the motion for going into Committee of Supply, Lord J. Russell, in reply to Mr. Kinglake, said the Swiss Confederation had proposed to refer the question of Savoy to a Conference, and that her Majesty's Government had acquiesced in that proposal. Unless the Swiss Government withdrew from that proposition, or abandoned it, her Majesty's Government should continue to support it.

Lord C. Paget.—Personal Explanations.—Lord C. Paget called attention to a matter personal to himself. He had received a letter that morning from the hon. member for Tewkesbury (Mr. Lygon), giving him notice that he should, on that evening, allude to the rumours that were afloat as to a connection existing between him (Lord C. Paget) and the house of Messrs. Green, the shipbuilders, of Blackwall.—Mr. Lygon disclaimed any hostile feelings in the matter, but thought it due to the noble Lord himself to afford him the opportunity of offering an explanation on the subject.—Lord. C. Paget said the rumour was, that he was a partner in the house of Messrs. Green, of Blackwall, where the gun-boats were built—therefore, that he was a party to the building of those boats. The noble Lord then denied in the most distinct manner having ever had any connection with that house. He had certainly been a small shareholder in the Indian and Australian Packet Service, and, although at that time he had the honour of receiving an invitation from the noble Viscount at the head of the Government to accept office in the Board of Admiralty, he respectfully declined that honour till he had parted with his shares.

Sir John Barnard's Act Repeal Bill.—The adjourned debate upon the second reading of this bill was resumed by Mr. Bentinck, who contended that it would be dangerous to tamper with the laws that regulated public morality, and that if the bill were passed an enormous impetus would be given to gambling upon the Stock Exchange The hon. gentlemen moved as an amendment that the bill be read a second time that day six months.—The Solicitor-General opposed the amendment, and stated that the very stringency of Sir J. Barnard's Act had led to its evasion. Moreover, the Act referred to British funds only, and there was no check whatever upon speculations or time bargains in foreign stocks, railway shares, or other public undertakings.—Mr. E. James said the House did not appear to understand that the present bill was introduced as a necessary portion of the Budget to obtain a revenue by stamps upon contracts, which was void by Sir J. Barnard's Act. He confessed he regarded the measure with some suspicion.—After some discussion the House divided, when the second reading was carried by a majority of 181 against 58.

The Paper Duty and the House of Lords.—The influential deputation which was appointed by the great meeting recently held at St. Martin's Hall waited upon Lord Derby last Saturday for the purpose of presenting to his Lordship the address which was adopted at that meeting, and which pointed out in strong language the objections to Lord Monteagle's motion for the rejection of the bill for the repeal of the paper duties—a motion which Lord Derby had expressed his intention to support. The deputation comprised several members of Parliament and representatives of the leading branches of trade interested in the paper duties. Mr. Serjeant Parry read the address to Lord Derby, and his Lordship delivered a very elaborate reply, in which he stated the grounds upon which he intended to support Lord Monteagle's motion.——An influential deputation from Manchester and Salford waited upon Lord Palmerston on Saturday last for the purpose of calling upon her Majesty's Government to employ every means in their power to resist the threatened violation of the privileges of the House of Commons and the people by the House of Lords. A meeting to protest against Lord Monteagle's motion was also held at Ashton-under-Lyne and other towns.——At a special meeting of the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce last Saturday an energetic endeavour was made by some of the members to obtain a resolution in favour of the repeal of the paper duty, but, after two divisions, it was resolved—"That this Chamber does not deem it necessary or expedient to take any step on Lord Monteagle's motion."

Sicily.—The Island of Sicily is separated from the southern extremity of Italy by the Strait of Messina, and is surrounded by several groups of small islands. It is about 188 miles in the largest part—that is, from east to west; varies from 31 to 109 in width; is 344 miles round, and 16,875 square miles in superficies. The island contains a range of high mountains, which is considered by geologists as a continuation of the Apennines. Mount Etna, also called Monte Gibello, is situated in the province of Catana. This celebrated volcano, isolated like Vesuvius, is 3608 yards above the level of the sea, and is from 81 to 88 miles round at the base. Towards the bottom of the mountain the vegetation is magnificent, and here and there are to be seen noble forests of oak, chestnut, fir, and beech. The plains at the foot, and particularly those of Messina, Malazzo, Palermo, Trapani, and Marsala, are fertile and well cultivated, producing grain, grapes, and fruits of a seperior quality. Sicily is divided into seven intendencies or provinces—Palermo, Messina, Catana, Syracuse, Caltanisetta, Girgenti, and Trapani. The first three, considered the most important in a military point of view, are united by a strategical road which runs along the northern coast to Girgenti, and which will one day be extended round the whole coast of the island; Palermo, the chief town of the intendency of that name, is the residence of the Governor-General of Sicily, and is the seat of the Government. It is a handsome town, about five miles round, containing some fine monuments, and is protected by stong fortifications, among which are the forts of Castel Lucio and Castellamara. It is situated at the bottom of the gulf which bears its name, and on the banks of the Oseto, its population being about 175,000 souls. Messina, situated in the gulf of the same name, possesses the best port in the Mediterranean. It is defended by formidable fortifications, among which are the Citadel, Fort San Salvatore, and the Bastion Real Alto, completely commanding the entrance of the port. On the heights, at less than one thousand yards from the citadel, are the forts of Gonzague, Castel Lucio, and Capucini. The Straits of Messina, separating Sicily from the kingdom of Naples, are rather more than four miles across in the widest part, and upwards of one mile in the narrowest. The entrance to them is defended by a number of batteries, well situated and well armed. The town of Messina is the most important military position of Sicily, and, in fact, decides the possession of the whole island. Warlike operations are difficult in Sicily. Cavalry and artillery cannot be easily moved, and a very strong force of infantry is required to attack the numerous fortified places. The fate of the country must be decided in the provinces of Palermo, Trapani, and Messina, especially the latter. It is there that the enemy must employ the greatest efforts, and there that are the principal strategical points. A disembarkation effected on other parts of the coast would not produce any result; an enemy might maintain himself for a long time in the south or in the interior of the island, but would be wasted in detail without attaining the object sought. In the wars and insurrections of which Sicily has been the theatre at different periods, entire bands, retired into the interior, have perished of hunger. Sicily cannot be attacked with success without the co-operation of a navy, the command of the sea giving its defenders a vast advantage. The population of Sicily is about 2,000,000, all Roman Catholics. The Sicilians are intelligent, gay, and witty. They possess brilliant imaginations, strong passions, and entertain an ardent love of their country. They are very fond of religious spectacles, and much attached to their religion. Their patriotism makes them consider themselves as superior to other nations. Among themselves, moreover, they are engaged in a continual struggle for pre-eminence; and this conflict is particularly strong between Messina and Palermo. In addition to its natural advantages, Sicily, by its situation in the Mediterranean, is a military position of the first order.

THE COURT.

After the birthday Drawingroom, yesterday se'nnight, her Majesty gave a dinner party at Buckingham Palace, at which the company included Princess Alice, the Marchioness of Ely, Lieutenant-General the Right Hon. J. and Lady Alice Peel, the Hon. Mrs. Wellesley, Colonel and Lady Catherine Vernon Harcourt, and Major Elphinstone, R.E. The Queen had afterwards a concert.

On Saturday the Queen and the Prince Consort, accompanied by Princess Alice, Prince Arthur, Prince Leopold, and Princesses Helena, Louisa, and Beatrice, left Buckingham Palace at five minutes past three o'clock for Osborne, Isle of Wight, where the Royal party landed at a quarter before seven o'clock.

On Sunday the Queen, the Prince Consort, Princess Alice, and the junior members of the Royal family, attended Divine service at Osborne. The Rev. G. Prothero officiated.

On Monday the Prince Consort and Princess Alice went out walking in the morning. The younger branches of the Royal family took carriage airings. In the afternoon her Majesty, the Prince Consort, Princess Alice, and Princess Helena, drove in a char-à-banc through Cowes to Newport.

On Tuesday the Queen and the Prince Consort walked in the grounds of Osborne. Princess Alice, accompanied by the Maid of Honour, also walked in the grounds. The Duchess of Kent arrived at Osborne at half-past one o'clock to-day. Her Royal Highness was received by the Queen, the Prince Consort, and Princess Alice at the entrance of the Palace. Her Royal Highness the Princess of Leiningen arrived at the same time on a visit.

The Queen, the Prince Consort (driving), Princess Alice, and the Princess of Leiningen went out this afternoon in a small char-à-banc. In the evening the Royal dinner party included the Duchess of Kent, Princess Alice, and the Princess of Leiningen.

On Saturday next the Queen and the Prince Consort, with the Royal family and suite, will leave town for Windsor Castle, and remain there the following week, during which period the Court will dispense its accustomed hospitality to a brilliant assemblage of visitors invited for the Ascot Races. According to present arrangements the Court will return to town on the 11th of June.

THE BIRTHDAY DRAWINGROOM.

The Queen held a Drawingroom on Friday se'nnight, in celebration of her birthday, at St. James's Palace. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by the Princess Alice, arrived from Buckingham Palace, attended by the Ladies and Gentlemen in Waiting, and escorted by a detachment of Life Guards.

The great officers of State received the Queen and the Prince.

Before the Drawingroom the Archbishop of Canterbury, accompanied by the Bishop of London (Dean of the Chapels Royal), Bishop of Winchester, Bishop of Oxford (Lord High Almoner), Bishop of Durham, Bishop of Chester (Clerk of the Closet), Bishops of Bangor, Lincoln, St. Asaph, Hereford, Bath and Wells, Lichfield, Carlisle, St. David's, Llandaff, Ripon, Chichester, Derry, Tuam, Kilmore, and Sierra Leone, was conducted to the Royal Closet, when his Grace delivered an address of congratulation to the Queen on the auspicious occasion.

The Duke of Cambridge and Princess Mary, Prince Frederick of the Netherlands, the Prince of Waldeck and Pyrmont, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, Prince Frederick of Holstein, and the Maharajah Duleep Singh were present.

The Right Hon. the Speaker of the House of Commons arrived in state, wearing his gold robe of office, and attended by Lord Charles J. Fox Russell, Sergeant-at-Arms to the House of Commons; the Rev. Henry Drury, Chaplain to the House of Commons; the Secretary, and Trainbearer. The Marquis of Lansdowne, Viscount Palmerston, and other Knights of the Garter, wore the "Garter," together with the collar of that Noble Order, the day being observed as a collar-day. The Marquis of Ailsa and other Knights wore the collar of the Most Ancient Order of the Thistle. The Marquis of Donegall, Lord Cremorne, and other Knights wore the collar of the Most Illustrious Order of St. Patrick. Field Marshal Viscount Combermere, Field Marshal Lord Seaton, Admiral Sir George Seymour, Sir John Lawrence, the Right Honourable Sir George Grey, Sir Charles Wood, Sir John Pakington, Viscount Stratford de Redcliffe, Sir Robert Gardiner, and other Knights, wore the collar of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath. The Right Hon. William Ewart Gladstone appeared in his gold robe as Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Lord Chief Justice Cockburn and the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer wore their gold official collars. The Master of the Rolls and Vice-Chancellor Stuart wore their robes of office.

The Queen and Prince Consort entered the throne-room, accompanied by Princess Alice, Prince Frederick of the Netherlands, the Duke of Cambridge, Princess Mary, the Prince of Waldeck and Pyrmont, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, Prince Frederick of Holstein, and the Maharajah Duleep Singh; and were attended by the Duchess of Sutherland (Mistress of the Robes), the Duchess of Atholl (in Waiting), the Marchioness of Ely, the Countess of Caledon, the Countess of Desart, Lady Macdonald, and the Countess of Gainsborough, Ladies of the Bedchamber; and the other Lords and Ladies of the Royal household.

The Queen wore a train of white-ribbed silk, trimmed with ruches of crape, white roses, and white bugles; the petticoat, white crape over white silk, trimmed to correspond. Her Majesty's headdress was composed of a diadem of opals and diamonds, white feathers, and white crape veil.

Princess Alice wore a train of rich white crystalline silk, trimmed with tulle and bows of ribbon; the petticoat of rich glacé silk, bouillonné of tulle, dotted with bows of ribbon. Her Royal Highness wore a wreath of lilies of the valley and camellias as a headdress; ornaments, diamonds.

The Princess Mary of Cambridge wore a white moire train, lined and bordered with pink, trimmed with Mechlin lace, bouquets of flowers and silver cord; the petticoat of pink glacé silk, covered with puffings of crape, and handsome tunic of Brussels lace; the corsage to correspond; ornaments, pearls and diamonds. Her Royal Highness wore as a headdress a diadem of diamonds, feathers, and a silver tulle veil.

The Drawingroom was most numerously attended.

The members of the Queen's Government celebrated her Majesty's birthday by State banquets, at which the guests appeared in full uniform. The residences of the Premier and of the other Ministers, as well as those of the great officers of State, were brilliantly illuminated, and formed a leading source of attraction to the dense crowds who promenaded the principal thoroughfares of the West-end during the evening.

The Countess of Harewood gave birth to a daughter on Monday last, at the family residence in Hanover-square.

Viscount Palmerston had an audience of the Queen on Saturday last at Buckingham Palace.

Lord Lyndhurst, after the debate in the House of Lords on Monday night, entertained at dinner a family circle, in George-street, on the occasion of the venerable Peer's eighty-eighth birthday.

Death of Mr. Albert Smith.—We regret to announce that Mr. Albert Smith died at half-past eight on Wednesday morning, from an attack of bronchitis. A portrait of Mr. Smith, and a notice of his brief but active career, will appear in our columns next week.

The Edinburgh papers announce the death of Professor Lizars.

Mr. F. H. Glover, F.S.A., librarian to the Queen, died on Wednesday at his residence adjoining the palace.

Newspaper Postage.—The official correspondence which took place under the late Government with reference to newspaper postage has been laid before Parliament on the motion of Sir S Northcote. A memorial was presented to the Treasury by Mr. Herbert Ingram and others, asking that, as a newspaper bearing the red impressed stamp passes free through the post for a fortnight as many times as it is posted, an unstamped newspaper (not above two sheets) of any weight, and not merely of four ounces, should be allowed to pass through the post with a sidgle Queen's head stamp for each transmission. Sir Rowland Hill opposed the application, urging the difficulty of defining a "newspaper," and stating his apprehension that compliance would lead to further demands for the lighter newspapers, and even for letters, and that an increase in the number of newspapers sent by post would create difficulties and might lessen the revenue produced by the Post Office. He observed that the line was drawn at four ounces, because that would include all newspapers except one or two printed on better paper, such as the Times and Illustrated London News, but that the Times could be sent with a penny postage stamp if part of the advertisement sheet were omitted. The Treasury, however, in reply, noticed that this showed how objectionable the existing arrangement must be; and they stated that they had come to the conclusion that an unstamped newspaper up to six ounces weight should be carried by the post for a penny. Lord Colchester, then Postmaster-General, thereupon proposed to limit this arrangement to newspapers strictly so called, the Postmaster-General to decide in cases of doubt, and that, to secure this rate of postage for its readers, a daily paper should pay the Government £100 a year, and a weekly paper £50. To this the Treasury assented, but a change of Administration then took place, and the new Lords of the Treasury decided that the matter must stand over for mature consideration before another Session. When this Session came Mr. Gladstone proposed, instead of extending facilities to unstamped newspapers, to restrain the circulation of the stamped by abolishing the red impressed stamp, with its right of repeated posting. But this project also stands over to another Session.

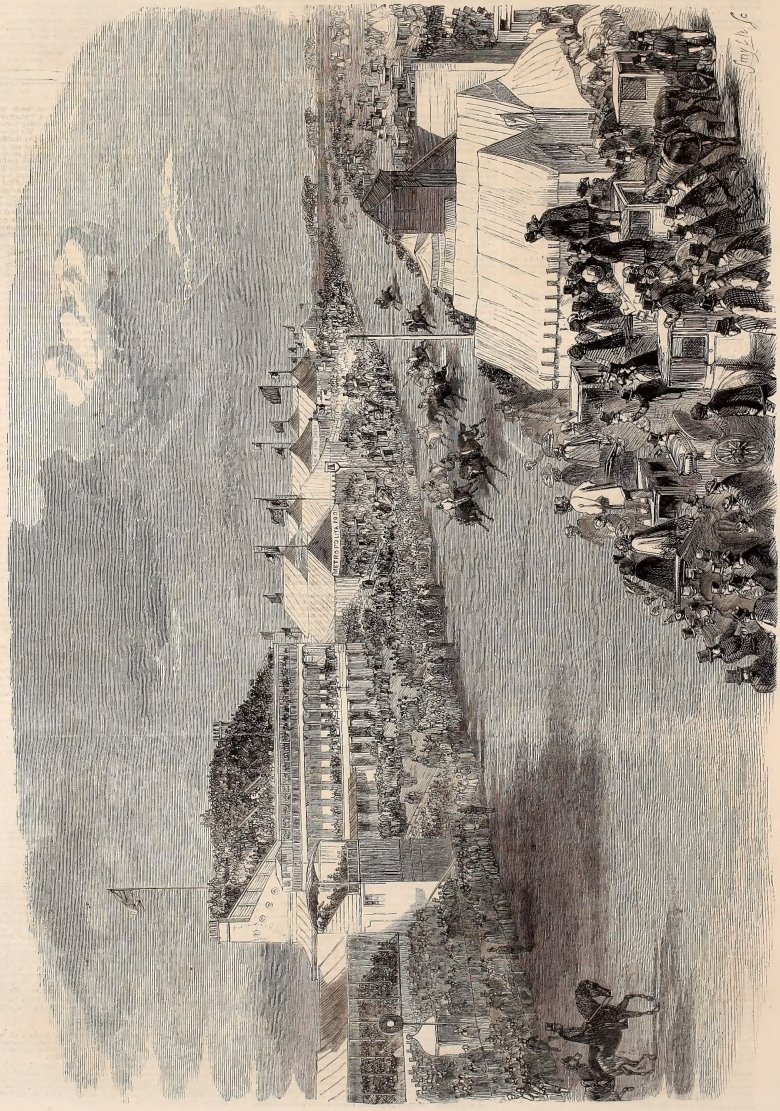
MUSIC.

The only operatic novelty of the past week has been the production, on Tuesday, at Her Majesty's Theatre of Rossini's "Semiramide," the character of the Queen being sustained, for the first time in this country, by Mdlle. Titiens. We believe that this, too, was her first performance of the part on the Italian stage. She looked and acted the character with the grandeur and passion to be expected from so great a tragedian, and sang the music beautifully. The great aria "Bel raggio" was a magnificent performance, and the duet with Arsace (performed by Alboni), "Giorno d'orror," could not be exceeded in beauty and expression. Alboni made her début in the part of Arsace on the night of the opening of the Royal Italian Opera, thirteen years ago, and she still sings it as exquisitely as ever. Everardi, in the part of Assur, showed great energy, and the music was well suited to his fine baritone voice. The house was crowded, and the principal scenes were much applauded. But there is something ponderous in the pomp and splendour of this gorgeous opera, and, let it be ever so well performed, it always moves somewhat coldly and slowly, on account of its deficiency in dramatic incident and action.

The third concert of the Philharmonic Society, on Monday evening, contained a larger proportion than usual of the vocal element. Its principal feature was Mendelssohn's music for the "Midsummer Night's Dream." The two-part song, "You spotted snakes," was prettily given by Miss Augusta Thomson and Mdlle. Jenny Meyer; and the choruses were charmingly sung by twenty female voices. The symphony was Beethoven's in F; the overtures were "Anacreon" and the "Zauberflöte." Herr Kömpel, a violinist newly arrived, played Spohr's dramatic concerto in a most masterly manner. He is a pupil of that illustrious master, of whom his performance strongly reminded us. Mdme. Rieder sang the air, "Du Village Voisin," from Auber's opera "Le Serment," with remarkable brilliancy. Mdlle. Jenny Meyer gave great dramatic effect to a fine scena from Glück's "Iphigenia in Tauris;" and Miss Augusta Thomson sang a beautiful recitative and air from Barnett's "Fair Rosamond." Barnett's admirable works are too much neglected, and Miss Thomson showed her taste and judgment in selecting one of them. The audience was crowded, and the performances were warmly applauded.

Mr. Vincent Wallace had a concert at the Crystal Palace on Saturday last, selected entirely from his own compositions. The principal singers were Mdme. Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Augusta Thomson, Mdme. Laura Baxter, Mdme. Weiss, Miss Poole, Miss Fanny Huddart, Miss Parepa, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Santley, Mr. Perren, Mr. Ramsden, and Mr. Weiss. They sang a number of favourite airs, duets, and concerted pieces, chiefly from Mr. Wallace's operas, "Maritana" and "Lurline." The overtures to these operas were performed by the Crystal Palace orchestra; Miss Arabella Goddard played Mr. Wallace's grand variations on "La Cracovienne;" and Herr Becker played a concertino on the violin, composed expressly for him by Mr. Wallace. A great concourse of visitors was congregated to hear these performances, which were received with much applause, though they were necessarily very indistinctly heard by a large portion of the audience.

Miss Fanny Corfield, a young pianist, of whom we have already had occasion to speak, and whose talents are rapidly raising her to distinction, gave a morning concert of classical pianoforte music on Saturday last at the residence of Mrs. Chapman, Montagu-place, Bryanston-square. Miss Corfield is a pupil—and one of the most favourite pupils—of Professor Sterndale Bennett, by whose admirable instructions she has fully profited, and who, indeed, may well be proud of such a scholar. Dr. Bennett has not only given her much of his own grace and finish as a performer, but he has cultivated her taste and judgment, and imbued her with the love of that which is great and beautiful in art. That this is the case is apparent, not only from her selection of, but her manner of performing, the chefs-d'œuvre of the great masters of the pianoforte. On this occasion she played (with the accompaniment of M. Sainton) Dussek's sonata in B flat for the piano and violin; a selection from Sterndale Bennett's beautiful and well-known Preludes and Lessons; Mendelssohn's sonata in D for the piano and violoncello, in which she was accompanied by M. Paque; Beethoven's sonata, op. 22; and with (Sainton and Paque) Haydn's trio in G for the piano, violin, and violoncello. In this selection there was much variety, but it was only variety of excellence. Several fine vocal pieces were sung by Mdme. Sainton-Dolby and Mr. Redfearn. There was a crowded, fashionable, and most attentive audience.



Mdme. Rieder gave a matinée musicale on Wednesday at Campden House, Kensington. The first part of the programme was a miscellaneous selection of vocal and instrumental music, including (among other things) Hummel's pianoforte trio in E flat, played by Mr. Lindsay Sloper, Herr Becker, and M. Paque; Mozart's air, "Dove Sono," sung by Mdme. Rieder; Pacini's grand aria, "Ahi! giusta pena," sung by Sigr. Olivia; aria from Verdi's "Rigoletto," "Caro nome," sung by Miss Augusta Thomson; and solos on the piano, violin, and violoncello, by Mdlle. Fanny Rubini, Herr Becker, and M. Paque. The second part consisted of a lively French operetta, called "Les Noces de Jeannette," in which Mdme. Rieder and M. Fontanier were the performers. Mdme. Rieder (whose appearance at the Philharmonic Concert we have already noticed) is an accomplished singer, and her style of performance is a very favourable specimen of the French school.

Mdme. Puzzi's annual morning concert at the Hanover square Rooms, on Monday, was, as usual, a most ample musical banquet, to which a host of eminent individuals contributed their talents. We cannot enumerate either the performers or the pieces; but the following were a few of those which produced the greatest effect. The spinning-wheel quartet from "Martha," which began the concert, was exceedingly well sung by Mdme. Everardi, Mdme. Lemaire, Signor Neri, and Mr. Patey. Mdme. Rieder's "Carneval de Venise" was a brilliant piece of execution. A beautiful duet, "Il mio pensier," composed by Signor Giuglini, and sung by Mdme. Lemmens-Sherrington and Mdme. Lemaire, showed the talents of our great tenor in a new light. Mdme. Sherrington's execution of the famous "shadow-song" in "Dinorah" was most brilliant, and exquisitely finished. Mdme. Borghi-Mamo and Signor Ciabatta sang the duet "Dunque, io son," in the "Barbiere;" and Mdme. Borghi-Mamo sang the little Neapolitan air, "Santa Lucia," which she introduces in the singing-lesson scene in that opera. M. Leopold de Meyer played two of his own brilliant fantasias on the pianoforte; and a solo on the violoncello was played by Signor Pezza, a performer of the highest order. The room was crowded to excess with the most fashionable company in London.

The concert of Mdlle. Maria de Villar at the Hanover-square Rooms on the evening of Friday, last week, was an elegant and interesting entertainment. Mdlle. de Villar (who is Court and concert singer to the Prince of Hohenzollern) has been favourably known for several years to the London musical public, and, in particular, gained much reputation as an oratorio-singer by her performances at Mr. Hullah's concerts at St. Martin's Hall; but she is an accomplished singer in a variety of styles. At her concert on Friday her principal performances were the great scena, "Wie Nahte mer der Schlummer" (known to English amateurs as "Before my eye beheld him") in the "Freischütz;" the aria, "Qui la voce," in the "Puritani;" and Balfe's song, "I'm a merry Zingara;" and she also took part in several Italian and English duets and concerted pieces. Miss Palmer, Mr. George Perren, and Mr. Santley sang several favourite pieces; and solos on the harp, violin, and violoncello were performed by Mr. Balsir Chatterton, Mr. Louis Ries, and M. Lidel.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Paul's present entertainment will be brought to a close in London next week. Those who have not witnessed its many excellent features, including the "living photograph" of Mr. Sims Reeves by Mrs. Paul, should not miss the opportunity.

Mormon Emigration.—The William Tapscott, which sailed from Liverpool a few days ago for New York, had on board 811 Mormons, whose destiny is the Great Salt Lake. There were 125 married men and 175 married women, 146 single men and 149 single women, 80 male and 92 female children, and 18 male and 26 female infants. Of these 354 were English, 22 Scotch, 35 Irish, and 400 foreigners.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Mr. Ernest Jones has joined the Bar, practising at the Middlesex Sessions.

Testimonials were on Tuesday presented to the Rev. W. W. Champneys and his wife by the parishioners of St. Mary's, Whitechapel: they consisted of an elegant tazza vase of silver and a drawing-room clock, and for Mrs. Champneys a grand pianoforte by Broadwood—the value of the whole being over £300.

A popular demonstration in support of Garibaldi and the Sicilian movement, was held at St. Martin's Hall on Tuesday night. The hall was crowded, and the enthusiasm was unbounded. Resolutions of sympathy with the Italian patriot in the great struggle in which he is engaged were unanimously adopted, and a subscription was opened on behalf of the Garibaldi Fund.

ST. GEORGE'S-IN-THE-EAST.—The Bishop of London has issued a monition forbidding the choristers from occupying seats within the communion rails, and also prohibiting other practices in the church. This monition was enforced last Sunday by the churchwarden.—An address, signed by forty-one clergymen of the east end of the metropolis, has been presented to the Bishop of London, approving of the course his Lordship has taken respecting the riots at St. George's-in-the-East.

THE ABORIGINES PROTECTION SOCIETY held its annual meeting on Wednesday night, and there was a numerous and respectable attendance. The proceedings had reference principally to the unjust treatment of the Kaffirs at the Cape, and the condition of the Indians of Canada and the Hudson's Bay territories. The claims of the North American Indians were pathetically advocated by a lady of pure Indian blood, who has come to this country with a view to intercede with the Queen on behalf of her unfortunate people. The election of Mr. S Gurney, M.P., as president of the society, appeared to give universal satisfaction.

ROYAL DISPENSARY FOR DISEASES OF THE EAR.—The annual meeting of this institution was held on Wednesday in the boardroom of the dispensary, Dean-street, Soho-square. Dr. Rowe was in the chair. During the past year 1391 patients were admitted, of whom 386 had been discharged cured, and the remainder are under treatment. Upwards of 100 patients attend twice a day to receive advice from the medical officer. Although the funds have increased, they are not commensurate with the great increase of applicants, and the committee are obliged to make an appeal to the public for further aid.

WAREHOUSEMEN AND CLERKS.—At a meeting of the promoters of the Warehousemen's and Clerks' Schools, held on Monday, at the Guildhall Coffeehouse, it was intimated that £1000 were added to the general fund of the association on the occasion of the annual dinner last November, and upwards of £5000 were then announced for the building fund. The income of the past year derived from donations, subscriptions, and dividends, amounted to £864; while the expenditure has reached £1096; leaving a balance of £232 against the institution. Seven boys will quit the institution in June, upon completion of their terms, and it is much desired that situations might be found for them before that time. About seventy boys are now inmates of the school. After the usual formal business, the meeting terminated in the usual manner.

FEMALE SCHOOL OF ART.—A conversazione will take place on Thursday, the 21st of June, at the South Kensington Museum, for the purpose of raising a fund for erecting the building for the Female School of Art, 1860. By the gracious permission of the Queen, the Koh-i-Noor diamond, which has been recut since the Exhibition of 1851, will be exhibited, together with a collection of ancient and modern jewellery, which the council of the Fine Arts Club has kindly consented to provide for this occasion. The Marquis of Salisbury will liberally contribute the services of the band of the Hertfordshire Militia for the night. The admission will be by tickets only, which may be obtained of any member of the committee of the Female School of Art, 37, Gower-street.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Last week the births of 867 boys and 835 girls—in all 1702 children—were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1850-9 the average number was 1601.—In the week that ended last Saturday the total number of deaths registered in London was 1090, exhibiting a decrease in the rate of mortality as compared with that of the earlier portion of the present month, when the weekly numbers were successively 1205 and 1111. In the ten years 1850-9 the average number of deaths in the weeks corresponding with last week, corrected for increase of population, was 1148. The comparison shows that the deaths now returned were less by 58 than they would have been if the average rate of mortality had prevailed.

FUNERAL OF SIR CHARLES BARRY.—On Tuesday afternoon the remains of the late Sir Charles Barry were interred in the nave of Westminster Abbey. The mourners met in the Jerusalem Chamber, and the order of procession of the various learned bodies represented was as follows:—1st, Royal Academy; 2nd, Royal Society; 3rd, Civil Engineers; 4th, Architectural Museum; 5th, Architectural Association; 6th, Royal Institute of British Architects. The service, which was an exceedingly impressive one, was conducted by the Very Rev. the Dean, and the choral portion of the service was in full consonance with the solemnity of the occasion. The abbey was much crowded. Mourning was almost universally worn, and the strongest feelings of respect for the departed were manifested. Several members of Parliament and distinguished men of science attended in the capacity of pall-bearers and mourners. Our Number for next week will contain a portrait of Sir C. Barry.

THE PEACE SOCIETY.—On Tuesday the annual meeting of the friends of this society was held in Finsbury Chapel, Moorfields—Mr. Pease, M.P., in the chair, who, in opening the proceedings, dwelt upon the inexpediency of keeping up large standing armies at an enormous cost in countries professedly Christian and civilised, not for purposes of defence, but of aggression. Mr. Richards, the secretary, read the report, in which the conduct of our representative in China, Mr. Bruce, was strongly condemned, in attempting to force the way to Pekin. The loss of human life from the war in Italy could not be computed at less than 100,000 men, and the cost at one hundred millions sterling. The establishment of the rifle corps was denounced as tending to demoralise the young men of the present day. The practice of the various European Powers of increasing their force to an extent beyond their means was also denounced; and the late treaty concluded by Mr. Cobden was eulogised as being a means of extending our commercial relations. The gross receipts for the year were £3321 5s. 8d., and the expenses £1989 9s. 7d. A series of resolutions in accordance with the views of the society were agreed to unanimously, and, after numerous addresses from the advocates of peace, a vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the proceedings.

PRESENTATION OF THE FREEDOM OF THE CITY TO CAPTAIN M'CLINTOCK.—Last Saturday the freedom of the city of London (in a box of British oak, of the value of fifty guineas) was presented to Sir Leopold M'Clintock, "in admiration of his dauntless spirit, exhibited in repeated efforts to rescue 138 of his fellow-countrymen; and in testimony of his having, after many years of unsuccessful search, ascertained the fate of the intrepid Sir John Franklin and the officers and crews of the Erebus and Terror in the Arctic regions." In acknowledging the honour conferred upon him the gallant Captain paid a high compliment to his companion, Captain Allen Young, and regretted that that gentleman, owing to his being connected with the mercantile marine, was "beyond the reach of Admiralty reward." It will be remembered that, in deciding to bestow the freedom of the City upon Captain M'Clintock, the Common Council also resolved, "That the thanks of this Court be given to the officers and crew of the yacht Fox, for the bravery and self-sacrifice which distinguished the conduct of all those who accompanied Captain M'Clintock, as volunteering upon this patriotic service." The members of the Court, as well as the great officers of the Corporation, wore their state robes, and the Council Chamber, in which the presentation took place, was crowded in every part, a considerable number of fashionably-attired ladies being present, in addition to other visitors and the usual occupants of the place, to witness the interesting ceremony.

FESTIVAL OF THE SONS OF THE CLERGY.—On Wednesday the 206th anniversary festival of this institution was celebrated in the large open space under the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral. The Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and Corporation went in state. There were present the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Archbishop Nominate of York, the Bishop of London, the Bishop of Salisbury, the Bishop of Carlisle, the Bishop of Ripon, the Bishop of Bangor, the Dean of Chichester, the Marquis of Bristol, Earl Fitzwilliam, Lord Tatton Egerton, Sir Frederic Currie, Bart., the Dean of Christ Church, the Archdeacon of London, Mr. Tomline, M.P., and a large body of ecclesiastics. Full choral service was performed, in which the choirs of her Majesty's Chapel Royal, St. Paul's, Westminster Abbey, and St. George's Chapel, Windsor, assisted. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Archibald Boyd, M.A., Canon of Gloucester and Incumbent of Paddington. In the evening the annual dinner was held in Merchant Taylors' Hall. The Lord Mayor presided, being supported on his immediate right and left by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Archbishop of York (designate). In the course of the evening it was stated by the Registrar (Mr. Baker) that the collection in the cathedral in the morning amounted to £142; the sum subscribed at the dinner, including cheques sent to him by gentlemen who could not find it convenient to attend, to £984; the donations of stewards, to £800; from investments of stewards' fees and other similar receipts in former years, £1046; making a total receipt on the festival account of £2972. Besides which there had been £700 received in legacies since the last festival. This society has been in active operation for upwards of two centuries, and now annually assists by pensions and donations about 1250 persons—clergymen, their widows, single daughters, and children. During the last year about £16,060 was distributed, but so numerous were the applicants that the funds permitted only of very limited and often inadequate grants being made. At the present time there are 710 widows and daughters in receipt of pensions of from £10 to £25 per annum, while on an average upwards of 500 clergymen and children are also annually assisted.

During Whitsun week it is proposed to hold in Cambridge a Congress of various Architectural Societies, under the presidency of A. J. B. Beresford-Hope, Esq.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

NOTWITHSTANDING that only a limited business has been passing in Home Stocks this week, both for Money and Time, arising, chiefly, from the unfavourable rumours at hand from various parts of the Continent bearing upon the Italian question, we have no change of importance to notice in the quotations. The sales of stocks have been unusually limited; hence, there is no addition to the supply in the hands of the jobbers. The Money Market has become somewhat easier; but in Lombard-street, where the demand for accommodation has been tolerably active, very little paper has been done under from 4 to 4¼ for short. Three months' bills have been freely done at 4½; four months' 4½ to 4¾; and six months', 4¾ to 5½ per cent. On Thursday, the Directors of the Bank of England reduced their minimum charge to 4 per cent. This reduction led to greater ease in other quarters.

Most of the foreign exchanges continue steady. There is now no profit on the shipment of gold; hence, the bulk of the late arrivals—viz., about £210,000, has been sold to the Bank of England, which now holds about £15,700,000. For silver, the demand has been trifling in the extreme, and the quotations have ruled almost nominal, although the quantity on offer is very limited.

The Committee of the Stock Exchange have concluded their inquiry in reference to those members who had dealings with Pullinger, the late cashier of the Union Bank of London. The result is that four members have been suspended for various periods—three until March, 1861, and one for three months. This resolution has taken not a few persons by surprise.

The prospectus of a company to cultivate and manufacture tea in the hill districts of India has been issued. The capital is fixed at £250,000, in shares of £20 each.

Another new undertaking, the Portugal Land Company, has made its appearance, with a proposed capital of £75,000.

From a return just issued it appears that the total capital of the railway companies now in progress in India is £52,430,000, and that nearly the whole of that amount has been subscribed for in this country.

At the annual meeting of the National Bank a dividend and bonus at the rate of 14 per cent upon the paid-up capital was declared. The dividend of the Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, London, and China, is at the rate of 20 per cent per annum. The directors of the London Chartered Bank of Australia have intimated that the dividend for the past half-year will be 3½ per cent. This will absorb £24,500, and leave £7631 19s. 8d. to be carried forward. The Oriental Gas Company have declared a dividend of 3 per cent per annum, free of income tax.

The dealings in the English Market on Monday were limited, and prices had a drooping tendency:—Bank Stock was done at 228; the Reduced Three per Cents sold at 93½ 93; New Three per Cents, 93½ ¼; Consols for Money, 94⅝ ⅜ ⅝ ¾; Ditto for Account, 94⅞ 95 94⅞; India Five per Cents, 106⅞; Ditto, Debentures, 1859, 96½; Ditto, Bonds, 10s 5s. dis.; Exchequer Bills, 5s. to 8s. prem. Most securities were flat on the following day, and prices closed as follows:—Bank Stock, 228; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 93½; Consols for Money 94⅞ ⅝; Ditto, for Account, 94⅞ ⅞; New Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 79; India Five per Cent Rupee Paper, 97½; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 102⅞; Ditto, Five per Cents, 106½; Ditto, Debentures, 1858, 96⅝; Ditto, Bonds, 10s. dis.; Exchequer Bills, 4s. to 8s. prem. More firmness was apparent on Wednesday, and the quotations ruled somewhat higher:—Bank Stock touched 228½; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 93⅝; Consols for Money, 94⅞ 95; Ditto for Time, 95 to 95½; New Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 79; Five per Cents, 109½; Long Annuities, 1885, 17 5-16; India Five per Cents, 106⅝; Ditto Five per Cent Paper, 98; Ditto Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 103½; Ditto Debentures, 1858, 96⅝; Ditto, 1859, 96⅞; Exchequer Bills, 4s. to 8s. prem. On Thursdays prices were on the advance, with a steady market. Consols for Money were done at 95½ ¼; for the Account, 95½ ⅝; the Reduced and the New Three per Cents were 93⅝ ⅝; Exchequer Bills, 6s. to 9s. prem.; India Stock was 219½; Ditto, New Loan, 96½ ⅝; the Debentures marked 96½ ⅝.

A moderate business has been doing in the shares of the new undertakings. Ocean Marine Insurance have been 2⅛ to 2⅜ prem.; Universal Marine, ⅛ to ⅜ prem.; Thames and Mersey Marine, 1 9-16 to 1 11-16 prem.; and Himalaya Tea, ¾ to 1 prem.

Notwithstanding that the amount of business doing in the Foreign House has been somewhat restricted, and that uneasiness has been felt in reference to the affairs of Italy and Turkey, no change of importance has taken place in the general quotations. Brazilian Five per Cents have realised 99; Brazilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 1858, 90⅝; Chilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 1858, 90⅝; Chilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 85; Dutch Four per Cents, 101; Mexican Three per Cents, 21¼; Peruvian Four-and-a-Half per Cents (Uribarren), 88; Portuguese Three per Cents, 45½; Russian Four-and-Half per Cents, 97¾; Russian Three per Cents, 64½ ½ ex div.; Sardinian Five per Cents, 84¾; Spanish Three per Cents, 47¾; Ditto, New Deferred, 37½; Turkish Six per Cents, 74¾ to 75¾; Ditto, New, 58 to 58¾; Turkish Four per Cents, 101¾. The scrip of the new Brazilian Loan has been done at ⅜ dis.

The transactions in Joint-stock Bank Shares have been very moderate. Prices, however, continue tolerably firm. Australasia have marked 67; Bank of London, 51½; London Chartered of Australia, 22⅝; London Joint-stock, 33½; London and Westminster, 62½; Oriental, 42½; Ottoman, 17⅝; and Union of London, 25½.

Colonial Government Securities have been somewhat extensively dealt in, at extreme rates:—Canada Six per Cents, 1879, having realised 112¾; Ditto, 1878, 112¾; New South Wales Five per Cents, 1871 to 1876, 100; Ditto, 1888 and upwards, 100½; and Victoria Six per Cents, 106½.

The Miscellaneous Market is still far from active:—Crystal Palace shares have sold at 32; Great Ship, ⅝; London Discount, 4; London General Omnibus, 1⅞; National Discount, 4⅛; Peninsular and Oriental Steam, New, 38¾; Red Sea and India Telegraph, 17½; Birmingham Canal, 94; Kennet and Avon, 6⅝; Regent's, 21; Chelsea Waterworks, 16½; East London, 120; West Middlesex, 107; Waterloo Bridge, Old Annuities of £8, 28; Ditto, New, of £7, 25; London Docks, 68; Victoria, 100.

Globe Insurance Company's shares have marked 100½; Guardian 53½; London, 47¾; Phœnix, 174 ex div. and bonus; Royal Exchange, 306; Union, 275; Sun Life, 70; Great Central Gas, 8⅝ ex div; London, 4¾; Ditto, Blue Preference, 54; Phœnix, 62½; Western, 12½.

On the whole the Railway Share Market has been tolerably firm, arising from the steady traffic receipts. Compared with last week, however, no change of importance has taken place in the quotations. Annexed are Thursday's official closing prices:—

THE MARKETS.

CORN-EXCHANGE, May 21.—Only a limited supply of English wheat was on offer in our market to-day. Although the demand was by no means active, prices ruled from 1s. to 2s. per quarter higher than on Monday last. Foreign wheat—the show of which was very moderate—changed hands slowly, owing to the high pretensions of the importers. Floating cargoes supported previous rates. There was much less doing in barley, and malting parcels were lower to purchase. No change took place in the value of malt, but the demand was wholly confined to retail parcels. Oats were rather dearer, with a steady consumptive inquiry. Beans and peas moved off freely, on former terms. The flour trade was steady, at 2s. to 4s. per 280lb more money.

May 24.—Wheat was in but moderate request, at Monday's quotations. Nearly all descriptions of spring corn and flour were steady in price.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s. to 54s.; ditto, white, 45s. to 58s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 43s. to 53s.; rye, 30s. to 31s.; grinding barley, 28s. to 30s.; distilling ditto, 31s. to 33s.; malting ditto, 30s. to 45s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 49s. to 70s.; brown ditto, 48s. to 49s.; Kingston and Ware, 64s. to 70s.; Chevalier, 70s. to 72s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 22s. to 27s.; potato ditto, 28s. to 31s.; Youghal and Cork, black, 21s. to 27s.; ditto, white, 22s. to 29s.; tick beans, 37s. to 39s.; grey peas, 36s. to 38s.; maple, 38s. to 41s.; white, 36s. to 39s.; boilers, 39s. to 41s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 46s. to 50s.; town households, 44s. to —s.; country marks, 36s. to 38s. per 280 lb.; American, 26s. to 30s. per barrel; French, 33s. to 41s. per sack.

Seeds.—Most seeds have changed hands slowly, but without leading to any change of moment in the quotations. Linseed and cakes may be purchased on rather easier terms.

Linseed, English, crushing, 49s. to 53s; Calcutta, 49s. to 51s. 0d; hempseed, 40s. to 42s. per quarter; coriander, 15s. to 16s. per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 9s. to 14s.; ditto, white, 11s. to 14s.; tares, 7s. to 7s. 6d. per bushel. English rapeseed, 60s. to 66s. per quarter; linseed cakes, English, £9 15s. to £10 10s.; ditto, foreign, £9 10s. to £11 1's.; rape cakes, £5 10s. to £6 0s. per ton; canary, 44s. to 50s. per quarter; red clover seed, 40s. to 54s.; white ditto, 80s. to 90s. per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 8d. to 8½d.; of household ditto, 6d. to 7½d. per 4-lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 52s. 1d.; barley, 36s. 6d.; oats, 25s. 3d.; rye, 38s. 2d.; beans, 44s. 3d.; peas, 39s. 5d.

The Six Weeks' Averages.—Wheat, 51s. 2d.; barley, 37s. 4d.; oats, 24s. 10d.; rye, 34s. 3d.; beans, 42s. 3d.; peas, 39s. 2d.

English Grain Sold last Week.—Wheat, 95,250; barley, 5128; oats, 8071; rye, 52; beans, 3592; peas, 584 quarters.

Tea.—The demand has somewhat improved, and prices are well supported. Common congou is quoted at 1s. 5d to 1s. 5½d. per lb.

Sugar.—All raw qualities have moved off slowly, at 6d. per cwt. less money, and the supply in warehouse is very extensive for the time of year. Refined goods are dull, and somewhat easier. Crushed sugars command previous rates, but the demand is by no means active.

Coffee.—Privately, as well as at public sale, the transactions have been much restricted, and some kinds of coffee have given way from 1s. to 1s. 6d. per cwt.

Rice.—An improved business has been passing in all descriptions, at extreme quotations.

Provisions.—Irish butter is steady, at 102s. to 108s. per cwt. for fine Carlow, and 100s. to 104s. for Limerick. Foreign and English qualities are firm. Bacon is in request, at 66s. to 69s. for sizeable Waterford, and 67s. to 67s. for large. Irish bladdered lard is selling at 65s. to 67s.; and keg, 58s. to 68s. per cwt. Hams are very firm.

Tallow.—Very little business is doing in this market. In prices, however, no change of importance has taken place. P. Y. C., on the spot, is quoted at 52s. to 52s. 6d.; and for the last three months, 50s. 9d. to 51s. per cwt.

Oils.—Linseed oil is firm, at 28s. 3d per cwt, on the spot. All other oils are in fair request. Foreign refined rape, £42 10s. to £43; brown, £40 to £40 10s. Olive, Gallipoli, £53; and Mogadore, £56. Spirits of turpentine, 35s. 6d. to 38s. per cwt.

Spirits.—Rum supports previous rates, but the demand is by no means active. Proof Leewards, 1s. 6d. to 1s. 9d.; proof East India, 1s. 7d. to 1s. 8d. per gallon. In the value of brandy and grain spirits very little change has taken place.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 to £4 15s.; clover ditto, £4 to £5 15s.; and straw, £1 6s to £1 12s. per load. Trade dull.

Coals.—Best house coals, 17s. 6d. to 18s.; seconds, 15s. 9d. to 17s.; Hartley's, 14s. 9d. to 15s 6d.; manufacturers', 13s. to 15s. per ton.

Hops.—New hops continue in moderate request, at full prices; but other kinds are very dull. The plantation accounts are favourable, and the duty has been done at £140,000.

Wool.—The public sales of colonial wool continue to be well attended by buyers, and the biddings are still active, at full prices.

Potatoes.—The arrivals are very moderate, yet the demand is limited, at prices varying from 100s. to 160s. per ton.

Metropolitan Cattle Market (Thursday, May 24).—Compared with Monday, a most important change has taken place in the trade here to-day. Prices have given way considerably, and much heaviness has prevailed in the demand. The supply of beasts was large, and all kinds changed hands slowly, at from 4d. to 6d. per 8 lb. less money. Sheep came somewhat freely to hand, and the inquiry for them was heavy, at 4d. to 6d. per 8lb decline. Lambs were a dull inquiry, and the currencies gave way 4d. to 6d. per 8lb. Calves were 4d. to 6d. lower, with a full average number on offer. The pork trade was in a depressed state, on easier terms; but for milch cows the inquiry was tolerably firm. Per 8lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s. 8d. to 4s. 0d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 4d.; prime large oxen, 4s. 6d. to 4s. 8d.; prime Scots, &c., 4s. 10d. to 5s. 0d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 4s. 4d. to 4s. 8d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 10d. to 5s. 4d.; prime coarse-woolled sheep, 5s. 6d. to 5s. 10d.; prime Southdown ditto, 6s. 0d to 6s. 2d.; large coarse calves, 4s. 4d. to 5s. 6d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 2d. to 5s. 6d.; large hogs, 4s. 0d. to 4s. 6d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 8d. to 50s; lambs, 5s. 10d. to 7s 8d.; suckling calves, 21s. to 23s.; and quarter-old store pigs, 23s. to 30s. each. Total supply: Beasts, 1630; cows, 140; sheep and lambs, 10,000; calves, 350; pigs, 300. Foreign: Beasts, 210; sheep, 880; calves, 196.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—Our markets have become heavy, at drooping currencies:—Beef, from 3s. 4d. to 4s. 4d.; mutton, 4s. 4d. to 5s. 6d.; lamb, 6s. to 6s. 8d.; veal, 4s. 0d. to 4s. 8d.; pork 0d. to 5s. 0d. per 8lb by the carcase. ROBERT HERBERT.

JULLIEN'S LAST WALTZ, published this day, price 4s. The "Musical World" says, "We are much in error if the publication just issued by Messrs. BOOSEY under the above title fails to excite universal interest. As we have seen the manuscript, we can testify to the genuineness of its authorship; and assuredly this last production in his especial line of one who wrote such a multitude of charming dance-pieces deserves the attention of all upon whom this genial and attractive form of music exercises a sway. Jullien's Last Waltz is quite worthy of the pen that traced the Original Polka, the Prima Donna Waltz, the Moldavian Schottische and a dozen more things as perfect in their way."
BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street.

TO PURCHASERS of PIANOFORTES.—CHAPPELL and CO. have a large stock of SECONDHAND PIANOFORTES for Sale, by BROADWOOD, COLLARD, ERARD, &c., &c., at very reduced prices. Also, new Instruments of every description.—CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S FOREIGN MODEL PIANOFORTE, price Fifty Guineas. This instrument has (unlike the ordinary Cottage Pianoforte) Three Strings and the fullest Grand Compass of Seven Octaves. It is strengthened by every possible means to endure the greatest amount of wear, and to stand perfectly in any climate. The workmanship is of the best description; the tone is round, full, and rich; and the power equal to that of a Bichord Grand. The case is of the most elegant description, in rosewood; the touch elastic, and the repetition very rapid. Every possible precaution has been taken to ensure its standing well in tune. Chappell and Co. especially invite the attention of the public, the profession, and merchants, to the Foreign Model, feeling assured that no Pianoforte, in all respects comparable, has hitherto been made in England at the same price. Every instrument will be warranted, and (if desired) exchanged within twelve months of the purchase.—50, New Bond-street, London.

HARMONIUMS at CHAPPELL'S. — The HARMONIUM by ALEXANDRE is the only instrument of the kind that remains in tune; from the simplicity of its construction is but slightly affected by changes of weather, and is alike calculated for the Church, Chapel, School, or Drawing-room.

THE LATE DUKE OF NORFOLK.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY W. AND D. DOWNEY.

THE INSTALLATION OF LORD BROUGHAM AS CHANCELLOR OF THE EDINBURGH UNIVERSITY.

We have engraved on the first page of our present Number a Portrait of Lord Brougham, from an excellent photograph by Mr. Herbert Watkins, of Regent-street. To accompany a portrait of Henry Lord Brougham with any detailed biographical account would be a work of supererogation, even if we had not a comparatively short time ago, on the occasion of his delivering a great address, devoted considerable space in this Journal to a sketch of his long and eventful life. Once more the noble and learned Lord has come before the public with one of those intellectual and physical efforts which would be remarkable from any one, but which in the case of a man of one who has entered his eighty-second year is simply wonderful. With providential wisdom Lord Brougham has fixed his permanent abode in spring months which in our climate are so trying to the human frame serious to his villa at Cannes, where he can enjoy, beneath a giant refreshed, and during the past week he has once more astonished and delighted the country by the delivery of an oration, on his installation as Chancellor of the University of Edinburgh, which ranges through the whole circle of learning, science, and morals, and by no means the least remarkable portion of the display is the circumstance that it occupied more than two hours in the delivery. It is needless to state that Lord Brougham received the high honour conferred on him as one of his chief triumphs, and not the less because it was won for him in a hard contest of the suffrages of a constituency which by its choice would show that it appreciated merit and individual attainment to hereditary rank and territorial wealth, their love for the man and their pride in the distinction that his office, who was merely a nobleman of amiable character and respectable parts.

Lord Brougham was installed Chancellor of the University of Edinburgh yesterday week. The ceremony took place in the Music Hall in Edinburgh, and his Lordship, attired in the robes of the Chancellor of the University, was conducted to the chair amid the cheers of a crowded assembly, among which were the Duke of Argyll, the Vice-Chancellor and Principal; the Lord Provost, the Solicitor-General, Professor Aytoun, Sheriff Bell, Baillie Grave, Mr. Adam, Mr. Dr. Brown, members of the University Court; the Lord Justice Clerk, Lord Neaves, Dean Ramsay, &c. A number of honorary degrees whom degrees had been conferred were then presented to Lord Brougham. They were Lord Colonsay; Dr. Stokes, of Dublin; Mr. John Forster, author of "The Life and Times of Oliver Goldsmith;" Dr. Miller, Dr. Sharpey, and Mr. Fairbairn.

His Lordship's address occupied about two hours in the delivery. After a brief and touching allusion to the teachers and fellow-students at the University of Edinburgh, his Lordship proceeded to congratulate arising from the number of students attracted to this university from all parts of the world, and said:—"While we gather lights for our improvement from others we greatly benefit them, and the blessed interests of peace are promoted by the natural tendency of man's mind to look back with satisfaction upon services done here, and to cherish the remembrance of the lessons taught. Thus upon the system of our mutual intercourse the Scottish people will remain impressed the great truths that popular rights can exist and be respected without the tyranny of the populace; that liberty does not necessarily degenerate into licentiousness; that a subject always has not the only refuge from anarchy. Our kinsfolk of the New World may in after life recollect with gratitude and community in which a Church is established without the existence of a single civil disqualification attached to religious belief, and wherein in which the most enlightened and respectable citizens do not abstain from taking their share in public proceedings, although from the interference of the multitude with the administration of justice is to a thing seldom regarded as incredible; and in which the irresponsible mob tyrant, the instant that one of his victims appears, is at once put down by the ordinary action of the law. Above all, the American friends may recall to their memories that having been educated in a city famous for being the first to declare by its judges that a slave's footing on the soil of Britain for a moment he touches British ground. The natives of Southern Europe will be induced to study for themselves and to teach each other—must learn without our instructions, what they have already taught them, the nature of a tyrant. . . . He then urged the selection of a course of study for special cultivation, and on the use and the tendency to produce mediocrity in all. Lord Brougham then dwelt at some length on the claims of physical science to rank as an ancient system of analysis, to a fuller study than they obtained at present. "To the indefatigueness of science and writing Lord Brougham said:—"Historians and political reasoners—like myself, for instance—have not discharged their duty, partaking largely of the illusions of the volume which they read and study. They dwell upon the spectacle of their great shuttles, and still more by their successful exertions, overhead up to admiration the wonderful web that mankind—the sinners who destroyed their liberties—the conquerors or the slaves—was also in their power, and that power or of fame made no account of the greatest sufferings they could inflict on their fellow-creatures. The worst cruelty, the vilest falsehoods, have not provented the teachers of the world from receiving the name of Great upon these successes. Instead of holding up to our admiration the public acts and circumstances of great men, it is the historian's duty to make us regard with unceasing delight the ease, the calm, and happiness of blessed years, . . . the enjoyment that 'peace hath her victories, no less renowned than war;' and to celebrate those who have cultivated the arts and sciences, and the extension and security of freedom, in the improvement of national institutions and in the extension of general prosperity. His Lordship then referred to Napoleon and Wellington, saying of the latter that it would be well for his friends to omit no occasion of commemorating this illustrious man. His noble pointed and several virtues shone with a lustre derived or gained by the one sided character of historical portraiture; and referred to the homage brought to the Emperor by people by their worship of Napoleon the Great—a truly disinterested, although misdirected, feeling—and paid the price in the loss of liberty and the miseries of war. "It was said that the present ruler of France was indebted for his successful campaign impressed with a deep sense of its horrors, and that he was driven to the war by the irresistible impulses of the country had been stimulated by the recollection of the scenes he had witnessed. Let us hope and trust that no future Governor will ever succeed in tempting him to abandon this course, and that he will join with other great and rational men in discountenancing the feeling which, under his predecessors, was productive of so much misery to France and to the world—feelings which still imposed on all neighbouring nations the heavy pressure of unnecessary armaments and preparations." His Lordship at great length entered into the question of the project of Napoleon, strongly condemning the policy which was combating the errors of Rome. He concluded as follows:—"Put most strongly, and in a feeble and imperfect manner, the impression which our study of this vast subject has left upon my mind. Wisdom leads accompanied by constant benevolence. This is declared by all the world around, and is described in all the histories of our mind; we find everywhere abundant proofs that we live under a wise, indeed a human legislator, for man, producing rewards rather than denounces punishment. Above all, there is a reconciling power in the operation of these salutary impressions which can never wear out by lapse of time or be effaced by the arts of the sophisticator, or be obliterated by the cares of the world. The lessons learned and the feelings engendered in childhood will retain their auspicious influence over the mind through life, protecting against the seductions of prosperity and the pressure of affliction, preparing for the great change that must close the scene, by faith and constant belief in the Being eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, and the humble hope of immortality, which the study of His wisdom has inspired, and which the gracious announcements of His word abundantly confirm."

The address, which was listened to throughout with the greatest attention, and frequently interrupted by bursts of applause, was concluded amidst enthusiastic cheering. The benediction having been pronounced by Professor Crawford, the large assemblage slowly dispersed. On retiring from the hall Lord Brougham was repeatedly cheered. In the evening Lord Brougham and the gentlemen on whom the degrees of LL.D. had been conferred at the Chancellor's installation were entertained to dinner in the Hopetoun Rooms, Queen-street, by the Senatus Academicus, the University's Commissioners, and the members of the University Court. The assemblage broke up about ten o'clock, at which hour the Lord High Commissioner's carriage, which had been sent to the Hopetoun Rooms, conveyed Lord Brougham to Holyrood Palace, where Lady Seharan had invited a select party (including the company present at the dinner) to meet his Lordship.

SCENES ON THE DERBY DAY.

"Times may change and men may change," and no doubt they have pretty considerably since we first went to the Derby a quarter of a century ago; but still we cannot remember many days of the year more pass away." The Duke of Cambridge's riding to old John Day, each with a pretty eternal, under his arm; Crockford, with his flabby face and his necklcloth twisted round his ears, in voluminous folds; smart little Conolly; old Forth and his white hat; Bill Scott, of pleasant memory, and his Quicksilver and the Dandy Filly, which died out since then, and not left wiser or better behind in their successors; and all the great features of the festive scene manifold. Other amusements grow stale, but Epsom never does; and, in spite of the cynic, who declares that the Derby is a mere modern prefix "Pomona Gardens" to high-art treasures, and a seat in a spring carriage, four inside, with shrimps, and skittles, and a pot of stout, to a stroll among the choicest productions of the year, it is the Derby year after year, in defiance of the more courtly pleasures of Ascot.

It was only, we take pleasure in recording, in 1857 that the days when the author of "The Turf, the Chase, and the Road" was a young man, and the Quicksilver and the Dandy Filly institutions quite as important in their way as the South Western, and Great Western, or the first gained this wonderful hold over the public mind. Had Epsom, as it has been within the last few years, distance, no Derby or Oaks would ever have raised it from the level of a second-class meeting to the proportions of a national institution of success. In fact, Surrey is not a sporting county per excellence in any way. Kent is famous for its hop-fields, Lincolnshire for its Earl of Derby's staghounds; but no great race-horses are bred there as a rule, and the whole of the county depends upon its corn, and its oats, there is nothing specially indigenous to it.

The glories of the road were at their zenith in the days of the old Epsom Inns, when the Red Lion, Kingston, was the resort of the Corinthian, and the Star and Garter, Richmond, of the Peninsular and Waterloo men, and the Spread Eagle, Sutton, of the old Etonians and gentlemanly road-sleep. Those in the outer circle gradually "dropped" down the pecuniary scale, and the Derby was left to them, and thus year after year has quietly-disposed Clapham been taken to by the barristers and chaff. The rail has not brought it the relief for which it sighed, and the thousands of the pleasant rides we have had, and which every one who cares for a true and genuine "lark" will be sorry to hear will be seldom once in his life, make us hope it never will. There is something quite Dundalk in the Derby, something quite Donnybrook in the Derby, with London-bridge station, at a quarter to three; and the mass of people who "ought never again perhaps of a "Fortnum and Mason" hamper, but rather about to "dine" at the Clarendon luncheon on the Hill for the term of his natural life. Alas! quartering is the strong point of our nature, and the Derby is the one day in the year that many of our brave Londoners know.

The Kingston route on a fine day was a very pleasant one for those who did not care for a fourteen miles' walk in all. This station has always been a favourite with us, as the upper ten thousand," as their carriages or saddle-horses meet them, and they can drive on to the course, with only a tithe of the blockade and the dust. For those pedestrians who are not above the "Star and Garter" at Kingston, the walks over little rustic bridges, past copses redolent with wild flowers, and a grove of chestnuts, are, on a bell, enchanting, as the Derby worshippers. Merry parties were wont to cross those fields in long straggling lines, and the sound of unfaithful lays perspiring acquires with the ladies of their love on their arms. Halts are frequent, and frequent the chorused pæan of ham and mutton and sandwiches and "Derby Dog" and "Derby Cat," and the cry of Sir Isaac Newton tells her Darby that she cannot for the life of her get a drop for love or money between Kingston and Epsom, save, perhaps, a black bottle, but The Rambler is not a wilderness in this respect. It is true that the public-houses are not what they were, but the newer in rather a muddled stream, and that it professes to be older you would like to know the exact Worcestershire or Devonshire orchard which is cursed with such a villainous cider. The Derby pilgrim may dispute the quality under an almost vertical sun, and are, in short, not "Derby-mellow."

It is in these fields, too, far away from Sir Richard Mayne's picked A's, and the mounted police, that the "Derby Day" is to carry its especially flourishes. The green trees under which the Squire of Squashery and his family suddenly form in square the moment a rival team is seen approaching, with the intention of which if they have had one or two good sovereign hauls by the way they seldom fail to be successful, and the Corsican rifle, on the platform of a caravan, we never recognise them as adorning any other portion of the whole course of the year.

"Up the Hill to the Inn" is, to us, always the most inglorious part of the journey. You don't care for the "dust and mell of men" that you have to pass through, or the cries of the various showmen; for horsemen to be jerred; but motion lends zest to the "Derby Day," and you like to feel that the blood is warm, a more funereal pace, in long procession, for nearly a mile. Durdans, with its "Derby Day pony," lately buried in a little tomb feeded in by a railing of fleur-de-lys, with other "Derby Day" relics, Tattenham-hedge which greets the inheritors of the honour he wrested from Grey Mare's-tail, and the Downs, with their "Derby Day" gangs of Algerines of its gardens and flower-covered pastures, seem to mutely mock the "Derby Day" of the past. The gay parterres are trodden by other fellow-creatures, whose views on driving, dress, and equestrian exercise are not those of the Derby Day.

Our marvel always has been that, after so much toil, people can derive pleasure to the minor amusements with such perennial ardour. One cannot help admiring the energy of the Cockney, and that is the weighing-chair. In fact, there is nothing so sensitive as the Derby Day Cockney—you feels for him, you laugh at him, and yet no one takes less pains to put a bridle on his appetite. Many a scrag-of-mutton fancy has been ruined by luncheon. He could be so easily tempted to sit down on a nest of adders as a weighing-chair, and yet he will be seen in hundreds on the Derby Day who have no across-country saddle constantly between their legs to increase their burden. If you watch the index it is generally resting between "Fifteen" and "Sixteen," and is pretty well ascertained by the conventional English standard; and, if it is much beyond that, there is much of the galvanic Two Stocks a Penny, and, as there is a well-rooted conviction that the patriotic locks like an especial goose during the operation, its popularity is not on the increase. Paterfamilias thinks it beneath his dignity to skip about like a young fawn, grasping two strings, and youth doesn't exactly care to be laughed at by the girls. It was a great thing for My Aunt Sally when patronised by the good-bandied countesses with her at Brighton, and had to answer to retired tradesmen in the Common Pleas. But for that her real name and title might never have been known to the reading portion of the community, and she would have risen no higher in the social scale than her own sister, who has braved the battle and the breeze so long above the rus-rags. Five years "Aunt Sally" has been the mere creature of circumstances, and she did not even show her dusky face on the Downs if there was any public notoriety on whom the public wished to wreak their vengeance. Many a smashing blow General Hawley will suffer hearty; and the Duchess of Sutherland, father and son, were under a tremendous fire in 1854-55. Since then "My Aunt" has enjoyed the fourfaced immortal youth, and "Tap the Teacup" has not stood a chance with her.

Nevertheless, the Derby Day is the same unchanged front despite the gibes of Punch and the "Who's your cabman?" street-parsnel and wide-spread "Hansom" stalks about at their own pace, but still their dimensions at the next party suffer no appreciable change, and have Spondyloma on the brain to hold to a car in vain. Perhaps it would be twice as telling if it came in the shape of "Punch's Prize Medal Cab for Public Strife" and I believe.

The Grand Stand was not well built, to begin with. The best angle of sight was the Duke's, and then, as it has been since at Liverpool and Doncaster; and, although this aristocratic impression improvement since Mr. Dorling had it in hand, it will never be a success. The view from the Grand Stand was estimated in contrivances upon it; and now parties have their own places, as if at the theatre, and the ring is secure in the upper tier, at the fierce Sabel in the pit beneath. It is now full eighty years since the year of Sancho's appearance on the Downs; but, though till within the last ten or twelve a few were left who remembered the Richard Prateocks of Forty-five, we never met with one who could tell of Diomed and the Derby Stakes of early in '90. Eighty hollow bends have saddled since then in the Warren, or slowly descended from the Paddock to the Judge's Box at the Oaks. It was Jem Wyatt, the founder of our noblest line of English racing blood, sent down Alabama, Bay Malton, and Eclipse, with a fresh strain from what proved to be a poisoned chalice to the lips of the brothers Chifney; Bay Malton was the sire of Sancho, the greatest of all the "Jersey bays;" and Eclipse, the founder of the Herod line of Touchstone and the Baldwin, Sir Hercules, crowds on incident in connection with that finish and close of Sancho's career. Lord George just arrived in time to hear that "something in yellow" had won and gave his first edition of "the greatest race that ever was run." Sancho and the Brounts toll hud won the Derby for another; how Marlow, thick with mud, rode back on a hackney, and how he was first on the telegraph after so close a finish to see whether the Dutchman or the cocktail Hotspur had won; how Job Marson cut down everything almost from sod to sod on Teddington; how Sir Joseph Hawley pounded the field in the Doncaster Stakes; how Sancho, Barbarian, and Chief Baron Nicholson, with Mike Daniel (Fitzroy) on the back of the last, took off shoulder to shoulder for the Gold Cup, and how Wild Dayrell brought rejoicing into many a Wiltshire home and many a Wiltshire heart by his victory in the Derby, are matters of history, looking as if she would be dear at £30, showed the world that it was not all round Tedbaston appearances go for nothing; if the lungs are sound and the heart in the right place.

Such are the features of our Isthmian games.

THE FARM.

The glorious change of weather has put the farmers in thorough heart, and some of them say that it is fully two years since they have had any crops to put their minds. The fields of Devonshire are coming wonderfully close and thick, and the pastures are full of "rowlers" for the time of the year. The seed, although the hay crops, of course, cannot fail to be light. Wheat and barley look very promising in most trials, and, although the plant is much larger and greener, we doubt whether the ear is developed in so satisfactory a manner as to justify the anticipation of anything near an average. Beetroots measure 14 to 16 inches round, and in the Metropolitan Market mutton was at 10d.; but farmers generally had to get rid of a great part of their stock owing to the drought, starvation, and as a body derive but little benefit from the rise.

The supply of fat cattle and arrivals, with the exception of Mr. Richard Booth's Prince of the Vale, the property of Sir Samuel, Bart., the dun of Queen Mab and Queen of the May. The three last of the Hopeworth and Lord Lyons' stock from Cobham Park, Surrey, from Campsfollower, and half brother to Soldier's Bride (which is to be Mr. Rooke's property), Campsfollower (Mr. Payne), and a heifer calf from Welcome. Lady Piget has purchased Viscount Ossington's Cleveland Bay Stallion, Mr. Barnes, of Moynalty, in the county of Meath, whither British Prince has returned, having a pleasant cloud of descendants at Aylesby.

The report of the Royal Agricultural Society is most favourable; and 10s. 11½d. in the pound has been realised on the property of the late secretary; and a dividend of 10s. has been paid on the £100 in the New Three per Cents; and at present the society consists of 5763 members. Mr. Sewell has carried on the campaign at the annual meeting, last Tuesday, and insisted that the society should become more and more an agreeable club, and did not represent the "practical farmers." At which Lord Fermoy's friends, Mr. Jones with him, and argued that the landlord, if he knew his business, was quite as much a practical farmer as the tenant. PULLINGER AND THE STOCK EXCHANGE.—The Stock Exchange committee have not shrunk from the duty which was imposed upon them by the resolution of the general meeting with Pullinger's bankruptcy, and a number of very serious inquiry has conducted them to a decision that four of the members, whose names are given in an advertisement, have been guilty of offensive transactions on his account, have brought themselves within the scope of the rule of the house which prohibits the members to transact business for clerks without their knowledge of their employers. By a resolution passed on Monday the committee have also upon the ground have suspended three of the persons implicated until the next meeting of the committee in March next, i.e., for a period of ten months. It is stated that in addition the sentence is fairly more than the sentence. It is understood that the committee will shortly publish for general information the results of their endeavours to trace that portion of the money squandered by Pullinger which passed through the Stock Exchange. The task of continuing the investigation now devolves upon the directors of the Union Bank, who are trying to trace bank notes which have passed through the hands of third parties quite unconnected with Pullinger or with the Stock Exchange.

Relics of the Past,

A MEDIUM OF COMMUNICATION ON ANTIQUARIAN SUBJECTS BETWEEN MEN OF LETTERS, SCIENCE, ART, &c.

THE KEY OF THE PRINCIPAL GATE AND A STONE FROM THE CENTRE ENTRANCE OF THE BASTILLE.

THIS interesting relic of the once-dreaded State prison of France is one of the items in an extremely valuable collection of MSS. and other curiosities shortly to be sold by Messrs. Chinnock and Galworthy. The key is fastened to the stone by iron hooks, driven into wood plugs, let in to hold it; and round the stone, cut in capitals, is the inscription:—"Cette Pierre vient de cachots de la Bastille donnée à M. Moreau St. Mery, President des Electeurs, 1789, par le Patriote Palloy, L.A.N. 4e." Accompanying it is the original letter to M. Palloy from the Mayor of Paris, I. S. Bailly, thanking him for the stone and inviting him to dinner.

These mementos of the terrible Bastille recall some particulars of that infamous stronghold of despotism. The castle of the Bastille was erected during the years 1370 and 1383, by Hugh d'Aubriot, as a protection, it is said, against the English. Curiously enough, the architect himself became some years afterwards a prisoner in one of the towers of the fortress through the resentment of the Church. The original building consisted only of two circular towers, one on each side of the road leading into Paris from the suburbs of St. Anthony. These towers were connected by a high and strong wall, in the centre of which was the gate of the town. Other towers were subsequently added, and joined together by walls of enormous thickness and measuring eighty feet in height from the level of the interior court. By degrees the Bastille became divested of its military importance, and assumed the character of a regular prison, the eight towers of the citadel being converted into as many separate wards, and, in communication with frightful subterranean cachots, made capable of holding a thousand prisoners. Those who became the objects of Royal or Ministerial resentment were committed to the Bastille by secret orders, called lettres de cachet, in which no specific charge was brought against them, no period named for bringing them to trial, and by which all access to their families or friends were entirely suspended—sometimes for years, sometimes for ever. So great, indeed, was the secrecy observed that persons are recorded to have been privately arrested and confined in this prison-house for years, without its being known to their connections what had become of them, till they were able, on being discharged, to tell their story; and even then the apprehension of being again deprived of liberty rendered them extremely circumspect in what they said. The history of the Bastille furnishes examples of prolonged imprisonment which appear incredible. When the registers of this dismal abyss were examined, in the reign of Louis XVI., it was discovered that one unfortunate old man had been immured for forty-seven years! Upon being released from his dungeon and conducted to the street where he had formerly lived he could discover no trace of his old abode. His family and relatives were all dead or dispersed. None of those whom he addressed remembered him, or recollected any of the events to which he referred. A whole generation had passed away; a new race had sprung up; and in his native city he was an absolute stranger. From an ancient domestic, whom he accidentally discovered, he learned that his wife, worn out with anxious expectation and unavailing regret, had sunk into the grave thirty years before; and that all his children had gone abroad to distant climes. At this tale of sorrow the hapless man, it is related, actually applied to the Minister to be restored to his prison again.

Like most edifices of a similar nature, the Bastille soon became odious to the people, and it was against this monument of arbitrary oppression that the first outbreak of the populace was directed at the commencement of the French Revolution. The popular Minister, Necker, having been dismissed by the King, his departure from Paris gave the signal for an appeal to arms. Camille Desmoulins, a young and enthusiastic patriot, harangued the people at the Palais Royal. The Guards when called upon refused to fire, on which many of the citizens formed themselves into a National Guard. But the infuriated multitude attacked and pillaged in all quarters; the barriers were fired; and on the 14 h of July, 1789, the wild army appeared before the walls of the detested Bastille. Stanch in his principles of military honour, the Governor of the prison, the aged Marquis de Launay, refused to surrender, raised the drawbridge, and fired upon the people. His feeble garrison, consisting of only eighty-two Invalids and thirty-two Swiss mercenaries, was, however, unable to withstand the onslaught of the mob, assisted as they soon were by the French Guards, who brought cannon and shot down the supports of the drawbridge. After a struggle of about four hours the people made themselves masters of the fortress. The Marquis de Launay, his Lieutenant, and some of the soldiers under their command, were killed; the rest of the garrison escaped by disguising themselves as prisoners, and creeping into the narrow cells among the confined. For a detailed account of this important siege the reader may consult a work entitled "The Bastille Dévoilée," and also "The History of the Bastille, 1790." But the most graphic description is that by Carlyle, in his admirable history of "The French Revolution":—

To describe the siege of the Bastille (thought to be one of the most important in history) perhaps transcends the talent of mortals. Could one but, after infinite reading, get to understand so much as the plan of the building! But there is an open esplanade at the end of the Rue St. Antoine. There are forecourts, Cour Avancé, Cour de l'Orme; arched gateway; then new drawbridges, dormant bridges, rampant bastions, and the grim Eight Towers: a labyrinthic mass, high frowning there of all ages, from twenty years to four hundred and twenty—beleaguered in this its last hour by mere chaos come again. Ordnance of all calibres; throats of all capacities; men of all plans; every man his own engineer: seldom since the war of Pygmies and Cranes was there seen so anomalous a thing. . . . . . . All earthly things must end. Along the streets of Paris circulate seven Bastille prisoners, borne shoulder-high; seven heads on pikes; the keys of the Bastille, and much else. See, also, the Gardes Françaises, in their steadfast military way, marching home to their barracks, with the Invalides and Swiss kindly inclosed in a hollow square. Likewise ashlar stones of the Bastille continue thundering through the dusk; its paper archives shall fly wide. Old secrets come to view; and long-buried despair finds voice. Read this portion of an old letter:—"If for my consolation Monseigneur would grant me, for the sake of God and the most blessed Trinity, that I could have news of my dear wife; were it only her name on a card, to show that she is alive! It were the greatest consolation I could receive; and I should for ever bless the greatness of Monseigneur.' Poor prisoner, who named thyself 'Quéret Démery,' and hast no other history; she is dead, that dear wife of thine; and thou art dead! 'Tis fifty years since thy breaking heart put this question, to be heard now first, and long heard, in the hearts of men."—"The French Revolution," 1st edit., vol. i., pp. 277-78.

There are said to have been two keys to the great gate of the Bastille,—one in the possession of the King himself, the other in that of the Governor of the prison. The first of these fell into the hands of General Lafayette, and was sent by him, with other memorabilia, to General Washington at Mount Vernon, in the hall of which venerable mansion it still hangs. The other is declared to be that of which we have given a representation.

WALTHAM ABBEY SEAL.

WE give, in connection with the Engravings of Waltham Abbey Church which appeared in this Journal last week, a facsimile of the Abbey Seal. Respecting the arms of Waltham Abbey, Farmer in his history says:—"They appear at this day neither in glass, wood, nor in stone, in or about the church thereof. At last we find them to have been in a fair deed of Robert Fuller, the last abbot, thus—viz., Gules, two angels or, flying with their wings extended, with their hands holding betwixt them a cross argent. This cross was brought hither, saith Camden, our antiquary, by a miracle out of the west, whence Waltham hath the addition of Holy Cross."

Vertue engraved the seal and two counter-seals of this abbey. An impression of the first, on green wax, is appendant to a charter of the 23rd of Henry VIII., in the Chapter House, at Westminster. It has also been engraved in Ogbourne's "History of Essex." The inscription round the Obverse is "Hoc est Sigill Ecclesie Sancte Crucis de Waltham." The first counter seal, appendant to a deed of the year 1253, has two heads in the area, supposed to represent Tovi (Tooi) and Harold, looking towards each other, circumscribed "Hoc Carte Fedus cum Tovi firmat Haroldus." The second counter-seal was apparently an antique of the Roman times which had been dug up.

The seal here represented is clearly of a date much later than the time of King Harold, who rebuilt the abbey. This is shown by the Reverse, which gives on one side the arms of England of the time of the Plantagenets; and on the other side the arms of Waltham Abbey, nearly as given in "Burke's Armoury"—viz., Arg. on a cross engrailed sa. five crosses crosslet fitchée or. The rest of the Reverse is thus explainable:—Tovi, standard-bearer to King Canute, who began the town of Waltham, built a church for two priests, which King Harold rebuilt, enlarged, and amply endowed, as the Cotton MS., Julius D. vi., 2, states; and therefore the reverse of this convent's seal is said to have been two heads, looking on each other, with this circumscription:—"Hoc Carte Fedus cum Tovi firmat Haroldus." A bull of Pope Urban enjoined the Canons of Waltham not to mortgage any of their estate at the command of any person whatsoever. Hence appears the figure of a bull on the Reverse. The Obverse gives, in the centre, the other arms of the abbey—viz., Az. (not gu) two angels volant or, supporting a cross calvary on three grieces arg.

GARIBALDI'S OFFICERS.

The Siècle publishes a letter from M. Ricciardi, containing some interesting details of the seven officers who, under Garibaldi, command the Cacciatori delle Alpi:—

La Masa is known through the brilliant part he took in the insurrection witnessed by the city of Palermo on the 12th of January, 1848, and also through his having taken part in the war of independence as a chief over some Sicilian volunteers. He contributed also to the defence of Messina against the Royal troops in the month of September, 1848. During his exile he published a few political and historical works, one of which was an account of the events of which Sicily was the theatre in 1846 and 1849.

Carini, who is also a Sicilian, got up a regiment of cavalry at Palermo during the revolutionary period of 1848 and 1849, and when the revolution broke down he tried to serve in exile not only the cause of Sicily but also that of Italy, by his French and Italian Review, which appeared at Paris until the commencement of 1859.

Stocco, a native of Calabria, is well known and very popular in that part of the Neapolitan kingdom. In 1848 he was one of my trustiest and bravest Lieutenants in the insurrection of the Calabrians, and he especially gave proof of his bravery and skill on the 27th of June, during that combat at long odds between Angitola and Maida, that lasted nearly twelve hours, and in which from four to five hundred Calabrians were seen fighting advantageously against nearly all the troops commanded by General Nunziante, which troops would have been utterly defeated had the other Calabrian chiefs come up to the aid of Stocco.

Carioli is the brother of one of those glorious volunteers who were killed last year in the war against Austria. As soon as he heard of Garibaldi's plans he came here in haste from Pavia, and it was his own mother who, still in mourning for her eldest son, presented him to the General, and, as if she had done nothing yet, presented to him the sum of thirty thousand francs! I can tell you that traits of this kind are by no means rare with us, especially of late; and truly such a case does not furnish the least plain proof of the complete moral change that has been effected in Italy and of the happy destiny that awaits it.

Nino Bixio, a native of Genoa, is much liked here, and most popular in Italy. Wounded at Rome in 1849, by the side of his compatriot and friend, Godefroy Mamely, he formed part in 1859 of the legion commanded by Garibaldi, one of whose most brilliant Lieutenants he was. Used to the sea like Garibaldi, having served as a ship-captain on a long voyage, he has just rendered eminent services to the expedition, in which he commands the Lombards.

Orsini contributed greatly to the insurrection at Palermo in the January of 1848, and was one of the principal defenders of Messina in the September of the same year. In 1849 he defended the rest of Sicily against the Royal troops commanded by Filangieri. Compelled to flee, he took service in Turkey, with the rank of a Colonel of Artillery; but at the first cry from Sicily he did not fail to come, and will no doubt render great services to the cause of his country by his special knowledge.

Anfossi is a distinguished officer of the old Sardinian Army, and has also expiated by a long exile his love for liberty.

THE WINES OF BURGUNDY.—(To the Editor.).—In an article addressed to you by Mr. Cyrus Redding, in your Number of May 12, he quotes the "Santenot" as a white wine, and speaks of the white wines of "Meursault" as agreeable, but with a slight taste of sulphur! Allow me to state that in the first place the "Santenot" is a red wine, and the first growth of the Beaune district; and also that the white wines of the "Côte d'Or" have no taste of sulphur, but those which have been put into sulphuretted casks, either to stop an ill-state of fret, or to obtain a very pale colour. FELIX LAUSSEURE, of Nuits, Cote d'Or, Upper Burgundy.

From the Clerkenwell Police Court a man named Joseph Alozsius Lucas, formerly a clerk in the War Office, then an ensign in the Queen's County Rifles, has been committed for a series of robberies at railway-stations, found guilty, and sentenced to two years' hard labour, to be followed by ten years' penal servitude.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

I. D. M.—The new and enlarged edition of Dr. Forbes's "History of Oriental Chess" is nearly ready, we are told.

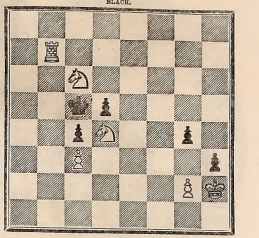
W. S PAVITT.—The memorandum has been mislaid. Be good enough to repeat the numbers required, and send your address.

I. GILBERT.—Of the last batch, No. 1 is very clever; and Nos 2 and 3 are defective.

I. L.—You are mistaken in assuming that when in a problem a Pawn stands at his 7th sq. the solution is to be effected without "Queening" that Pawn.

W. M; IGNOTUS; W G; and others.—You are right; Problem No. 847 admits of an easy solution, in three moves, by 1. Kt to K 4th.

F. B., Bombay Army.—It shall be examined.



R. L., Yorkshire Chess Association.—The Settle and Sheffield Chess Clubs have joined this association, and the next meeting is appointed to be held in Leeds.

LEX.—You should write to the secretary of the St. George's Chess Club, 20, King street Covent-garden. The annual subscription is three guineas; no entrance fee.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.)

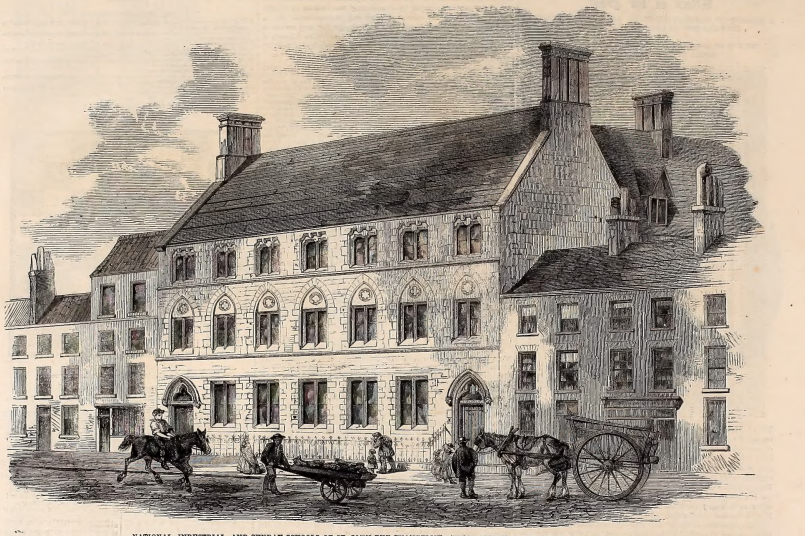
4, Rue Ducale, Brussels, Monday, May 21.



SIR,—In your chess column of your last week's Number my name is mentioned as having played in the late chess tournament in Paris, and that I was defeated by Monsieur Kolisch, although receiving the odds of pawn and two moves. As I have not been in Paris since October of last year, I consequently could not have possibly played in the tournament, and I shall be obliged if you will state in your ensuing Number that by inadvertence my name had been mentioned instead of some one else.

I am, your obedient servant, F. W. ALLIX.

 We derived the list of the combatants, and the result of the tourney, from the French chess magazine, La Régence.

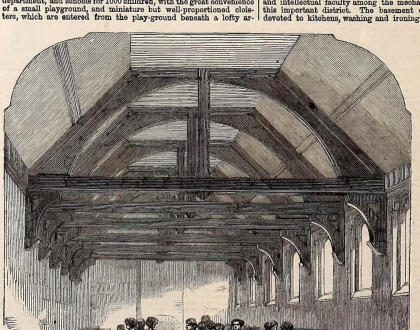
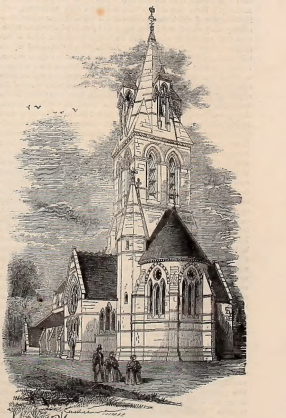
In consequence of the numerous accidents occasioned by the overcrowded thoroughfares, a correspondent proposes that bridges of a light and elegant construction should be made over the most difficult crossings in the London streets.

The Italie Nouvelle, a French journal published at Milan, announces that a company is being formed for piercing a tunnel through the Simplon, in connection with a railway line which is to start from Geneva, touch at Thonon, Martigny, Sion, and Brigg, and end at Arona, on the Italian side.



NATIONAL, INDUSTRIAL, AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS OF ST. JOHN THE EVANGELIST.—WEST VIEW IN JOHN STREET, FITZROY-SQUARE.

ST. JOHN'S SCHOOLS.



THESE magnificent schoolrooms, which the accompanying Illustration represents, are situated in one of the most dense and needy localities of this overgrown parish between Tottenham-court-road and John-street, Fitzroy-square. They are the result of five years' labour on the part of the Rev. Mr. Gill, the incumbent, and a committee of ladies and gentlemen of the district. St. John's has been made one of the separate districts, for ecclesiastical purposes only, of St. Pancras parish; and, as good schools are almost the first essentials for ministerial usefulness, there has been neither lack of money or perseverance to accomplish such an object for the new district. The cost of the site was £3627 3s. 11d.; and that of the schoolrooms and master's house £5418 10s. 1d.; and, all credit due to the promoters of these extensive buildings, no debt whatever remains due on their completion. They occupy the site of four old houses in John-street and four in Kirkman's place, which is an avenue leading out of Tottenham-court-road. Having such an area of ground, the committee were enabled to provide sufficient school accommodation not only for the wants of the present but of future generations. These new buildings comprise classrooms, master's house, industrial department, and schools for 1000 children, with the great convenience of a small playground, and miniature but well-proportioned cloisters, which are entered from the play-ground beneath a lofty arcade of stone. It would be difficult to define any particular style of architecture in their construction; but the conveniences which they afford, the light, lofty, and airy character of the different rooms, and the adaptation of every portion of space to some useful end, reflect upon the architect as much credit as would the most elaborate production of Gothic or Grecian, Norman or Elizabethan, models. The infants' schoolroom, 63 feet by 30, is on the ground floor, and entered by a spacious doorway from John-street, above which is the girls' schoolroom, approached by a broad staircase from the playground, adjoining Kirkman's-place. This, as well as the boys' schoolroom, is 70 feet long by 30 wide, each having not only the same proportions in space, but similarly ornamented by a fine open roof, with larger tribeams and curved braces of stained deal, resting on stone brackets or corbels. The windows are spacious, with large sashes, so as to give plenty of light, a requisite much neglected in many modern public buildings. Adjoining these rooms are large classrooms, 30 feet by 15 each, attached to which are lavatories on an improved principle, with every personal convenience that can characterise the requirements of the present day. The large rooms are to be employed in the evening for the delivery of lectures, social gatherings, and the promotion of every moral and intellectual faculty among the mechanics and working-men of this important district. The basement of the whole building is devoted to kitchens, washing and ironing rooms, where, when sufficient funds can be raised for providing the somewhat costly materials for furniture, it is proposed to establish an industrial school, wherein female children can learn all the rudiments of domestic cookery and household service.

There is a master's house attached, six stories high, and which is allotted out into sufficiently requisite apartments to accommodate his subordinate staff, so that teachers and assistants can have a permanent residence on the scene of their duties. All the buildings are of brick, with stone dressings and heads to the windows, doors, &c. They are roofed with slate, and surmounted by iron finials. The architect of the building is Mr. William Slater, of 4, Carlton Chambers.

The ceremony of inaugurution, or opening the schools, took place on the 17th instant, under the presidency of his Grace the Duke of Marlborough, and was attended by a considerable body of the parochial and metropolitan clergy, besides a large assemblage of the ladies and gentlemen of the district. The programme for the day's proceedings was literally fulfilled by attendance at the district church in the morning, and at the schoolrooms in the afternoon, where, after singing by the whole company and prayer by the Rev. M'Gill, the schools were formally opened by the noble president, who subsequently delivered a very able speech on the successful completion of such a noble work as the District Schools of St. John the Evangelist. In the evening there was a soirée for privileged guests, who were admitted by tickets, and by whom a most agreeable and instructive conversazione was maintained. Tea, coffee, and other refreshments were provided, and the centre or girls' schoolroom was most tastefully laid out and decorated with works of art and virtù kindly lent by different persons to the committee on this auspicious occasion. The walls were covered with beautiful paintings, drawings, engravings, chromo-lithographs, and all the modern productions of our improving age; while in different parts of the room were ranged, on proportionate tables, scrap-books, bronzes, models, albums, Indian and other Oriental curiosities," under the category of which were classified "missionary curiosities" in African idols. Messrs. Murray and Heath had furnished a table with a number of stereoscopes and interesting views; Messrs. Broadwood supplied for the evening a fine grand piano; while parterres and vases of hothouse plants interspersed in different parts of the room gave an éclat to the whole appearance which the friends of St. John's District Schools will not easily forget in calling to mind the pleasures they enjoyed on the day of their inauguration.

NEW CHURCH IN ST. GILES'S, OXFORD.

In the Architectural Society's Exhibition of Pictures, in their gallery in Conduit-street, are two clever pen-and-ink drawings, by Mr. G. E. Skeet, of the church which is to be built under his direction in the parish of St. Giles, Oxford, and the foundation-stone of which was lately laid by the Lord Bishop of the diocese. Our Engraving is taken from one of the drawings referred to, and represents the eastern portion of the exterior of the church. All who have any love or knowledge of what is popularly called the Gothic style of architecture cannot fail to admire the simplicity yet boldness of design, the fair proportions, and the well-broken outline which are here strikingly put before us. It reminds us of some of the happiest buildings of those so-called "dark ages," which, nevertheless, bear witness to an exquisite combination of grandeur and beauty in our ecclesiastical edifices. The style selected by the architect is that of the Early Decorated, or Middle Pointed. The church when completed will consist of a nave with clerestory, and north and south aisles opening into transepts, and a central tower surmounted by a spire, the space beneath which, and the apse beyond, is intended to form the chancel. The church is to be built of Gibraltar stone, relieved by bands of coloured stone both within and without, and the internal effect will be heightened by the columns of the nave being formed of Aberdeen granite, while the vaulting columns of the chancel and apse will be of Devonshire marble.

The church is being erected by voluntary contributions. The estimated cost of the whole is, we understand, £7000. It will accommodate nearly 700 persons. A contract has been entered into with Mr. Joseph Castle for building the chancel and transepts only, which is all that the present state of the funds will allow, and which will cost £2400, exclusive of fittings and incidental expenses. The promoters are appealing for money to enable them to proceed with the nave, and for which £3000 more will be required.

MDME. BORGHI-MAMO.

THE Engraving which adorns our present number is copied from Le Mercier's portrait, published in Paris, the most faithful and spirited of the many likenesses which have been taken of this accomplished lady. Mdme. Borghi-Mamo, whose recent appearance at Her Majesty's Theatre has created so great a sensation in our musical circles, gained at an early age a great reputation in her native country, but it did not extend beyond the Alps till 1854, in which year she made her début at the Paris Royal Italian Opera in the character of Amenaïs, in the "Trovatore," when that opera was produced under the composer's own direction. Her success was triumphant, and at once placed her in the pre-eminent position which she has ever since held. She has been not less successful on the French than on the Italian stage. Soon after her début at the Théâtre Italien she was engaged at the Académie Impériale de Musique, or Grand Opéra, where she first appeared in Donizetti's opera, "La Favorita," which (as our musical readers are aware) was originally written for that theatre, and was afterwards adapted to the Italian stage. How it happened that Borghi-Mamo should have remained for six years in the French capital, the object of universal admiration, and achieving triumph after triumph, without having been called to London, we cannot pretend to understand. But better late than never. Thanks to the sagacity of the lessee of Her Majesty's Theatre, the London public are now in a condition to judge for themselves of her merits.

She has appeared before us in the two characters which laid the foundation of her Parisian success—Amenaïs, in the "Trovatore," and Leonora, in the "Favorita," and in both she has fully justified her reputation. Having so recently described the impressions made on us by both these performances, it is sufficient at present to say that she has all the gifts of nature and all the attainments of art requisite to form a great actress and a great singer. As an actress, she has beauty, grace, and original genius; as a singer, she has a voice of transcendant excellence, uniting the depth and fulness of the contralto with the clearness and flexibility of the soprano, together with that exquisite purity of style and finish of execution which are to be acquired only in the schools of Italy.

MDLLE. CSILLAG, OF THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT-GARDEN.—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY MAYALL.

MDLLE. ROSA CSILLAG.

THIS great actress and singer is a native of Hungary. She was born in 1836, at a little village near Pesth, where her father was chanter of the church. Her musical talent showed itself at a very early age; and at six years old she could sing little songs, accompanying herself on the guitar. Her family having removed to Pesth, where there was a theatre, she began to take little parts such as children could perform. At ten years of age she was engaged at the National Theatre of Pesth, and at the same time received instruction in music. At fifteen she obtained an engagement at Vienna, where she soon rose to the highest position on the stage. She has since been in other places at Vienna to the present time; but, having every year leave of absence for three or four months, she made excursions to Russia, Wallachia, Moldavia, Poland, Prussia, Hungary, and Belgium; and everywhere met with the greatest success. Last year she came to London, and sang at Her Majesty's, and during that time made her first visit to England, and sang with great éclat at one of the concerts of the Philharmonic Society.

At present she is at our Royal Italian Opera, and her brilliant triumphs on the Covent Garden boards must be fresh in the memory of our musical readers. Mdlle. Csillag's range of characters is very extensive. Her principal parts are Fides, in the "Prophète;" Valentine, in the "Huguenots;" Leonora, in "Fidelio;" Leonora, in the "Favorita;" Rachel, in the "Juive;" Elvira, in "Ernani;" Edgardine, in "Buryanthe;" Agatha, in the "Freischütz;" and Donna Elvira, in "Don Giovanni;" in which last character, we may remind our readers, she appeared at Covent Garden, giving new interest and importance to a part which has never been sufficiently understood in this country.

THE KING AND QUEEN OF SWEDEN.

ILLUSTRATIONS, from Sketches by our Special Artist, of some of the most striking incidents in connection with the coronation of the King and Queen are in course of preparation, and will speedily appear in this Journal. In the meantime we give, on page 505, Portraits of their Majesties from photographs recently taken by Mathias Hansen, of Stockholm. The new King of Sweden, who succeded to the throne on the death of his father, King Oscar, on the 8th of July last year, had previously experienced some of the duties and cares of Royalty, inasmuch as from September, 1857, he had performed the functions of the Regency of the kingdom, owing to the incapacity of the late King, caused by serious illness. The dynasty of Bernadotte, having now reached the third generation, may well be supposed to be as firmly established on the throne of Sweden as that of any other Royal family of the Continent. Charles XV. (Charles Louis Eugene) was the eldest son of Joseph Francis Oscar I., by Josephine Maximiliana Eugenie, daughter of Eugene de Beauharnais, Duke of Leuchtenberg, and cousin to the present Emperor of the French. He was born on the 3rd of May, 1826; and married, on the 19th of June, 1850, the Princess Wilhelmina Frederica Alexandrina Anna Louisa, Princess of Orange, daughter of William Frederick, Prince of the Netherlands. Her Majesty was born on the 6th of August, 1828. The King is a very handsome man, and his fine figure looked, we are told, extremely noble in the robes of state with which he was invested on the coronation day. Queen Louisa also, whose features, as will be seen by our Portrait, wear a very pleasing and amiable expression, looked, our correspondent says, right regal in her state attire. The number of this Journal of July 23 last year bore an accurate likeness of the late King Oscar.

THE AERREPHON.

THE Aerephon is introduced to the British public by Mr. Arthur S. Denny, one of the American patentees, who nearly a year since brought before the public, at the Crystal Palace, an instrument of similar principle but much less perfect in its arrangements, its tones, and its musical capacity. The instrument placed in the Crystal Palace under the title of "Calliope," an illustration of which appeared in this Journal at that time, was brought to this country in an imperfect condition. It was Mr. Denny's object to secure the interest of the musical and scientific gentlemen of this country, in order that he might be enabled to bring the invention to a higher state of perfection. We learn that he is indebted to Messrs. Horne and Thorthwaite, of Newgate-street; Mr. Henry Willis, the organ-manufacturer; Mr. Henry Distin, the musical instrument manufacturer, and others, for many valuable suggestions, which have enabled him to mature and apply important improvements. Mr. S. B. Simpson, the enterprising proprietor of Cremorne Gardens, ever on the alert to gratify a laudable curiosity on the part of the public, has arranged that now in course of erection, in connection with Mr. Denny to have this instrument brought before the public at his popular place of amusement, where those interested in such matters may always have an opportunity of witnessing its performances. Every night, we understand, the powerful notes of the Aeroplon will furnish music for one or more hours. Dancing by steam is novel enough, indeed; but, judging from the private performances of the instrument, we see no reason why it should not furnish good music for dancing. On Tuesday week, by invitation of Mr. Denny, a numerous and select party met at his residence to witness the performance of this remarkable instrument, which, although propelled by steam power, "discoursed eloquent music,"

THE AEREPHON.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

ELECTRICITY.—M. Faye has submitted to the French Academy an account of his experimental researches on the application of Ruhmkorf to put in evidence the repulsive force of incandescent surfaces; and M. Serrus has presented a memoir on a coil-telegraph of the electric light.

THE STEREOSCOPE.—Sir David Brewster, in a communication to the Photographic Society of Scotland, asserts that the fundamental principle of the stereoscope was well known to Euclid (v. c. 390), to Galen (A.D. 160), and to Baptista Porta (A.D. 1593), and refers also to two drawings (both representing a young man sitting on a bank) in the Musée Wicar at Lille, by Jacopo Chimenti (who died in 1640), which competent observers consider to have been binocular drawings intended by the artist to be united into relief either by the eye or by an instrument, as in the stereoscope.

CHRONOSCOPE.—MM. Closes and Gérard have communicated to the Société Philomathique a method of determining the presence of chlorine and sulphur in natural and manufactured cacothodes. They recommend for this purpose distillation in preference to combustion. A resumé of their processes is given in Institut.

THE ELECTRIC TRANSMISSION OF TIME has been aided by M. Rédier, a clockmaker of Toulouse, who, by employing conical instead of plane pendulums, as well as other new mechanical arrangements (described in the Cosmos), is said to be able to transmit the time from place to place much more accurately than has been done hitherto. The Municipal Council of Toulouse has lately voted 22,000 francs for the establishment of fifty electric dials in that city.

COLOURS.—M. Chevreul has presented to the French Academy of Sciences his manuscript and specimens of a work which is the summary of completion of his researches on the science and art of dyeing, and which is the result of researches undertaken to find a method of defining and naming colours according to a precise and experimental method. In the Comptes Rendus will be found a description of M. Chevreul's chromatic circle, and journals now in course of preparation, in which the author is ably assisted by M. R. H. Digeon, a skilful artist.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

Professor ANSTED's fifth lecture, on Thursday (last week), was devoted to "Volcanoes, and the causes" "extinct" (considered to be extinct before historic times) and "recent." The evidences of volcanic action are widely diffused over the globe, in Sardinia—on the shores of the Caspian, and of the sea, on level plains, and on mountains 20,000 feet above the level of the sea. Volcanic phenomena are usually preceded by a tremendous shock of noise, audible at a very great distance, and comprise the eruption of steam, gas (usually sulphurous acid), mud, ashes, large stones, and, finally, torrents of lava (melted rock), from two to seven miles in width, and five to fifty in length, which flow, overwhelming everything in their course, and, utterly changing the face of the country. Eruptions of Vesuvius, Etna, the Caucasus, and Iceland, were described in detail. Volcanic mountains are usually conical in shape, and have a crater or cavity at the internal heat of the globe. The shape of the crater varies from that of a funnel to that of a wine-glass. According to Von Buch and Humboldt, the upheaving of volcanic is due to upheaval; but Sir Charles Lyell and Mr. Poulett Scrope attribute to the internal accumulation of expansive matter. In the moon volcanos appear to have been numerous and extensive.

Professor WILLIAMSON (of the University of London) delivered the evening discourse, "On Atmospheric Electricity."—Professor C. Wheatstone in the chair. The speaker commenced with an account of experiments upon the ordinary phenomena of static electricity, with especial reference to the important researches during the eighteenth century of Stephen Gray, who discovered electric conduction and insulation; of Dufaye, who distinguished between the vitreous (or positive) and resinous (or negative) electricities, and their attraction and repulsion; of Franklin, who proved the identity of the electric discharges and lightning; and of Beccaria, who made the first important series of observations on atmospheric electricity.—The earth and its atmosphere have been compared to a Leyden jar—the earth itself being negative, the lowest strata of the air generally positive, and the upper strata highly positive; the variation of the latter with the season giving rise to all the phenomena of atmospheric electricity. Hence the importance of continuous accurate observation. For this purpose Professor Thomson explained and exhibited in action (by means of the electric lamp) certain new apparatus—one consisting of an electrometer modified for self-registration, and connected with a water apparatus for collecting atmospheric electricity, the state of which was indicated by a graduated scale; and another portable electrometric apparatus, for travellers, which by means of a spring kindled a match, producing a cone of fire in the open air, in a state of position near the electrometer, which thus indicated the electric state of the surrounding atmosphere. To further appreciate the professor determined the electric state of the air outside the building to be then vitreous, or positive. This apparatus is now in use at the Kew Observatory. Concluding remarks were made upon the confirmation of the correctness of many of the views of early electricians by the researches of still living philosophers.

The lecture of Mr. F. A. ABEL (chief of the chemical department at Woolwich Arsenal) on Saturday last was preceded by gunpowder. Chemical action effects a change in the physical condition of the matter operated upon, transforming it from the solid or liquid state to that of gas, more or less vered. The very rapid and considerable increase in the volume of the substances is susceptible of application to the exertion of force in any particular direction. On this depend the useful properties of gunpowder. The increase in volume resulting from the rearrangement of its constituents is, however, insufficient to produce such great results obtained from that explosive. These are principally due to the enormous expansion of the gaseous products of decomposition at the moment of change caused by the heat developed. The volume of gas produced by the explosion of pure powder is about 317 times that of the original powder; but at the moment of explosion the volume of the gas is computed to be increased to not less than 3960 times that of the powder, by the action of the intense heat (estimated by Bunsen at 6000° Fahr.) and force which it exerts when in this highly-heated condition is calculated at from seventeen to twenty tons on the square inch. Modern gunpowder, in its composition, differs but little from that of early times. Its superior force, uniformity, and durability are due to improved modes of manufacture. Purer saltpetre and sulphur are employed, and more suitable woods are selected for the charcoal; and better methods of incorporating, pressing, and granulation are adopted. The relation of the constituents of gunpowder to each other, and their chemical changes at the time of explosion, were fully and illustratively explained experimentally.

Dr. EDWARD CORNISH (on Tuesday last) delivered his fifth lecture, the subject being the horse tribe, or well-bred herbivora (Equidæ). The characteristics of the genus Equus (horse, ass, zebra, and quagga) were pointed out; the horse (Equus caballus) being taken as the type. Bruce's antelope (Hippotragus Bruci) and the Indian gazelle (Gazella Indica, &c.) were specially referred to. The questions of the origin of the horse tribe, and the causes of the variety of form in the genus, were discussed, and considered to be the result of the peculiarities of the rising from Tablet, the topography of the Cape, and the progress of civilization in this country; but the following characterised as strong, fleet, keen, and treacherous (Equus ferox) was exhibited in the living animals specimens of which belong in the Zoological Gardens).

PARIS FASHIONS FOR JUNE.

In all the recent fashions of ladies of the Ancien Régime the ample dimensions of both bonnet and shawl, white, and black are their principal colours. The summer sacs have still continued, with a slight alteration only in their shape, to suit the training style of dress. The few attempts hitherto made with the view of reintroducing the mode, with altogether contrary pretensions as to size, have signally failed, and are now merely regarded as momentary eccentricities, which have had their day, and are dead. We will not say what share the interests of the linendrapers and lacemakers have had in contributing to this victory; but, unfortunately for the purses of affectionate husbands and of fathers of lovely daughters, the amount of striped silk, figured muslin, or barège required for the summer toilets of their darlings will undergo no diminution this season.

To meet the necessities of the mode vast cashmere shawls, bordered with silk and edged with gimp and lace, have been manufactured by the best houses in Lyons, while, and black are their principal colours; the selection of which must be made to depend upon the shade of the robe over which the shawl is to be worn. Crape bonnets, trimmed with blond, tulle, and marabout feathers, predominate; but we have seen a great variety of Rosalie and Leghorn bonnets, ornamented with velvet flowers and delicious puffs, composed of a mass of small feathers, for which we augur much success. Let us not forget the pelerine, which, under the name of the Talma, has become in the paths of fashion, and occupy prominent positions in the chapeaux, on the waists, and in the shoes of such ladies as are fond of glitter. If all the so called golden ornaments seen in the Paris shops were really of that precious material, not all the auriferous produce of California and Australia for a long period would suffice for their manufacture. Fortunately, tout ce qui brille n'est pas de l'or.

ASCOT RACES.—RACE GLASSES in every variety of size of price at CALLAGHAN'S, 23A, New Bond-street, W., corner of Conduit-street.

PHOTOGRAPHY.—VOIGTLANDER'S LENSES are now further reduced in price from May 1. The import duty being taken off, and a great economy of labour effected by the erection of most perfect machinery, Messrs. Voigtländer of Vienna are thereby enabled to offer their new Lenses (with the visual and chemical foci coincident) at prices considerably less than any of the best English makers, thus securing to the purchaser the most perfect instrument (every lense being guaranteed) at a price hitherto unattainable. Detailed Catalogues may be had free at Callaghan's, sole Agent, 23A, New Bond-street, W., corner of Conduit-street.

SPORTSMEN and GENTLEMEN of the ARMY and NAVY.—S. and B. SOLOMONS, Opticians, 39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly, opposite the York Hotel. Portability combined with great power in FIELD, RACECOURSE, OPERA, and general out-door day and night powerful Waistcoat-pocket PERSPECTIVE GLASSES, weighing only four ounces each, containing 12 and 18 lenses, constructed of German glass, will show distinctly a person to know them at 2½ and 3 miles. They serve every purpose on the Racecourse and at the Opera-house. Country scenery and ships are clearly seen at 8 to 10 miles. They are also invaluable for Shooting, Deerstalking, and Yachting. Her Majesty's Coast Guards are making use of them as day and night glasses. The term for them are powerful and brilliant telescopes for both eyes. The most powerful Telescopes, possessing such extraordinary power that some, 3½ inches, with an extra astronomical eyepiece, will show distinctly Jupiter's moons, Saturn's ring, and the double stars; with the same telescope a person can be seen and known three-and-a-half miles distant and an object from fourteen to sixteen miles. They are in endless variety, of larger and all sizes, with increasing powers, and are secured by her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent.

SPECTACLES.—Optical Improvements, to enable persons at an advanced age to read with ease, and to distinguish objects with perfect distinctness.—Messrs. SOLOMONS have invented SPECTACLE LENSES of the greatest transparent power. The valuable advantage derived from this invention is that vision becoming impaired is preserved and strengthened; very aged persons are enabled to employ their sight at the most minute occupation; can see with these lenses of a much less magnifying power, and they do not require the frequent changes, to the dangerous effects of further powerful assistance.—39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly.

DEAFNESS.—A newly-invented Instrument for extreme cases of Deafness, called the Sound Magnifier, Organic Vibrator, and Invisible Voice Conductor. It fits into the ear so as not to be in the least perceptible: the unpleasant sensation of singing noises in the head is entirely removed. It affords instant relief to deaf persons, and enables them to hear distinctly at church and at public assemblies. Every other kind of hearing Instrument. Messrs. SOLOMONS Opticians, 39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly, W.

TEETH.—Mr. ROGERS'S Improvements in Replacing ARTIFICIAL TEETH have entirely superseded those constructed upon the ordinary principles. They support the loose and tender teeth remaining, require no springs, wires, or any painful operation; while their natural appearance and durability are guaranteed. A Tooth from 5s.; a set from £2 10s. 18, New Burlington-street (corner of Regent-street). Particularly observe Name and Address.

THE IRON BRIDGE ASSOCIATION, 58, Pall-mall, London, manufacture and erect Iron Bridges, Piers, and Wharfs of every description. Agents wanted in California, Chili, Demerara, Jamaica, Peru, Trinidad, and Venezuela.

Established for the SALE of AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS—Steam Engines—Railway and Contractors' Plant—Hydraulic Engines—Mining Machinery—Brick and Tile Machines—Sawing Machinery, and every description of Tools and Machines. Prices and full information upon application.

SHANK'S NEW PATENT LAWN MOWING, Rolling, Collecting, and Delivering MACHINE—Mows the grass wet or dry, on lawns uneven or otherwise, in a much neater manner than the scythe, and at half the expense.—Sole Agents for London, J. B. BROWN and CO., 18, Cannon-street, City, E.C.

SARL and SONS, 17 and 18, Cornhill, respectfully solicit a visit to their magnificent Establishment. The Ground Floor is more particularly devoted to the display of Fine Gold Jewellery, Gold and Silver Watches, and Fine Gold Chains. The Silver-Plate Department is in the Gallery of the Building, and consists of every article requisite for the table and sideboard. In the magnificent Showrooms is displayed a large and beautiful stock of Argentine Plate, the manufacture of which has stood the test of twenty years' experience. Sarl and Sons have also fitted up a separate Showroom for the display of Drawing and Dining Room Clocks of the most exquisite designs.
Books containing Drawings and Prices may be had on application.

EXHIBITION OF NOVELTIES FOR MAY and JUNE.
HOWELL, JAMES, and CO., 5, 7, and 9, Regent-street, have the honour to announce that they are now exhibiting a magnificent collection of Novelties, consisting of Silks of Lyons and Spitalfields manufacture, an unusually large collection of Light Tissues, which have been manufactured for them exclusively; Gauzes from Lyons and Chambery; Muslins from Mulhouse; Indian and French Shawls; Laces of English and Foreign make, including some exquisite specimens from Barcelona and Brussels; and an entirely new collection of Ball Dresses. H., J., and Co. solicit an early inspection.

GREAT AND LAMENTABLE FIRE.—The calamity which has just taken place at the Warerooms of Messrs. BEECH and BERRALL, the celebrated Silkmercers, "The Beehive," 63 and 64, Edgware-road, W., is really awful to contemplate; piles of rich Silks, Mantles, Shawls, Fancy Dresses, Irish and Table Linens, Sheetings, Prints, and Printed Muslins, Ribbons, Lace, Hosiery, Gloves, Parasols, and various Fancy Goods, &c., all just purchased for the Spring and Summer Season, are all more or less damaged, and upwards of two thousand pounds' worth utterly destroyed.
In consequence of this misfortune, the Fire Insurance Company have kindly made over to Messrs. Beech and Berrall the whole of the salvage, which will be submitted to the public without the least reservation, and sold at what it will realise.
Ladies are respectfully solicited to pay an early visit on this important occasion.
N.B. The Sale is now proceeding.

TWO-YEARS' RHEUMATISM CURED
By the Mighty
AMERICAN HOMŒOPATHIC PURIFYING PILLS.
The following is from Mrs. Lane:—"Gentlemen, I wish this published for the benefit of suffering humanity. I was afflicted with acute Rheumatism for two years, and for thirteen weeks confined to my bed quite helpless; my body was in dreadful pain, and when touched I could not help screeching out as loud as my strength would let me; my feet and legs were frightfully swollen, my ankle bones grew out, and my hands were drawn inward and my fingers bent backwards the reverse way. My medical attendants could not relieve me, and said that I should remain a cripple all my life, when a friend told me to take the Great American Homœopathic Purifying Pills. And I am truly thankful that I did hear of them, and I took three large boxes, five pills every night until relieved, then two till cured; being, I think, the most miraculous cure ever performed by medicine. I am now quite upright, and have the use of all my limbs, my knuckles are gone back to the natural shape, and I am a marvel to all around. The Pills have made a thorough cure. I am fifty-four years of age, and I shall feel it my duty to answer any questions, as the medicine has proved a great blessing to me, for in 1858 I was on my bed in agony, and in 1859 I give my testimony, waiting a twelve-month to test the power of this powerful and astonishing medicine.—Mrs. MARY LANE, Old Radford, near Nottingham."—To be had of Batters, Wholesale Agent, Nottingham; Sutton and Co., London; and of all Patent Medicine Vendors, at 1d., 3d., 6d., 1s., and 2s. 6d. per box. Postage stamps, 8d., 1s. 2d. and 2s. 10d., at 1, Angel-row, Nottingham.

FIRST MATCH OF THE SEASON OF THE ROYAL LONDON YACHT CLUB.—THE ROUNDING AT COALHOUSE POINT.

fastened by a mauve-coloured band and gilt buckle, from which descend a pair of wide streamers. To the top of each shoulder is attached a large ribbon bow of the same colour as the sash. Large puffing sleeves, terminated by a narrow frilling. The skirt is enlivened by three rows of imitation embroidery, the top one not reaching higher than the third of the upe. Dark brown straw hat, lined with black velvet, and trimmed with velvet ribbon, and low in front, from which descends a white ostrich feather following the line of the edge of the chapeau.

Fig. 2. Evening Dress.—This dress is of pearl-grey silk, trimmed with a frilling of the same material throughout, and round-waisted. The corsage is rather open and square at the top, but the bottom of it is cut out like a low-necked robe. Bows each side of the opening, in which appears a chemisette of gathered tulle, with a narrow ruching round the neck; there is a full trimming, which is continued across the corsage to a little above the lower part of the jockey, also bordered with a similar trimming. The pagoda sleeves, lower in front than behind, are also ornamented with frilling. The skirt is trimmed with eight rows of festooned flouncing. The full under-sleeves are of tulle, terminated at the wrist by a ruching. Head-dress à la Hortense, composed of narrow bands of white silk, with a small bow just above the summit of the forehead.

Fig. 3. Dress for a Little Boy.—The child's fancy costume, of which we have just seen several in the Gardens of the Tuileries, is in the Russian style. The small round cap with narrow band is of velvet. The tunic, opening on the breast from right to left, is of blue merino, and is fastened at the waist by a leather belt of the same colour, with gilt clasp. The loose red trousers are in ladies' cloth; and the costume is completed by a pair of soft black leather boots.

ROYAL LONDON YACHT CLUB.

THE opening match of the season of this popular club took place on Tuesday, the 15th inst., between boats of the third class or not exceeding ten tons, and with an extra match for vessels not exceeding six tons. There was a very full and fashionable assemblage on board the Prince of Wales steamer, which had been chartered for the occasion, and where every attention was paid to the comfort of the guests. The following were the competing craft:—

THIRD CLASS.
Yacht.	Tons.	Owner.
Violet ..	9 ..	Lord De Ros.
Haidee ..	9 ..	Andrew Arcedeckne, Esq.
Surprise..	8 ..	Thomas Carr, Esq.
Clara ..	7 ..	J. D. Burney, Esq.

SIXTH MATCH.
Yacht.	Tons.	Owner.
May Fly ..	6 ..	William Ros, Esq.
Eugenie ..	6 ..	D. T. White, Esq.
Spray ..	6 ..	Dwyer Hutton, Esq.
Blue Bell..	6 ..	Thomas Ridgway, Esq.

For the first of these were prizes of £20, £10, and £5, the first in plate. For the extra match, the prizes were £15 in plate, and £5, the course in both being from Erith to Coalhouse Point and back to East Greenwich.

The start of the first match took place at ten minutes to twelve, and all were round very prettily, the wind at that time being easterly. The Blue Bell took the lead, followed by the Spray, and these two positions were retained in each succeeding mile. At twelve o'clock the larger, or those denominated the third, class were also well started. Directly they were fairly under way the Haidee took the lead, and retained it throughout the whole race. They rounded the flag-boat at Coalhouse Point in the following order:—

	h.	m.	s.
Haidee	1	30	0
Violet	1	32	0
Spray	1	34	0
Surprise	1	41	0
May Fly	1	42	30
Clara	1	56	15
Eugenie	1	57	0

They now proceeded up against the ebb, which was very strong, and the attention of the spectators was mainly directed to the Bell and Spray, which for a length of time made a beautiful race, much skill being exhibited on both sides; and the race finished at Greenwich in the following manner:—

	h.	m.	s.
Haidee	3	5	0
Violet	3	7	10
Clara	4	2	30
Spray	4	11	0
Eugenie	4	13	0

The worthy Commodore, Andrew Arcedeckne, Esq., then presented the first, second, and third prizes, of the third class, to Mr. Bartlett, Lord De Ros, and Mr. Carr; and the first prize of the extra match to Mr. Ridgway; the second being held in abeyance owing to the Spray fouling the winning-flag, which, according to the laws of yachting, is fatal against the vessel receiving the prize.

HOLIDAYS.

THERE has been an unusual concurrence this year of those holidays which in this country, so few and far between, seem to be enjoyed with characteristic muscular energy. It does not often happen that Whit Monday follows hard upon the Derby Day, and so afford a sequence in national relaxation, which embraces the highest, the middle class, and every other class in an attempt to throw off that heavy working care which sits so sternly on almost every man of us. In this respect Young England exhibits a strong contrast to that Old England which used to rejoice in the epithet of "merry." And yet, if we look to the means and appliances for enjoyment outside of the home circle, we cannot but recognise a large extension of their area in modern times. It is true we have no maypoles, and our archery-butts are connected with a very dilettante kind of shooting; there is wrestling, we believe, in remote parts of the country, and in some special arenas devoted to that species of sport in the metropolis which are watched with only half-averted eye by the police. But, without running through the list of those exercises and games in which our ancestors delighted, and which were most of them born of a purpose that has been revived in our own day, and has taken the form of the volunteer rifle movement, we may express a belief that the sense of hearty enjoyment is developed as much in the scant festivals of our age as was exhibited in that which we call the olden time. The spirit and character of a nation and national peculiarities are the last things that ever alter. Steam and railways, and the modern manufacturing spirit, have not essentially changed that spirit and character: they merely give the energies of Englishmen a new direction. There is no doubt that we have greater means of rational enjoyment and relaxation within our reach than our forefathers had, notwithstanding that poetical fact which romance has shed over the history of their pastimes, and which, from the enchantment of distance, wear so picturesque an aspect. In this metropolis the facilities afforded for that temporary change of scene and air which is so eagerly sought after on occasions like Easter and Whitsuntide have vastly increased. To say nothing of the Crystal Palace, of Kew, of Hampton Court of the Zoological Gardens, all within easy distance, and tempting by their attractions, the arrangements made by railway companies for the conveyance of large bodies of persons, at a charge which comes within the means of every one who is on pleasure bent, have been increased this year to a considerable extent. When one reads an advertisement which states that any number of aspirants may be treated to an excursion to Brighton and back, with an opportunity of lounging for six or seven hours on the seaside, for the charge of half-a-crown, we can have but one feeling, and that is of regret, that the opportunities of enjoying such advantages are not more frequent. We say nothing about Sundays. There is to right-thinking persons something unsatisfactory in the application of that day to the mere purposes of holiday-making; while the genius of our institutions, and the nature of our habits, combine to give a sense of incompleteness to secular enjoyment on Sundays which is, to our minds, a silent but an ever-working plea for the extension of our system of national fasti.

Again and again moralists, philanthropists, and physiologists have urged, and are urging, the strongest arguments against the high-pressure system of work which prevails in this country, unalleviated and even unstimulated by regular and frequent periods of rest and relaxation. It is not merely among the operative class, among those whose occupations are included in the category of that work which is accompanied by the sweat of the brow, that this fatal error exists. How many of the brain-workers are daily spending recklessly that intellectual capital which, more carefully husbanded and more judiciously laid out, would bring far more satisfactory returns than any present profit, either in a pecuniary sense or in the, perhaps, still dearer tribute which is paid to genius or even to talent! At this very moment we have an instance in point. There has recently passed from amongst us a man who in his time has done much, very much, to contribute to the enjoyment of his countrymen, and who had won for himself a popularity which had really caused his name and the entertainment which he offered to the public to be associated with the institutions of the metropolis. Full of intellectual and physical vigour, he flung himself with unflagging persistence into that which, an amusement to others, was a laborious occupation to him; and, regardless of those physical laws with which few were better acquainted than himself, he taxed his energies and his strength to an extent which produced the natural result. One day the powerful frame collapsed, and, although proper treatment and skill restored him for that time, he refused to listen to the warning, and returned with unabated constancy to the performance of labours which, no doubt, he conscientiously believed it was in some sort a duty in him to perform, and the consequence has been that in the very prime of a life, for the enjoyment which his own unaided efforts had afforded ample means, he fell a victim to that demon of overwork which has for a long time ridden roughshod over the land.

Nevertheless, there are signs many, and daily becoming more palpable, of efforts to exorcise this evil spirit. The Saturday half-holiday is gradually making way. It is no uncommon thing in passing through our most busy thoroughfares after two o'clock on the last day of the week to see establishments whose profits might reasonably be expected to suffer in no small degree from the custom fast closed. Within the last week or two, by general arrangement, the bankers of London have diminished the number of hours on Saturday during which they will transact any business. Among other advantages which it has produced the volunteer rifle movement is apparently tending to assist in the disposition to abridge, of course in all due moderation, and with every possible regard to personal and social duties, the hours of labour amongst our working population, a term which includes pretty nearly every man in the kingdom. The establishment of volunteer corps, indeed, has established two very important facts which were previously doubted. It has proved, in the first place, that there is a spirit amongst Englishmen which it was questioned whether they possessed—namely, a readiness to enter into a military organisation for the purposes of home defence; and, in the next place, it has shown that which was also discredited, that hundreds and thousands of persons can find time out of their other avocations to go through the necessary preliminaries to their becoming efficient for the object they have in view. Out of this latter arrangement there has arisen a feeling which is co-operative with the principle of the general establishment of a Saturday half-holiday; and appeals have been made from influential quarters to the shopping and business public so to manage the demand for the supply of their requirements as to render unnecessary the presence of the doors and workers of our counting-houses, shops, and warehouses after an early hour on Saturdays. Altogether we are of opinion that there are many things combining towards the establishment of a principle and a practice which we have always advocated in this Journal—namely, a more judicious and even a more merciful treatment of the working power which Providence has committed to us individually and as a nation; and we have not thought it inappropriate at this particular season to do what in us lies to impress on the public mind the value of that principle and the coming necessity of that practice.

FRANCE.

The Moniteur of Thursday morning announces that the Session of the Corps Legislatif has been adjourned until the 30th of June. The Senate has discussed the petitions relative to the legal position of religious congregations and associations. M. Dupin, in making the request in Committee, proposed to refer the petition to the Ministers of the Interior, of Justice, and of Public Worship. In the discussion which followed several senators proposed the order of the day, which was rejected by 69 against 28. The petitions have been sent to the Ministers of the Interior and Public Worship, but will not be referred to the Minister of Justice.

A brilliant cavalry review took place yesterday se'nnight at the Bois de Boulogne, in splendid weather, and before a vast concourse of people. The Prince Imperial accompanied his father along the line on his new English pony, the Empress following in her carriage.

Their Majesties seem both to enjoy excellent health, and are constantly to be seen in public, amidst unmistakable signs of popularity. The carriage in which they drive is now frequently a phaeton and four horses, with seats for only two persons, which their Majesties occupy alone, side by side, uninterrupted by their suite. The Paris correspondent of the Guardian says that "this Darby and Joan fashion in which Louis Napoleon takes the air with his wife seems to amuse the Parisians; and the quiet ease and confidence with which his Majesty passes along through the crowded streets and returns the salutes of his subjects, from his low, open, and exposed vehicle, shows that Napoleon III. has cast away all fears at home since he smelt powder so largely in Italy."

It is said that the Emperor has been for some time engaged on a work, in two octavo volumes, of much research, to be entitled "A History of Julius Cæsar," and that the manuscript will shortly be placed in the hands of the printer.

Prince Jerome had on Tuesday a severe attack of congestion of the brain; but on Wednesday morning the health of his Imperial Highness had slightly improved.

The French Government is erecting formidable fortifications on the group of islands called Chausey, lying between Granville and St. Malo. When complete they will cover a fine anchorage, where ships might seek shelter or assemble for any maritime expedition.

The Moniteur of Tuesday morning publishes the speech delivered by M. Fould, Minister of State, at an agricultural meeting at Tarbes. After having shown the material progress which has been obtained, the Minister Fould said:—"The economical course which has recently been inaugurated will create a fruitful era of wealth and prosperity." M. Fould recalls the moderation of the Emperor shown after the late war, and said:—"The moderation in the past is a certain guarantee for the future. The Emperor has several times proclaimed that he only wished to ensure to France the rank which belonged to her." M. Fould advises people not to be led away by the feeling of uneasiness which parties are strenuously endeavouring to spread. "Notwithstanding the events which disturb some States, notwithstanding the agitation and mistrust which those parties attempt to excite in the public mind, France, quiet and prosperous, can devote herself with safety to public works. She knows the Emperor to be strong enough to inspire all with respect for her rights, and to be too loyal a neighbour and too faithful an ally to menace the rights of others."

The Court of Cassation has quashed the judgments of the Court Imperial in the case of Mongr. Dupanloup, thereby virtually adjudging that prelate to have been guilty of defamation against the memory of Mongr. Rousseau.

A confirmation was held last Saturday at the English church, Rue d'Aguesseau, by the Bishop of Ripon, acting on behalf of the Bishop of London. Above a hundred candidates were present. The prayers were read by the Rev. E. Forbes, Chaplain, and the Bishop was assisted by the Rev. Prebendary Burgess and the Rev. J. H. Swale. The church was filled by an attentive congregation.

SARDINIA.

THE SAVOY QUESTION IN THE TURIN CHAMBERS.

The discussion upon the treaty of the 24th of March was opened in the Turin Chambers yesterday week with an impressive and logical speech of Guerazzi against the project. The following is a summary of the speech of Signor Guerazzi on the subject:—"The people of Italy had hoped for the protection of Piedmont. France, in return for the annexation of Central Italy to Piedmont, wished to possess Savoy and Nice, and the existing Ministry had been compelled to accept the annexation of these provinces to France. Since then the Italian question has much fallen; it has been thrown from the Capitol, and has become an affair of stock-jobbing. The Ministry showed itself very timid towards France, and ceded Savoy and Nice in order not to be obliged to maintain the autonomy of Tuscany. A treaty of mistrust had been made, and the Emperor had shown that he suspected us. If Italy had been all to the Italians it would have been possible to remove the barriers which separated two great families, but with Austria in the heart of our country can we have sufficient confidence? It will be necessary to transport the capital and Parliament elsewhere. We have opened our doors; we have failed in our obligations to Savoy and Nice, and the Æmilia and Tuscany will tremble for the same fate. You have not submitted to the law of necessity, but have performed such acts as reduced us to a necessity which did not exist." Signor Guerazzi then mentioned the events which took place during the voting, and concluded thus:—"I do not believe that this cession is worth the possession of Central Italy to us. We are constrained by command of the Emperor to go no further. We must advance alone. We have Garibaldi, and a people numbering 11,000,000, and have no need of foreign aid." Signor Guerazzi voted against the treaty. Different orators spoke for and against the treaty.

The discussion was resumed on Saturday by Signor Ratazzi, who enumerated the inconveniences of the treaty, which he rejected by reason that the Government, in ceding the Italian provinces, had violated the principle of Italian independence and weakened royalty. He also said:—"France setting foot in Italy can go farther. The new kingdom has lost its weight abroad, and Europe looks upon the traffic of peoples with distrust." He advised his party to abstain from voting. Count Cavour, in his speech, admitted the sacrifice of the two provinces to be a grievous one, and that the State was weakened thereby. In reference to Nice he said:—"The passages of the Alps will remain with us;" and continued, "The policy of Italian independence rendered the treaty necessary. Since 1848 the policy of concluding an alliance became expedient. The Emperor having shown sympathy for Italy, we are attached to France. The state of Italy does not permit us to stop. Austria has not recognised the annexation, and we are threatened on all sides. The Pope has rejected our overtures, and has opened a crusade against Italy. We meet everywhere with the grave dangers of war. The armaments which are going on prove it. We cannot, therefore, modify our policy, which necessitates the maintenance of an alliance with France. All parties in France not being favourable to Italy, it was necessary to satisfy them by ceding Savoy and Nice, as otherwise the Emperor would have been unable to continue to manifest his sympathies with us. For a long time Nice and Savoy have expressed their French tendencies, and Nice is not an Italian province." Count Cavour concluded by declaring that "if the acquisition of Venice were to cost a foot of Italian soil he would refuse it."

At the sitting of the Chambers on Sunday Deputy Brofferio declared that Nice never had any sympathies with France, and declared that, without wishing to overthrow the Ministry, he should vote against the treaty, in order that Nice might fall under Italian rule. He also said, "Nice is embodied in one man, and that man is Garibaldi. Can it be said, then, that Nice is not Italian?" Deputy Ferrari said that their alliance with France was the alliance of the weak with the strong. The house of Savoy should adopt a revolutionary policy, and reform its laws. Signor Boreliva said, "Piedmont fought in the Crimea to acquire the right of addressing the Powers in favour of Italy. After that, in order to drive back Austria, it was necessary for us to ally ourselves to France and to grant an aggrandisement to the latter as a compensation. Gratitude should attach us to the Emperor, for none of the preceding dynasties of the last half century have afforded us any assistance. Let us then vote in favour of the treaty, and not create new enemies." Signor Chiaves sought to prove that Nice was Italian, and said, "Universal suffrage is not applicable to our nationality." He, however, submitted to necessity, and should vote for the treaty. Signor Boggio defended the treaty, and pointed out the advantages of an alliance with France, declaring also that he should vote in favour of the treaty.

The discussion on the treaty of cession was resumed on Monday. Signor Biancheri (of the Opposition) said he feared that the line of demarcation would be prejudicial to the defence of the country, that it wounded the national sentiment, and gave France the valley of Roja, which was incontestably Italian. Signor Annelli attacked the treaty as immoral, and said, "Traffic in humanity is not a venial thing. It is not possible to sell peoples without being guilty of immorality." The orator was interrupted by the President for the extreme vehemence of his language, and the liberty of speech was finally withdrawn from Signor Annelli by the vote of the Chamber. Signor Berti declared that he abstained from discussion, but nothing proved that the Government had been obliged to cede Savoy and Nice in order to effect a French alliance. He afterwards said, "The peace of Villafranca has changed the policy of Sardinia. The thought of Italian independence is superseded by that of natural boundaries." The Chevalier Buoncompagni defended the treaty from a legal point of view, and contested the opinion of Signor Ratazzi, who said that Count Cavour had substituted the aggrandisement of the kingdom of Sardinia in place of the independence of Italy. He explained that the Tuscan autonomy was not in opposition to the unity of Italy, and further proved that Nice was not Italy. The Minister Farini, in reply to Signor Berti, contended that the policy of France had not changed since the peace of Villafranca, and stated that the annexation had been made since then. Signor Farini also said, "In signing the treaty I have the profound conviction of performing a most useful act in favour of Italian independence."

Ultimately the Chamber of Deputies approved the treaty of cession of Savoy and Nice by 229 against 33 votes. Twenty-three members abstained from voting.

After the adoption of the treaty of cession, Signor Ratazzi rose to demand explanations of Count Cavour, who, in reply, expressed his regret at having been compelled to say very delicate things, but the responsibility attached to his remarks upon the question must rest with Signor Ratazzi. Count Cavour further said, "We have no guarantees from France in favour of the annexed provinces of Italy, as we have not asked for any. We have considered the declarations of France that she would ensure a policy of nonintervention on the part of the foreign Powers to be sufficient. France has not exercised the least pressure respecting the autonomy of Tuscany. She has limited herself to simple non-official diplomatic conversations, in which we have declared that the autonomy of Tuscany must disappear. To this France has not made the least objection."

SPAIN.

The Queen, King, and Royal family arrived in Madrid on Thursday week from Aranjuez, and before leaving that place their Majesties attended another thanksgiving service in the Convent of Our Lady of Ovido for the victories in Morocco. On reaching Madrid the Queen and Royal family, before going to the palace, went, in accordance with custom, to the Church of Atocha, where Divine service was celebrated.

The Cortes were opened yesterday week by her Majesty in person. The Queen went in grand procession from the Palace to the Chambers, and both sides of the route taken were lined with troops. Her Majesty was accompanied by the King, the Duke de Montpensier, and the Infante Don Sebastien.

The Royal speech recalls the war with Morocco, which it says has ended in a glorious peace, and in a treaty compensating as much as possible for the expenses of the treasury. The relations of Spain with all the Powers are satisfactory. The convention with Rome will tranquillise the conscience and facilitate progress. The Pope has thus received a token of the attachment of the Queen and the nation. The Queen deplores the Carlist attempt; but, the danger being removed, is happy to record an amnesty. The Chamber will shortly receive the Budget and political and administrative projects of law. The Queen, in conclusion, reckons upon the union of the nation, which will ensure stability to the Throne and happiness to the country.

Senor Martinez de la Rosa has been elected President of the Cortes.

The Cortes have unanimously resolved to consider the proposal declaring the army of Marshal O'Donnell and the marine to have deserved well of their country for their conduct in the African campaign.

AUSTRIA.

The official Wiener Zeitung publishes an Imperial decree appointing Herr Von Kraus as President of the Financial Control Office (Rechnungs Controllbehörde) in the place of Count Wilczeck, who has been pensioned.

The Wiener Zeitung also publishes decrees appointing six temporary members of the enlarged Council of the Empire to replace the same number of members who had declined to accept their nominations.

Another decree abolishes the offices of political provincial governors of Dalmatia, and refers their former attributes and functions to the regular district authorities (Kreisbehörden) of this province.

UNITED STATES.

Advices from New York to May 16 state that the Baltimore Union Convention has nominated Bell and Everett as candidates. The latter was formerly Minister in England.

Senator Douglas has made a great speech in the Senate, defining his position. The House of Representatives has passed the Tariff Bill.

The Japanese Embassy arrived at Washington on the 14th inst., and were received with great military and civic display, seeming greatly delighted. Their interview with the President took place on the 16th inst. The reception was magnificent. The Ambassadors are described as being rather tall and thin in form, with long and sharp faces, and, as with all the Japanese, of dark complexion and jet black hair, so far as any is left by the barber, for they have a singular fashion in dressing the hair, in which the men expend as much care as the women, and take as much pride and pleasure in its neat and fashionable adjustment. All is shaved off to the very skin, except down the temples and low down on the back of the neck, from which it is brought up on all sides to the top of the head and fastened by a string, and then bent forward, well stiffened with pomatum, in a queue about four inches long and of the size of one's finger, and pointed forward over the front part of the head, which is left completely denuded of all hair. They dress in silk robes, and wear two swords at their sides, according to universal usage with the higher classes.

NOVA SCOTIA.

The Legislative Assembly broke up on Saturday, May 12. The Lieutenant-Governor, the Earl of Mulgrave, addressed the House of Assembly as follows:—

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,—It affords me much pleasure to relieve you from further attendance on your legislative duties. The approaching summer will be marked by an event unparalleled in colonial history, as this and the other North American Colonies will then be visited by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales; and in the name of our Sovereign I thank you for the liberal provision you have made for his appropriate reception. The devoted loyalty and affection to the throne and person of our beloved Queen which I know to exist throughout Nova Scotia will enable me to assure his Highness that those manifestations of welcome with which he will doubtless be greeted in this capital represent the feelings which pervade the population of the whole province.

Owing to the long continuance of dry weather in that colony an immense amount of forest timber has been destroyed by fire. In many places tracts of beautiful timber land, extending some ten, fifteen, or twenty miles, have been burnt down, and nothing remains but blackened stumps and layers of ashes. There have been great fires also from the same cause in New Brunswick and Cape Breton.

CHINA.

Newspapers and correspondence have been received from Hong Kong to April 14. The following summary of news, which is of much greater significance than has been received from China for several months, is from the Hong-Kong Mail of the 14th of April:—

"The London mail of the 28th of February arrived here on the 12th inst., but by telegraph we have received intelligence from England to the 3rd of March.

"We mentioned in our last summary that the ultimatum requiring the Imperial Government to make a full apology, to admit a vessel of war to Tien-Tsin, and to admit Mr. Bruce to Pekin, had been handed over to the Chinese authorities at Shanghai on the 8th of March. The answer which has been received is still kept secret, notwithstanding the large commercial interests which will be affected by it; and the most contradictory rumours are in circulation in regard to it, from a positive acceptance to a positive denial. The Chinese say that it has been accepted on the condition that the expeditionary force be sent away, and we think this is not the least probable of the rumours.

"The Imperialists on the Yang-tsze have been gaining successes over the rebels; and the road between Shanghai and Pekin is again open, as proved by the receipt of Pekin Gazettes to the 1st of March. Hang-chow has been retaken by the Imperialist troops, and the rebels in it were killed in great numbers.

GARIBALDI'S EXPEDITION.

The contradictory reports as to the progress of the Sicilian revolution are set at rest by the following, which appeared in the Globe of Tuesday evening:—Authentic intelligence has reached us at the moment of our going to press to the effect that the Sicilian insurgents have possession of great part of Palermo. Many of the troops have risen against their Neapolitan commanders. The forts and ships of war have fired on the city, but the fire is said to have ceased. This intelligence comes from Naples under date Monday. A despatch, dated Naples, Tuesday, confirms the entry of Garibaldi into Palermo, and the continuation of the bombardment of the city by the citadel and the fleet. The Patrie of Tuesday evening says:—"On the morning of the 27th Garibaldi attacked Palermo by a combined storming operation on all points, and forced his entrance into the principal streets, where the fight continued furiously between troops and people. The Neapolitan ships off the town were firing on the inhabitants to protect the military and cover their retreat, which was inevitable towards the evening of that day." A telegram received through Mr. Reuter's office on Thursday is to the following effect:—"The bombardment of Palermo lasted several hours. Garibaldi entered the town on the 27th. The besieging forces were not numerous, but, being commanded by the heroic leader in person, the victory was obtained. The head-quarters of Garibaldi are in the centre of the town. The number killed is large."

We annex a few scraps of intelligence relative to Garibaldi's movements previous to the 27th ult:—

A telegram direct from Palermo, dated at ten o'clock on the night of the 23rd, announces that the troops of Garibaldi were up to that date still in position at no great distance from Palermo, that 20,000 Neapolitan troops occupied the heights commanding the city, and at two miles from it, and that they were in hourly expectation of being attacked by the troops of Garibaldi.

A despatch, which had reached Turin from Sicily, makes known that, at the date of the 24th, Colonel Nino Bixio, notwithstanding all the reports to the contrary, had neither been killed, wounded, nor made prisoner.

A telegram from Naples, dated May 25, is as follows:—"Garibaldi's troops are six miles distant from Palermo, and occupy the heights surrounding it. An engagement has taken place, but without a definite result. The insurgents have maintained their positions, and the Royal troops have re-entered Palermo. Several Neapolitan vessels of war have arrived before Palermo, and a bombardment was feared should a rising take place in the city."

A proclamation by the committee of Palermo had been posted up in all parts of the town announcing the victorious march of Garibaldi, and that Sicily would soon become independent. It also added, "Even the Neapolitan police are commencing to desert their master," and terminated with "Viva il Ré Emmanuel!" "Viva Garibaldi!"

The following is an exrtract from a private letter, dated from the neighbourhood of Messina, May 20:—"The Sicilian army destroyed 4000 Neapolitan soldiers between Calatafimi and Alcamo, fifty miles distance from Palermo, defeating them completely. The few who made their escape, after running a very long way, dispersed with the greatest rapidity. Therefore, I expect, the taking of Palermo will soon be heard of; but I foresee that rivers of blood will be shed. A great catastrophe is apprehended in Messina, the General of that city having the villanous intention of giving it up to sack and of setting fire to it."

The Patrie has the following interesting details:—"It is stated positively that on the 17th and three following days there were a great number of partial landings. They took place on the part of the coast extending from Capo Boco to the river of Girgenti. This part of the south-east coast has always been favourable to smuggling, and, consequently, to clandestine landings. The insurrection had thus received, at the last dates, a considerable quantity of stores, and has now all the arms and ammunition necessary for forming fresh corps of native volunteers. General Lanza landed at Palermo early in the morning of the 20th, and immediately had his proclamations posted up. During the day he held a council of war, and strongly reproached his predecessor for the incapacity he had shown, and for the fault he had committed in not having fortified and strongly occupied the two defiles of Calatafimi, both of which might have been easily defended. General Lanza has adopted the only military measures in his power. He has concentrated his army under the walls of Palermo; has erected redoubts on the heights which command the roads; and arranged his troops in such a manner as to be able to give battle with his whole force. These arrangements are irreproachable in a military point of view, but they do not prevent the General from finding himself surrounded by almost insurmountable difficulties, as the whole city of Palermo is in favour of the insurrection. At the last dates the Amalia steam-frigate, of 44 guns, and the steam-corvettes, Zeffro and Christina, had arrived at Messina from Naples, having troops on board, and three bomb-vessels in tow. The steam-vessels Ercole, Vesuvio, Fulminante, Veloce, and Misene had arrived at Naples from Palermo, having on board a number of families who were leaving Sicily in consequence of the state of affairs in the island. Among the passengers on board these vessels was the Prince de Castelcicala, late Governor of Sicily, and his family; M. Maniscalco and his family; and the wife and family of General Letizia."

Malta correspondence announces the receipt at that island of intelligence from Sicily to as late a date as the 22nd of May from Messina, 20th of May from Palermo, 21st of May from Marsala, and 20th of May from Catania. At Messina and Catania order was maintained, but everything was ripe for an outbreak in case Garibaldi succeeds in entering Palermo, of which there was scarcely a doubt. These accounts left him marching upon Monreale, where the Royalists had concentrated their forces, including the garrison of Palermo, and where he was looked for on the 22nd. His force was then estimated at 15,000, but, according to a report which had reached Messina, it is said to have been subsequently swelled to 40,000.

Garibaldi had issued this laconic and significant decree:—

Giuseppe Garibaldi, Commander-in-Chief of the National Force in Sicily. At the invitation of the principal citizens, and on the deliberation of the free communes of the island—considering that in time of war it is necessary that the civil and military power should be concentrated in one man—decrees that he assumes, in the name of Victor Emmanuel, King of Italy, the Dictatorship in Sicily.—Salemi, 14th of May, 1860.

Stef. Turr, Adjutant-General. G. Garibaldi.

Great excitement has been caused among the natives of various parts of Bengal in consequence of a wealthy baboo having been sentenced by Chief Justice Peacock to transportation for fourteen years for forging a will. The case is a remarkable one. It appears that Baboo Sibkissen Singh forged a will in order that he might come into his brother's property; that the said brother was treated during his last illness in a most cruel manner; and that another native and a European surgeon (a Mr. Crawford) were accomplices in the forgery. These two latter persons have been sentenced to seven years' transportation. Petitions, we learn from the Calcutta papers, are being circulated with a view of procuring a mitigation of the sentences.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegrams were received through Mr. Reuter's office yesterday (Friday) morning :—

THE INSURRECTION IN SICILY.—Marseilles, May 13.—A letter from Genoa states that Garibaldi has ordered the formation of eight regiments of infantry in Sicily, to take rank after the Piedmontese infantry. The Lenni steamer is expected with news from Messina.

TURIN, Wednesday.—The following details of Garibaldi's attack on Palermo have been received from a reliable source :—"At 4 o'clock on the morning of the 27th instant Garibaldi attacked Palermo on the south side. A desperate combat ensued, and lasted six hours. The people made themselves masters of all parts of the town except of the Strada di Toledo. A terrible bombardment was opened by sea and land, notwithstanding which the people continued to fight. The troops retired within the Royal palace, the Custom House, and the castle. Hostilities were suspended from ten until twelve o'clock, when the troops were receiving reinforcements. Meanwhile the Royal palace was taken by the people, and in the evening was burnt down. The whole town in Sicily declares for Victor Emmanuel, everywhere shouting, 'Italy for ever!' 'Victor Emmanuel for ever!'"

Naples, May 13.—Great agitation prevails at Court and in the Ministry. After a Cabinet Council the Ministers tendered their resignation. It is rumoured that a Liberal Ministry will be formed.

TURKEY.—Constantinople, May 30.—Kiprisli Mehemed Pasha has been appointed Grand Vizier, in place of Mehemed Ruschdi Pasha. The Greek Patriarch Gregorius has tendered his resignation, which has been accepted by the Porte.

Jmar Pasha has arrived at Constantinople.

AUSTRIA.—Vienna, May 31.—The ordinary Council of the Empire was opened to-day at seven o'clock by a short speech from the President, Archduke Rainer, to whom Count Belcredi replied, in order to explain the particular position of the Hungarians in relation to the Council of the Empire. Count Belcredi added a few words expressing the loyalty of the Hungarians. The members of the Council will be received to-morrow by the Emperor, who will address them in a certain speech.

HESSE CASSEL, Wednesday.—The official Law Gazette publishes a Constitution granted to the country by the Elector. The Constitution is dated May 33, and is based upon the resolutions of the Federal Diet of March 1, and of the Diet of Electoral Hesse of 1857.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

THE NEW BISHOP OF DURHAM.—The Hon. and Rev. Dr. Henry Montagu Villiers has been nominated for the bishopric of Durham in the room of Dr. Longley, who has accepted the archbishopric of York. He is the fifth son of the late Hon. George Villiers, father of the present Earl of Clarendon, and was born on the 4th of January, 1813. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he took his degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1831. Having been ordained by three Courts of the parish of Dean, Lincoln, he was presented by Lord Cottenham, who was Lord Chancellor in Lord Melbourne's government, to the vicarage of Wolverhampton, in succession to Dr. T. Vowler Short (now Bishop of St. Asaph) to the bishopric of Sodor and Man, he received from the Lord Chancellor the rectory of St. George's, Bloomsbury, and in 1847 was nominated by Lord John Russell, the then Prime Minister, to a canonry in Durham, to which he was collated. These two last-named appointments he held up to his nomination to the bishopric of Durham by Lord Palmerston in 1856, when the prebendal stall to it is very considerable.

The Lord Chancellor are about to still their own cost the parish church of Linton.

The restoration of the Abbey Church of Tewkesbury has been commenced by the insertion of a stained-glass window, under the superintendence of Mr. Scott. The window which is the gift of the late Mr. Spro'e, is by Messrs. Bell and Clayton.

Mr. Scott is preparing plans for a chapel at Wellington College. The governors of Wellington, held a meeting on Saturday last, at which this sum will be doubled by the liberality of parents and others interested in the college.

On Wednesday morning the Venerable John Sinclair, M.A., Archdeacon of Middlesex, held a visitation of the clergy and churches of London which is within his jurisdiction. There was a very large attendance of the clergy.

A handsome silver-gilt service of communion plate for the Church of Christ Church Hospital was furnished at the cost of the parishioners of St. Faith and their friends, and used for the first time on Whit Sunday. It consists of a flagon, two chalices, a paten, and two alms-plates.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.—The Very Rev. H. U. Tighe to be Dean of Derry. Rev. Edward Hale Bickersteth to Cookham Sussex; Rev. W. Godfrey to Studley, Warwick; Rev. C. Nairne to Bonby, Lincolnshire; Rev. J. S. Coley to Aston-juxta-Birmingham; Rev. Thomas F. F. Watson to Lunley, Sussex. Perpetual Curacies: The Rev. J. R. Blakeney to Ash, Bickley; Rev. J. D. Hastings to Bishop's Cleeve, Gloucestershire; Rev. C. Heywood to Oakridge, Gloucestershire; Rev. A. J. Jocelyn to Alderley, Gloucestershire; Rev. Thomas Lee to Ash, Bickley; Rev. Thomas Smith, Bath; Rev. J. Utter to Glossop, Derbyshire. Rev. A. D. Robinson to be Incumbent of St. Andrew's, Shoreditch-road, Kensington. Rev. J. E. Wankyn to be Chaplain to the Sanatorium, Bournemouth.—Guardian.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

On Monday the sacred rite of confirmation was administered to 421 sailors at the garrison church, Colchester, by the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Rochester.

Captain Colling, of the 26th Regiment, was accidentally shot dead by a soldier in the hunt at a rifle practice on Monday.

The anniversary dinner of the 52nd Light Infantry was held at the London Tavern on Monday evening.

The Middlesex, Surrey, and Essex Regiments of Militia, and the Royal London and Sussex Militia Artillery, which have been out training since the 1st inst., were disembodied last Saturday, returned to their several quarters, and the men, altogether numbering 2400 rank and file, dismissed to their homes, after receiving a further donation of 2s. per man for their good conduct money, amounting altogether to £1 8s. 6d.

Captain Scobell, who recently made some experiments at Hightown with a rifled cannon of his invention, has sent a letter to the Times in which he challenges Mr. Whitworth to a trial of the merits of their respective guns at different elevations up to five degrees. He says he has reported a success with his gun at the last experiments, and that Whitworth's eighty-pound gun, which has the reputation of being the best in existence, is the weight of his own gun by which he can only shoot 45 cwt.

As at Chatham, yesterday week, the ceremony of decorating a non-commissioned officer with a silver medal, which, together with an annuity of £16 for life, has been awarded by the Lords of the Admiralty to Sergeant Major George William Lane, of the division of Royal Marine Artillery stationed at Sheerness, for the gallant conduct which he displayed on the occasion of the destruction of the wreck of the Royal Charter, was performed by the Commissioner of the dockyard, Rear-Admiral Key, C.B., in the presence of the whole of the battalion, who were drawn up on the parade-ground for the purpose of the installation. It has been thirty-three years since the Lords of the Admiralty, twenty of which he has been non-commissioned officer. He was previously awarded a medal and £15 for harmonious conduct during the whole time he has been in the corps he has borne a most honourable character.

MEN RETURNED FROM THE NAVY.—A return was made last Saturday of the number of men which would be required to maintain the establishments of the navy for the whole of the steam vessels afloat, building, and converting. For our 59 ships, 14,000 men and boys will require six in full pay, and 4,000 in ordinary; for 6 block-ships, 555; for 4 iron-cased ships, 1900; for 31 corvettes, 8097; for 6 block-ships, 555; for 27 smaller vessels, 1997; for 10 gun-vessels, 1500; for 6 floating-batteries, 1460; for 31 transports, tenders, &c., 3234; and for four steam-tugs, 160. In all, the total number of men required would be 37,000, or 33,815 officers and seamen, and 16,929 marines.

THE WHITWORTH GUN.—Last Saturday afternoon a series of interesting experiments were carried out at the Nore for the purpose of testing the efficiency of one of Mr. Whitworth's 70-pounder rifled guns, as opposed to wrought-iron plates several inches in thickness. The gun was placed in position on board the Excavation screw gun-vessel, lying in the Sunderland guard-ship at Sheerness, and the firing took place from the steam floating-battery Trusty, which had been fitted up with iron plates of extraordinary thickness. The experiments were witnessed by the Lords of the Admiralty and a large number of naval and military officers and scientific gentlemen, and the result clearly demonstrated the extraordinary power of the elongated shot when discharged from Mr. Whitworth's heavy rifled ordnance. The plates were riddled, and in some instances destroyed; and in all cases the shot struck with telling effect.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The annual meeting of charity children, generally held in St. Paul's Cathedral, will this year take place at the Crystal Palace.

A grand banner and fancy fair in aid of the building fund of the Warehousemen and Clerks' Schools, under the highest auspices and most influential management, is announced to be held at the Crystal Palace during three days, commencing on Friday, the 8th of June.

A meeting was held at the Horns last night to promote the establishment of a South London Museum. Mr. Ingall, M.P., occupied the chair, and the movement was supported by several of the most influential inhabitants of the locality.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Last week the births of 8432 boys and 8316 girls in all 16,748 children were registered in London. In the corresponding weeks of the years 1856-65 the average number was 1666 —. The girls in all 16,748 children registered in London last week, in 1857, made the same as that of the previous week. For the ten years 1856-65 the average number of deaths in the week was 1061. In the week ending May 26 it was 1219, after correction for increase of population, to be 1213.

THE ROYAL HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY'S exhibition of flowers and plants under the auspices of this society took place on Wednesday and Thursday in the Regent's Park. The show was very unusually beautiful, the weather being all that could be desired. The gardens were thronged with fashionable visitors on the afternoon. Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary Adelaide honoured the exhibition by their presence, and the archdeacon mustered in great numbers.

NEWSPAPERS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.—About 150 members of this very useful calling assembled at the Freemasons' Tavern on Tuesday evening last to celebrate the anniversary of an institution which some years ago was established by Lord Lyttelton, Mr. Thackeray, Mr. Dickens, and other gentlemen well-known to authorship. The chair was occupied by Mr. W. H. Russell, the distinguished correspondent of the Times, whose presence in the vicinity of the claims of the society, and their united appeals resulted in a very liberal collection.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS OF FOREIGNERS IN DISTRESS.—The fifty-fourth anniversary dinner of the society was held on Saturday, the valuable institution was celebrated on Wednesday evening by a dinner at the Freemasons' Tavern, Lord Tweeddale in the chair, when a large company were assembled to plead for foreigners resident in London. This institution was established in 1813, and has relieved upwards of 1000 persons during the present year. A list of subscriptions was read by the secretary, which, with the collection at the dinner, amounted to upwards of £300, and the total was £1016.

ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL.—The annual festival of this hospital, situated in Gray's-inn-road, was celebrated by a very elegant dinner at the Freemasons' Tavern on Wednesday evening, Lord Lovelace presiding in the absence of the Duke of Wellington. In proposing the health of the Queen, the chairman observed that the hospital was a charity for the benefit to the extent of £250. There are three wards of the hospital, capable of accommodating forty-two patients, and numerous out-patients are relieved daily. There still being a debt of £2000 or £3000 on the building. During the past year 1000 in-patients had been relieved, and 1000 out-patients had been prescribed for. The subscriptions of the evening amounted to upwards of £1000

THE HOSPITAL FOR CONSUMPTION.—The annual festival, which is recently opened to patients, this admirable institution has had two hundred cases under treatment, and the results have been highly encouraging and success, and some poor sufferers whose maladies have hitherto baffled all medical skill. The dinner on Wednesday evening last was numerously attended very favourably. The numerous applications of patients, however, on the day appointed for the election, and the necessity of refusing the majority of such as contribution, and the desire which exists on the part of the admirers of the institution to extend its benefits to a greater number of the afflicted, afforded to them.

THE DISTURBANCES AT ST. GEORGE'S-IN-THE-EAST.—The services here last Sunday were conducted in strict conformity with the instructions issued by the Bishop of London, and the ritualistic use of "the singing boys and singing men" alluded to in that document did not enter the church. The choir, which consisted of about 30 men, sang within the railings of the communion-table, but were accommodated, such of them as required it, with seats in the nave, and took no part in the churchwardens. In other respects, so far as the interruptions on the part of the congregation were concerned, the service was little disturbed on both occasions.

FLOWER SHOW AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The first flower show of the season took place at Sydenham last Saturday, and was a striking success. The arrangements for the display were on the same scale and in same as on former occasions—roses, calceolaria, azalea, pelargoniums, fuchsias, &c., being arranged in the centre, and the tropical trees and tropical plants the north nave; while the fruit was displayed in the transept. The exhibition of roses was very large and fine, and that of the fine flowers; fine classes were devoted to store and greenhouse plants, three to fuchsias, three to pelargoniums, four to cut flowers, four to cut roses, three to pelargoniums, one to cinerarias, and one to newly-introduced or rare plants.

EXTRAORDINARY ACCIDENT AT THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY TERMINUS.—A somewhat extraordinary accident occurred at the station on Wednesday evening, an excursion train actually running off the metals on the street. Fortunately, no life was lost, and but little damage was done by the company's secretary :—"It is with regret I have to inform you that the 6.30 train from York to-day, due at 8.45 (Wednesday), left the station, excursion train from the Lancashire district, which, owing to its speed not having been regulated, ran off the metals on the street side of the platform, the 'step' at the end of the arrival line—the engine passing over the step by a short distance—and the tender and carriages behind. Fifteen passengers were bruised by the concussion; but none, I am happy to say, are dangerously hurt. The engine, tender, and carriages are off the rails, but no accident has been made, and it has been deemed right to prefer a charge against one of the drivers of the excursion train, who, I regret to say, the guard in question, was taken to the Clerkenwell Police Court on Thursday. Mr. Arnold, who was much hurt, had already left the line at the break, and he was committed to gaol for three months with hard labour.

AT THE MIDDLESEX SESSIONS on Tuesday a singular scene took place during the trial of a man charged with stealing a watch. Seven of the jury pronounced for a conviction, but one dissentient declared that he was invited to go to a public-house to meet a member of the jury, called as the stolen coins had not been identified by sparks. The jury were then ordered to withdraw to their room, and on returning into court, without however, being able to agree to their verdict. The foreman said that he had been induced to go to the public-house under the impression that it was the opinion of some of the jury who were acquainted with the prisoner that he was a respectable man, and had always borne a good character. The Judge sought for more precise information on the point, and the foreman said that he was told that the prisoner was in the circumstances of a painful character which might have affected his colleagues' judgment; however, he had since ascertained that there was no truth in the imputations which had been cast upon his sanity, and said that the statement was made unintentionally. The jury, after hearing the learned gentleman's remarks, the jury were dismissed, being unable to agree.

ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY.—The annual dinner in commemoration of this society, held on Monday night, was one of the most interesting meetings ever held in the society's history. The chairman, Lord Ebury, stated how much it is in the power of the society to confer, was presented to the gallant Captain Ryder, who had received the thanks of the society, and made the presentation in a highly appropriate speech. Lady Franklin was also present, and Captain Patrick Buchanan read a letter which had been written by Sir John Franklin, and which he had received from a letter from that distinguished lady which gave grateful expression to her feelings. Dr. Rae, the discoverer of the fate of Sir John Franklin and the North-west Passage, and urged that a national monument should be erected, on which the names of Franklin and his brave companions should be distinctly recognised. Several new members were elected by ballot.—

ROYAL LITERARY FUND.—The annual meeting of the friends and supporters of this society, held on Monday night, was one of the most interesting meetings ever held in the society's history. The chairman, Lord Ebury, stated how much it is in the power of the society to confer, was presented to the gallant Captain Ryder, who had received the thanks of the society, and made the presentation in a highly appropriate speech. Lady Franklin was also present, and Captain Patrick Buchanan read a letter which had been written by Sir John Franklin, and which he had received from a letter from that distinguished lady which gave grateful expression to her feelings. Dr. Rae, the discoverer of the fate of Sir John Franklin and the North-west Passage, and urged that a national monument should be erected, on which the names of Franklin and his brave companions should be distinctly recognised. Several new members were elected by ballot.—

THE FUNERAL OF THE LATE SIR CHARLES BARRY, R.A.—The funeral of this eminent architect took place on Tuesday, the remains having been removed from his late residence, 7, Bridge-street, Westminster, to Westminster Abbey, in the following order:—The Rev. Dr. Stanley, Dean of Westminster, met the procession at the entrance to the Abbey, and preceded it to the choir, where the service was performed. The pall-bearers were the Right Hon. Robert Lowe, Richard Quain, M.D., and Mr. James Fergus, M.P. S., the remainder in the Senate of that University, caused by the deaths of Bishop Mallory, Lord Macaulay, and Mr. M. T. Sadler.

THE ANNUAL DINNER of the visiting classes of Bermondsey were on Wednesday given a holiday by the directors, and were regaled at dinner in the Crystal Palace. Many members of the leading firms were present. The toast, being true, and children afterwards spent the day in the grounds, and appeared thoroughly to enjoy themselves.

The Duke of Cambridge was entertained on Thursday evening by the Grocers' Company at a grand banquet. Among those present were Lord Chelmsford, Lord Ebury, Lord Overstone, Mr. Hubbard, M.P., Alderman Ford, Major-General Scarlett, the Attorney-General, Sir J. Duke, and Mr. Binney. The health of the chairman was received with cheers.

A fire broke out last Saturday night on board the steam-ship Genoa, lying in the West India Docks. The fire originated in some way until the engine-rooms, the middle hold (filled with rum, cork, and oil), and upper deck were burned out, the machinery damaged, and the rigging of the mainmast burned.

THE LATE SIR CHARLES BARRY, R.A.

DEATH has been busy of late year among the great in art and letters: Macaulay, Stephenson, Brunel—these names of the highest eminence in their several walks—were removed within a few weeks of one another, and the removal of these names in Westminster Abbey, to which, now, that of Sir Charles Barry, the greatest architect of his age, has just been added. The Royal Academy has experienced these assaults of the grim tyrant with peculiar severity. Sir Charles Eastlake, the fourth Academician who has died since last summer. And the circumstances of his death were of so distressing a character as to add a painful feeling to the sympathy with the powerful intellect to his greatest work; for he expired suddenly, without previous warning, a week before the Queen's birthday, which he had been invited to assist in hoisting the Royal standard upon the completed Victoria Tower of the Palace of Westminster, the crowning and finishing achievement of his genius; and instead, a few days afterwards, the union jack floated from its half-mast height, and many a heart, high during the performance of his obsequies in the neighbouring Abbey, sank.

The fame of a great architect in his works; and, amid the conflict of professional opinion which always exists as to matters of taste, are rarely estimated in his lifetime. No architect of modern times has experienced a larger amount of professional and lay honour than Barry, no one has been subjected to more disparaging discussion and opposition, and yet the verdict of time and harmony that might have unnerved a man of the stoutest resolution, if not overwhelmed altogether from his purpose. With these contests, however, we have not now to deal; our object in this brief notice is simply to show the works of a man of whom the country has every reason to be proud. For many of the following particulars we are indebted to the late Mr. Digby Wyatt, read on the 20th ult., at the Royal Institute of British Architects.

Charles Barry was born on the 23rd of May, 1795, in Westminster—in Bridge-street, close to Westminster Bridge. His father, Mr. Walter Barry, was a stationer in a comfortable position of business, having contract with the stationery Office, which enabled him to leave his family moderately well off at his death. His education was received chiefly at neighbouring private schools, in Westminster or Lambeth. From more boyhood he appears to have indulged in a strong taste for drawing, and was stated that was his habit to sketch all over the walls of the room in which he was taught. Not content with this, he would paste lining paper over the surface he had covered with scribbling of his fancies, and start afresh upon a new series. At the age of sixteen he was articled to Messrs. Middleton and Bailey, architects and surveyors to the parish of Lambeth, with whom he appears to have remained about five years. He subsequently left this metropolitan at the time of his entry into his masters' office; for early as 1812, before he had completed his articles, he was a student and exhibitor at the Royal Academy; and, singularly enough, his first published drawing was a design for a new bridge at Westminster Hall, "the very building which, as it were, was destined to rise to its greatest work in after years. It appears in the catalogue of 1812 as the production of 'Charles Barry, Princes Middleton's Place, Lambeth. At this time he made acquaintance with Mr. Wolfe, then a young lad, articled to Mr. Joseph Gwilt, the architect, between whom and himself a friendship sprung up which lasted uninterruptedly during their joint lives. In 1817—C. Barry's first separate appearance at the Royal Academy, with an original design for a new gaol in the following year he exhibited a design for a "Museum and Library, with an Observatory," and in 1819 a design for a group of buildings for a nobleman's park, comprising a picture gallery, library, museum, observatory, and mausoleum. The following year his father died, and left him a small sum of money, when, contrary to the wishes of his friends, he resolved to travel, with a view of perfecting his knowledge and taste in his profession by the inspection of Italian and other parts.

In April, 1817, he accordingly quitted England, in the company of Mr. Cubitt, with whom he travelled for some time: his friend Wolfe subsequently met him, and for some months they worked hard in Northern Italy, drawing and measuring, at Florence and Rome, with the usual pleasant perseverance, and with the aid of Mr. Eastlake and other artist friends, whom he also highly esteemed. With Mr. Barry, for Kinnaird was also a fellow-traveller, and Mr. Johnson—subsequently Professor Johnson, of Haileybury College—he visited Greece, and made many beautiful drawings. One of these, "A View of the Acropolis, from the Parthenon, taken on the Spot," he sent to Somerset House in 1821. Another, "A View of Athens," he chose as a drawing to frame and tinted on the spot in the year 1818, appeared in the Exhibition of 1823. At the latter date Mr. Kinnaird was living at 20, in his pockets so empty that, despite his earnest desire to go further afield, he was forced to return to England. Here, however, he happily made the acquaintance of a gentleman of fortune, a Mr. Baillie, who was so pleased with the sketches that he made him an offer of an engagement as travelling artist. With this gentleman he visited, in 1819, young Barry went up the Nile several times, and visited the Holy Land, Syria, Asia Minor, and many of the Greek Islands, from some of which engravings were subsequently made for Finden's "Illustrations of the Bible." A View of Jerusalem, by Mr. Richard Cairo, from a sketch taken on the spot in the year 1818," exhibited in 1824, was one of the fruits of this journey. Mr. Baillie died in the exhibition catalogue of 1822, when Barry contributed a drawing of "Ali Bey's Tomb, Constantinople," and in 1823 a "Mosque" (part of which actually exists), restored principally from documents collected on the spot by the architect himself. He resumed his connection with Mr. Baillie for about a year and a half, and returned to England in July, 1820.

On starting upon the above-mentioned tour Barry's predilections were for Greek architecture, concurring which he was enthusiastic, but on his return he became a convert to the Italian style of architecture. They both felt the beauties of Gothic, but, believing it unfit for the age in which they lived, resolved to have nothing to do with it. Before he quitted Italy, Barry became a warm convert to the Italian Church at Manchester, which he designed in 1822, and which was speedily followed by another edifice of the same character for Stand, near Manchester. A drawing of the former was in the exhibition of 1823 described as being "now building," and accompanying it a "West Elevation of a Design for a Church to be built at Oldham." In 1825 it is completed successfully for the building of the new church of St. Peter at Brighton, two views of which were sent to the exhibition in 1822, but the steeple of which has not to this day been supplied. The success of this Building obtained for him the favourable notice of the Earl of Egremont, who employed him to add a steeple to the parish church of Petworth, and also to make several designs for alterations in his seat at the same place. Soon after that the late Daniel Wilson gave him three churches to erect in his parish of Islington—viz., at Ball's-pond, Cloudesley-square, and Holloway. Barry had not made much study of Gothic when he built his first churches, and they are many of them remarked to be faulty in detail and defective in proportion. His afterwards, however, made a tour in England for the express purpose of supplying these defects, and from this time he became as ardent a lover of Gothic as of Italian architecture.

Soon after his establishment in business Barry was appointed architect to Brulewich College, where he erected a new wing; and about the same time he became connected with the building of a new wing for St. Thomas's Hospital. In 1827 he removed from Ely-place to 27, Foley-place, Marylebone. Meantime he had built a house in pure Greek style for Mr. (afterwards Sir) Thomas Potter, of Bulle Hill, near Manchester; and shortly afterwards was chosen to build the Royal Institution of Arts of that town. In 1829 he designed various additions to the Pitt Press at Cambridge, and struck at last upon the golden vein which ultimately made him a prosperous man. His design for the Travellers' Club, so elegant in its exterior, so remarkable for resource in internal planning, was successful in a limited competition (1831). This building has been said to be an imitation of the Pandolfini Palace at Florence; but from it Barry derived no more than the general suggestion, the design being strictly his own, and differing in many essential particulars from the supposed prototype. The Athenæum at Manchester, in the same style, but constructed of stone (the other being of plaster), was designed about the year 1836, and completed about 1839. In 1838 he commenced his extensive designs for the conversion of Trentham, one of the seats of the Duke of Sutherland, from an ugly house into a stately mansion, in which he succeeded beyond all expectations which the flat and unpromising aspect of the site seemed to warrant. The alterations at Stafford House and Chiefden, for the same noble Duke, and general designs for Dunrobin Castle, continued to employ great part of his time down to the year 1853. We will dismiss other minor works upon which he was engaged from about this period forwards before touching upon his great national undertaking, the Palace of Westminster, which during the last twenty-six years of his life has necessarily almost uninterruptedly engrossed his attention—viz., at Bowood, various constructions for the Marquis of Lansdowne, including the Campanile Lodge and Golden Gates; at the College of Surgeons, the portico and enlargement, completed in 1837; for Lord Tankerville, a beautiful Italian villa at Walton-on-Thames; at Birmingham, the King Edward's School: at Woburn, various alterations for the Duke of Bedford. In 1837, after a competition with Messrs. Basevi, Blore, Smirke, Burton, and Cockerell, Barry's designs were accepted for the Reform Club, another magnificent specimen of Italian architecture, built after the Farnese Palace. In 1841 he produced his fine designs for Bridgewater House, for Lord Francis Egerton, afterwards the Earl of Ellesmere, which were very different from those which he commenced executing as late as July, 1847. Probably no building he ever erected was more elaborately studied, and the result is shown in much of the beautiful detail which decorates the princely structure. In 1840 Barry made designs, which were carried out, for converting Highclere, the seat of Lord Carnarvon, into an irregular version of the Italian. About the same time he completed additions to University College, Oxford; and made designs for Worcester College, at the same university. The restoration, or rather conversion, of the Treasury buildings in Whitehall to rich Italian must be looked upon as one of the most successful adaptations of existing structural arrangement ever attempted.

On the 16th of October, 1834, the memorable fire took place which destroyed the two Houses of Parliament. Upon this disaster occurring it was, in the first instance, intended to have employed Sir Robert Smirke to rebuild the place, and he was actively engaged by the Department of Works to make plans for the purpose. Sir R. Peel, always a kind patron of Sir Robert, appointed a Committee to examine his designs, but this Committee publicly acknowledged itself unable to form a sufficiently accurate opinion upon the merits of any plan, and recommended an open competition and the appointment of a Royal Commission, a recommendation which was adopted. The acting commissioners appointed were the late Mr. Hanbury Tracy (afterwards Lord Sudeley), Sir Edward Cust, Thomas Liddell, Esq., and George Vivian, Esq.—Lord Duncannon being at the time the First Commissioner of his Majesty's Woods and Forests. Ninety-seven designs, comprising upwards of 1000 drawings, were submitted, in not been from time to time exhibited to the readers. On his undertaking this great work Mr. Barry removed from Foley-place to Old Palace-yard. The building was commenced in 1837, so far as the coffer dam was concerned. The first stone of the superstructure of the new Palace at Westminster, being the angle of the plinth of the Speaker's house nearest the bridge, was laid by the architect's wife without any public ceremony, and in the presence of a few personal friends only, on the 27th of April, 1840; and the first stone of the Victoria Tower was also laid in the same unpretentious way by the same lady on her birthday, the 22nd of December, 1843. The building was brought so near completion in 1852 that on the 2nd of February the new House of Commons and all the grand halls and corridors were opened, and the Queen alighted for the first time under the great tower. On the 11th of the same month the artist received the honour of knighthood at Windsor Castle.

Sir Charles Barry was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in the spring of 1841, Associate Elect in 1842, and Royal Academician, in Willis's Palace, in 1844. His first recognition from abroad dates from Rome, December 29, 1842, conveying his affiliation to the Academy of St. Luke's; his second from St. Petersburg, December 12, 1847. His election into the Russian Royal Academy, which was accompanied by the presentation of a diamond snuff-box from the Czar, was ultimately followed by his nomination to those of Belgium, January 9, 1847; Prussia, April 28, 1849; Sweden, May 25, 1850; Denmark, Antwerp, and the American Institute. In 1855 he received the gold medal of honour for architecture given at the Exposition Universelle of Paris.

The circumstances of his death were very shocking and painful. On Friday, the 11th of May, his health having hitherto exhibited no failing, he attended at the Houses of Parliament and transacted business as usual. On the following day he visited the Crystal Palace, where he remained a considerable time, and on returning home was seized, between eight and nine in the evening, with an attack of paralysis, which terminated fatally within a quarter of an hour, and before a medical man who had been sent for had time to arrive.

The mortal remains of the great architect were buried in Westminster Abbey on Tuesday, the 22nd of May, in a grave near to that of Robert Stephenson, and close to the pulpit from which the sermons of the special Sunday evening services are preached. The attendance on the occasion was very numerous, and included the members of the Royal Academy, the various architectural societies of the metropolis, and the representatives of the Royal Society and other learned societies.

THE VICTORIA TOWER, NEW PALACE OF WESTMINSTER, ON THE DAY OF SIR C. BARRY'S FUNERAL.

competition for three or five premiums of £500 each, and after a private view for the members of both Houses, &c., and the confirmation by a Parliamentary Committee of the report of the Royal Commissioners, were publicly exhibited from the 28th of April. The Royal Commissioners state in that document, approved by his Majesty, and presented to both Houses of Parliament on the 29th of February, 1836, that, "although a difference of opinion may exist between us with respect to the ground plans separately considered, we are all unanimous in our opinion that the one delivered to us marked 64, with the emblem or a portcullis, bears throughout such evident marks of genius and superiority of talent as fully to entitle it to the preference we have given it in our classification; and we have no hesitation in giving it as our opinion that the elevations are of an order so superior, and display so much taste and knowledge of Gothic architecture, as to leave no doubt whatever in our minds of the author's ability to carry into effect your Majesty's commands, should you be pleased to honour him with your commands." The design thus recommended proved to be the one drawn, to a great extent, by the very hands of the late Sir Charles. The second premium was awarded to Mr. Banker, the third to Mr. Hamilton, and the fourth to Mr. Salton. It should be stated that, by the conditions agreed upon by Parliament, the style of the proposed building was to be either Gothic or Elizabethan; and, although Barry succeeded in obtaining the prize for his designs, it is well known that if he had not been coerced by those conditions he would probably have sent in plans in the Italian style. Men of taste amongst the public are also very much divided upon this question, and the battle of the styles between the champions of Classicism and Gothicism was for some time warmly contested, though it failed to modify the determination already arrived at.

It would be quite unnecessary for us to go minutely into the history and details of this grand national structure, which, during great part of its progress, has been continually chronicled and illustrated in the pages of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, Mr. Diamond Hasbrand is thereby a particular of the plan, or a feature in the design, there to the very details of the decorations, which has been given before the eye of our subscribers. We have observed, with pleasure, that by the same hands the architect's wife without any public ceremony, and in the presence of a few personal friends only, on the 27th of April, 1840; and the first stone of the Victoria Tower was also laid in the same unpretentious way by the same lady on her birthday, the 22nd of December, 1843. The building was brought so near completion in 1852 that on the 2nd of February the new House of Commons and all the grand halls and corridors were opened, and the Queen alighted for the first time under the great tower. On the 11th of the same month the artist received the honour of knighthood at Windsor Castle.

Sir Charles Barry was elected an Associate of the Royal Academy in the spring of 1841, Associate Elect in 1842, and Royal Academician, in Willis's Palace, in 1844. His first recognition from abroad dates from Rome, December 29, 1842, conveying his affiliation to the Academy of St. Luke's; his second from St. Petersburg, December 12, 1847. His election into the Russian Royal Academy, which was accompanied by the presentation of a diamond snuff-box from the Czar, was ultimately followed by his nomination to those of Belgium, January 9, 1847; Prussia, April 28, 1849; Sweden, May 25, 1850; Denmark, Antwerp, and the American Institute. In 1855 he received the gold medal of honour for architecture given at the Exposition Universelle of Paris.

The circumstances of his death were very shocking and painful. On Friday, the 11th of May, his health having hitherto exhibited no failing, he attended at the Houses of Parliament and transacted business as usual. On the following day he visited the Crystal Palace, where he remained a considerable time, and on returning home was seized, between eight and nine in the evening, with an attack of paralysis, which terminated fatally within a quarter of an hour, and before a medical man who had been sent for had time to arrive.

The mortal remains of the great architect were buried in Westminster Abbey on Tuesday, the 22nd of May, in a grave near to that of Robert Stephenson, and close to the pulpit from which the sermons of the special Sunday evening services are preached. The attendance on the occasion was very numerous, and included the members of the Royal Academy, the various architectural societies of the metropolis, and the representatives of the Royal Society and other learned societies.

"MAY," BY O. W. WILLIS, IN THE PORTLAND GALLERY.

MAY—called, as we all know, after the goddess Maia, daughter of Atlas and Pleione, and a name under which the Earth was worshipped at this season of the year—has always been a favourite month with poets and painters, who seem never to tire of celebrating her fresh and blooming charms, presenting them over in some new and attractive form.

Then came faire May, the fayrest mayd on ground,
Deck't all with daintie of her season's pryde,
And throwing flowers out of her lap around.
Lord! how all creatures laught when her they eyde,
And leapt and daunct as they had ravisht beene;
And Cupid self about her fluttered all in greene.

Mr. Willis, without resorting to goddesses or "cupids all in greene," pleasingly commemorates the fragrant delights of this glorious month as she appears to humble mortals in this terrestrial globe of ours in a little picture exhibited by him at the Institution of the Fine Arts, in Regent-street. A group of children out on a pic-nic excursion, with their little goat-chaise, have congregated in a shady nook to gather sweet-smelling May, of which they have already taken a goodly store. The eldest girl is crowning her youngest sister with a luxuriant coronal, to the great delight of the young lady, as betokened in her smiling face. Ideas of youth and health and joy are agreeably associated in this modest little performance, which we have great pleasure in engraving.

Considerable interest has been excited by what may be called a piece of Court gossip, though the gossip connects itself with matters of the deepest import. The Regent of Prussia is stated to have addressed a letter to the Prince Consort of England, in which the character and probable views of the Emperor of the French were spoken of with a certain frankness. One of those crawling creatures that are found on the steps of all thrones contrived to procure a copy of this letter, and the transcript was forwarded to the personage criticised therein. How the affair can have gone any further it is difficult to understand, unless Courts have a different way of dealing with such cases from that in use among gentlemen. One of the two would, of course, have put the document into the fire, and erased the name of the traitor from the visiting-list; but it is stated that the Emperor has conceived himself entitled to avail himself of the information in question, and to entertain relations accordingly. There is by no means got at what lurks all round the cliffs of the story, or there are some remarkable "wrongs" in it.

The splendid piece of ecclesiastical preferment which came into the hands of Government by the promotion of Dr. Longley to York has been bestowed upon another of the Bishops of Lord Shaftesbury's school. Dr. Villiers is Bishop of Durham. The High Church party complain that the Church of England, "the most learned Church in the world," is likely to be governed solely by Prelates who have not given much proof of worldly learning. There is, doubtless, reason in the complaint; yet in these days an active literary man is perhaps needed in a Church that has a great deal of militant duty to do, and it may be better for all that a Bishop should be a laborious and vigilant administrator than the most perfect master of an Æschylean chorus.

London, in consequence of the custom of those who have to preside over her highways, is once more, in the height of the season, variously barricaded, the Strand and Piccadilly being, of course, selected as the points for embarrassing the traffic. We do not however, very much regret this, knowing that much even the most obtuse citizen as he storms and rages in his immovable carriage the fact that new streets must be cut. Stare super vias antiquas is all very well, but men of business have something else to do upon the pavement than standing still. The moderate advantage gained by the lesson, nevertheless, does by no means excuse the folly and thoughtlessness of those who tear up the streets in May and June instead of in September. Our last new metropolitan ornament, the Floral Hall, has been artistically inaugurated by a grand concert, at which all the Lieutenants of Covent Garden were paraded, and gems from their operas were given. Some of these days, we suppose, the beautiful building will be turned to its floral purpose. Let us add, while on topography, that the new street from King-street westward has been partially—very partially—opened, and we do hope that for the honour of Belgravia the pavement will speedily be laid. It is the appropriate name that seems too obvious to be overlooked—Dryden-street. The road cuts through Rose-alley, and we owe the atonement and homage to the poet spot whose memory is for ever associated with the name. Surely the educated gentlemen who have charge of this improvement will perform this graceful act of recognition.

We shall not have again to refer to the gladiatorial conflict of Farnborough, but something must be begun to put an end to the tremendous reality has at last tapered off into theatrical conversationalism. The heroes of that fray have been publicly exhibited, audiences have been delivered, and

A silvered belt each carries for his pains.

THE COURT.

On the morning of the Queen's birthday (the 24th ult.) the band of the Royal Marines stationed at Osborne and played a melody under her Majesty's window. In the afternoon the Queen and the Prince Consort, attended by the Duke of Newcastle, drove in the vicinity of Osborne. On the following day (Monday) the Princess of Leiningen, accompanied by her Majesty and his Royal Highness, arrived at Osborne from Cumberland-lodge, Windsor, on a visit for a second carriage. In the evening the Royal dinner party included the Duchess of East, the Princess Alice, Prince Victor, the Princess of Leiningen, and the Prince of Leiningen. Mr. Coote and band had the honour of attending, after dinner, her Majesty, who left the room of the Royal party and suite, entered the Council Chamber at ten o'clock, when dancing commenced, and was kept up until midnight.

On Saturday the Prince of Wales took leave of his Royal parents and suite previously to his departure.

On Sunday the Queen, the Prince Consort, the Duchess of Kent, with some of the other members of the Royal family and suite, attended Divine service in the palace. The Rev. G. Prothero officiated.

On Monday the Queen, with the Royal grounds of Osborne. The weather was stormy. The Prince Consort embarked on board the Fairy at ten o'clock, with his Royal Highness, and proceeded to Portsmouth to visit fortifications. His Royal Highness returned at two o'clock.

On Monday the Queen, the Princess Alice, Princess Alice, Princesses Helena and Louise, and Prince Arthur went to Whippingham, at eleven o'clock, to lay the first stone of the church. Her Majesty was present at the church, gate by the Rev. G. Prothero, who conducted the Royal party to the place where the stone was to be laid. Her Majesty having been informed that the success of the undertaking, some coins in a bottle were put in a cavity under the stone, when the stone took a silver trowel and some mortar and spread it carefully over the surface where the stone was to be lowered; after which the stone was lowered to its place by the use of the machinery provided for the purpose. The ceremony lasted half-an-hour.

The Countess of Desart has succeeded the Duchess of Atholl as Lady in Waiting to the Queen.

The Court returned to town from Osborne on Thursday.

Her Majesty held a levée in attendance of the Most Hon. Order of the Bath on Monday, the 11th of June.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent left Osborne at two o'clock on Wednesday, and embarked on board the Fairy for Trinity Wharf, East Cowes. Her Royal Highness proceeded to Windsor by railway.

The Duke of Bedford has been suffering from indisposition, arising, we regret to say, from the rupture of a small bloodvessel, at his town residence, in Belgrave-square.

His Excellency the Earl of Carlisle, who has been staying for some weeks with the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland at Stafford House, left town on Saturday last for Dublin Castle.

The Earl and Countess of Yarborough and Lady Sophia Pelham have left Arlington street for the Isle of Wight.

Accompanied by Lady Churchill, the Right Hon. Lord Hill, and the Hon. Miss Hill, the Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary, announced for the 1st of June, is postponed till the 14th.

Viscountess Palmerston has issued cards for an assembly this evening, and a soirée dansante on the 15th of June.

His Excellency Lieutenant-General Sir Gaspard Le Marchant, Governor of Malta, accompanied by Captain Graham, A.D.C., arrived in town on Sunday evening.

Mdme. Histori has had a narrow chance of being poisoned. Her physician had ordered her a potion with fifteen drops of laudanum in it, but the chemist who made up the prescription put thirty drops by mistake. The symptoms produced by this overdose were for a short time alarming, but the lady has now quite recovered, and has resumed her performances in Paris.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 2, 1860.

THE reassembling of the House of Commons (which has now but the last holiday of the week to run) shall arrive before it is allowed on Monday by that of the House of Lords, and it may be hoped that business will be proceeded with in earnest. Supposing a pacific termination of the Paper Duty question can be arrived at, there will be the Bankruptcy Bill and the Lunacy Bill to be dealt with, to say nothing of Church Rates, the Census, London Traffic, Corporation Reform, and half a dozen other matters of much importance, all of which Parliament professes to intend to manipulate. Indeed, in a large number of cases it has already done so, and if members desire to find themselves on the heather with calm consciences, they will abbreviate speechification, and get into Committees as soon as possible. Are we sanguine enough to hope that they will do anything of the kind? Alas! We have approached the third act of too many a Session to be credulous.

Every eye turns upon Sicily, and every heart beats higher at the news that the insurrection is raging everywhere in the island, and that as yet Garibaldi's fortune has fallen to Garibaldi. The revelations of the atrocities under which the unhappy subjects of the King of Naples have been writhing become daily more and more sickening, and the only wonder is that Italian blood has not long since boiled over. But the day of retribution would seem to have come, and, be the result of this outbreak what it may, the reign of priests, police, and tortures must be over. In the interests of common humanity, and for the credit of kingcraft, the crowned heads of Europe must put an end to the horrible system, miscalled a Government, which has so long endured in the Neapolitan dominions. We may add here that by a very large majority the Sardinian Parliament has affirmed the cession of Savoy and Nice. Without further reference to the policy of our nearest neighbour in the matter, it may be said that it is not wonderful that Sardinia has thought such a price worth paying for the liberation of the adjacent provinces from tyrannies cognate to that of Naples, though far less brutal.

A MEDIUM OF COMMUNICATION ON ANTIQUARIAN SUBJECTS BETWEEN MEN OF LETTERS, SCIENCE, ART, &c.

UNPUBLISHED LETTERS OF VOLTAIRE.

By the favour of John Henderson, Esq., the possessor of them, several unpublished letters, highly curious and interesting, written by Voltaire to George Keate during 1767 and 1771, have been placed at our service. But by some mistake we can find space only for the two which follow. We have marked many others for publication, however, and the next printed will be accompanied by a characteristic letter of Voltaire in his latter English force, on qui n'est pas une chose commune; bien peu de gens savent proprement donner leur esprit aux sujets qu'ils traittent. Jugez, Monsieur, combien l'homme de lettres doit manquer de matière. Il n'est question, le champ au conseil de Genève, pour le féliciter de la gloire qu'a la Republique d'avoir été si bien célébrée par vous, et si bien désenvelopée à nos yeux. Je vous dirai d'abord, que je n'ai point renoncé à mes petites délices, qui sont dans la territoire de Genève, elles me seront toujours chères, puisque j'ai eu le bonheur de vous y posseder quelques fois: mais je donne la préférence de vous y posseder encore plus: mais je donne la préférence de vous y posseder encore plus: mais je donne la pais de Gex, en Bourgogne. J'oso me flatter que Milord Bourlington en aurait été content: mes jardins ne sont point à la Française: je hais cette manie d'uniformité, et les plus champêtres que j'ai pû. J'ose les croire tout à fait à l'Anglaise, car j'aime la liberté, et je hais la simétrie. Je suis les leçons de Mr. Thuil, au Raincy, auprès de Paris, un carrière comme Voyllin avait commencé la scène, en cultivant la terre; il s'annula du Lac de Mantoue, et je m'annule point de celui de Genève. Si je regrette quelque chose dans mon exil, c'est de ne plus voir Milord Bourlington quelque jeune Anglois qui vous ressemble, vient à Genève, je vous supplie de me l'adresser, afin que j'aie souvent le plaisir de lui parler de vous. Mr. Hudson, mon ancien ami, a passé plusieurs mois auprès de moi, et je l'estime, de l'amitié et de la reconnaissance que je vous dois.

Sir.—It is very painful not to be able to render you by my own hand ‡ the sincere and kind thanks which I owe you, and it is difficult to express them. Your book § appeared to me excellent of its kind—wise, true, and well-written; in the style in which it is proper to be written: no common thing, for few people know how to adapt their mind to the subject on which they treat. Your book has more precious in my sight is the honour you have done me. I wrote immediately to the Council of Geneva to request that Milord Bourlington may be given leave to send his book as much celebrated by you, and so much encouraged to merit every where what you say of it. I have not renounced my petites délices which are in the territory of Geneva: they will always be dear to me, since there I have sometimes enjoyed the pleasure of your society; but I give the preference to a chateau which I have had built in the country of Gex, in Burgundy. I venture to flatter myself that Milord Bourlington would have been satisfied with it. My gardens are not at all in the French style. I have made them in a irregular and natural way, which I dare to believe them quite English, for I love liberty and I hate symmetry. I follow the lessons of Mr. Thuil in agricultural matters; and I terminate my career as Virgil began his, by cultivating the earth; he tired of the Lake of Mantua, but I do not tire of that of Geneva. If I regretted in the world, it is not to see the banks of the Thames. If ever any young Englishman who resembles you comes to Geneva, I beg of you to introduce him to me, that I may often have the gratification of talking to him of you. Adieu, Sir, believe that I shall while I live be penetrated with the esteem, friendship, and gratitude which I owe you.

Aux Délices, 10 Fev., 1762.

Un travail forcé, Monsieur, et une sotte bien languissante, m'ont empêché longtemps, de vous écrire; mais vous n'en avez pas été moins present à mon esprit et à mon cœur. J'ai toujours été indigné contre ceux qui ont confiné l'honneur que vous leur avez fait à celle et qu'ils ne méritaient pas. Un jour, un grand seigneur passant par un village avec d'excellent vin de Tokai, en donna à boire à des paisans, qui le trouvèrent amer, et qui crurent qu'on se moquait d'eux.

J'ai commencé l'édition de Corneille. Je suis obligé de dicter presque tout, je vais être dans un mois, sans yeux et sans bras. J'aime à faire la paix entre Corneille et Shakespear, en attendant que nos Rois daignent rendre la paix à l'Europe.

Votre bienfaiteur et votre admirateur, il pouvait faire des tragédies moitié prose, moitié vers, et quels vers encor! Ils ne sont certainement pas élégants et châtiés, comme ceux de Pope, et comme le Caton d'Addison; il se donnait la liberté de changer de lieu presque à chaque scène, d'entasser des événements incroyables les uns sur les autres, de faire durer une pièce vingt cinq ans; de mêler les bouffonneries au tragique. Son grand mérite, à mon avis, consiste dans une peinture forte et vraie de la nature humaine.

Corneille avait assurément une carrière plus difficile à remplir et il fallait vaincre continuellement la difficulté de la rime, ce qui est un travail pénible; il a fallu le tourner à l'utilité de langue, de l'art d'action, ne faire jamais entrer ni sortir un acteur, sans une raison intéressante; les toujours une intrigue avec art, et la découvre avec ménagement; faire parler chaque personnage selon son caractère; sur tout et ne rien dire qui put choquer les oreilles délicates d'une cour pleine d'esprit, et d'une académie composée de gens très savants, et très difficiles.

Vous m'avouerez que Shakspeare avait un peu plus ses coudées franches que Corneille. Au reste, vous savez combien j'estime votre nation, je ne perds aucune occasion de lui rendre justice dans mon commentaire.

Vous me ferlez un grand plaisir, Monsieur, si vous vouliez bien me dire quel est l'auteur de la petite histoire de David, intitulée, "The Man after God's own Heart," et quel est l'evêche qu'on a donné à ce Warburton, pour y prêcher avec ses assaisonnements sur le purgatoire, et l'immortalité de l'ame; et qui de la conclud qu'il était inspiré de Dieu. Apparemment que cet evêque a pris le fils de Sirona pour son Chapelain.

I will be for ever, dear Sir, your most faithfull and tender servant and friend,

Aux Délices, 10th Feb., 1762.

Compulsory work, Sir, and very failing health have long prevented my writing to you, and my heart has not ceased to occupy me in my mind and my heart. I have always been indignant with those who would not express their admiration which you have done for me, and which they did not deserve. One day a great lord passing through a village with a most excellent Tokay wine, gave some of it to the peasants, who found it bitter, and thought they were being mocked.

I have begun the edition of Corneille. I am obliged to dictate almost all of it, being hardly able to use my hand to write, and I try to make peace between Corneille and Shakespear, waiting till kings grant peace to give peace to Europe.

Your Shakespear was very fortunate, he could write tragedies half prose, half verse, and what verse! They are certainly not elegant and polished, like those of Pope, and Addison's Cato; he took liberty of changing the place in almost every scene, of heaping thirty or forty incidents one upon the other, of making a piece last twenty-five years, of mingling buffooneries with tragedy. He had genius, that is to say, sublime and natural pictures of natural pictures of human life.

Corneille had assurédly a more difficult career to fill; he had continually to conquer the difficulty of rhyme, which is a prodigious labour; he had to study the purity of language, the art of declamation, never to let an actor enter or depart without an interesting reason; always to conduct an intrigue with art, and to unravel it with truthfulness; to make each character speak with propriety; to say nothing which could shock the delicate ears of a court full of wit, and of an academy composed of very learned men, and very difficult people.

You will own to me that Shakespear had a little more elbow-room than Corneille. However, you know how much I esteem your nation. I do not lose any opportunity of rendering it justice in my commentary.

You would do me a great kindness, Sir, if you would tell me who is the author of the little history of David, entitled "The Man after God's own Heart;" and which is the bishopric which has been given to this Warburton, who has mingled his purgatory and immortality of the soul, and therefore concluded that he was inspired by God. Apparently this Bishop has taken the son of Sirona for his Chaplain, &c., &c.

MUSIC.

"La Gazza Ladra" was performed on Saturday last at the Royal Italian Opera. The opera has not been produced in London for several years, we think, and it is not surprising that among the finest of Rossini's works; not less remarkable for the fertility and interesting style of its subject, than for the exquisite beauty of its music. As now performed at Covent Garden, excepting Grisi, who in the character of the humble heroine was admirable, we have met with no one who acts the part more touchingly or who sings the music more charmingly than Mme. Ronconi, in a perfect conception of the humorous and most beautifully treated maid of the inn. Others have sung some parts of the music, especially Mme. Persiani, "Di piacer mi balza il cor," with more brilliancy, none with greater delicacy or truer expression. Gardoni, as the young soldier, both acted and sang admirably. In Paere we had the most striking and finished bit of acting we remember to have seen, that has been given since the days of Tamburini. And it is sufficient to say that the air, "Ah! nel fiero momento" was sung by Tamburini, as glad to, see at both houses that increased attention is paid to the orchestra and symphonies, and that Verdi no longer engrosses the stage as he has done so long.

Mr. Ella, the able director of the Musical Union, who is active and unwearied in bringing forward novelties, has lately discovered that aristocratic society, brought forward, at the matinée on Tuesday last, Beethoven's Trio in E flat, op. 100, and afterwards two solos—"Pensée Mélodique," composed by himself, and Weber's "Moto Perpetuo." In these Mr. Ella acquitted himself in a manner to be reckoned of every quality of an artist of the highest order, and was received by the audience with enthusiasm, as indeed his due for his merits. We may add that his next public appearance will be at the Philharmonic concert on the 15th inst. The new Symphony which formed Mr. Ella's programme were Spohr's double quartet in E minor, Beethoven's quartet in C minor, and a solo (Fantasia Rosse) on the violoncello, played by Signor Piatti for his last Tuesday's matinée, as usual, was fully and fashionably attended.

Miss Poole's concert at the Hanover Square Rooms on Tuesday evening. This lady may well be called the English singer par excellence. Being a thorough musician, she sings well in every style. But, having an English ballad to sing, she knows that it is the object of her special attention, she sings our national songs, and with deep expression, and feeling, that only belongs to truth, simplicity, purity, and effect unequalled by any vocalist of the day. At this concert she sang a number of ballads and ballad-like airs, all most captivating manner. With one of them we were especially delighted in a new ballad composed for her by Francesco Berger, "Fly not yet, be off with the old Love," which was enthusiastically encored. Miss Poole was assisted by Mdme. Catherine Hayes, Mr. and Mrs. Weiss, Miss Palmer, Mr. Benson, Mr. Thomas, Mr. Land, Mr. Lazarus, and Mr. J. L. Hatton. Though the concert was chiefly vocal, it was not entirely so, as we were indebted for two pieces on the harp, a Grand Fetah on the piano, Mr. Graff Nicholls on the flute, and Signor Regondi on the concertina.

Herr Koppits, a performer on the flute, of Continental reputation, has just arrived in London. He has not yet appeared in public, but is announced to play at the Philharmonic Society's concert on the 2nd of July—the last of the season. Having had an opportunity of hearing Herr Koppits, we may pronounce him—from those, especially, who are amateurs of the flute—that his performance is calculated to give much extraordinary treat. He not only plays with a brilliancy of tone and execution which we have never heard equalled, but possesses the singular faculty of producing sonorous & double notes, frequently in harmony in two parts—a thing hitherto considered impossible on this instrument. He performed also on the flute a Concertante Polonaise of his own composition of difficulty, has much originality, beauty, and expression. Whether his peculiar methods of producing effects can be taught to others we know not; but, if they can, M. Koppits may be the founder of a new school of flute-playing which may enhance the interest and importance of this elegant instrument.

THE THEATRES.

St. James's.—The plan of having a French company at this theatre has been revived; and on Monday M. Adrien Talexy introduced a new dramatic troupe to the notice of London critics. In his hand of comedians he has included several of the leading performers of Paris, and his experiment, accordingly, promises much novelty. The performances opened with "God Save the Queen," and a prologue by MM. Charles Potier and Lambert Dunnery, which was entitled "Les Etoiles de Paris," and acted and sung (for it involved story and action) by M. Brice and Mlle. Marie Basta, assisted by twelve young ladies, impersonating stars. It went off with éclat. This was followed by a proverbe, lately produced at the Gymnase, written by M. Octave Feuillet, and named "Le Cheveu Blanc," and which is a piece of remarkable elegance and tact, creating an interest out of very simple materials. The two principal characters were supported by Mlle. Duverger and M. Paul Deseurt, and the former in the great scene where she plays on the harpsichord, her husband was wonderfully effective. M. Legouvé's comedy of "Par Droit de Conquête" was next performed, and was introduced by M. Brasseur, as George Barnard, who played the part well, but did not look quite young enough. Mlle. Rose Bellecourt, as Marguerite de Beaulieu, and Mdme. Thomasse, as Alice, were respectable. They were well received, and the performance appears to be regarded as very successful. The audience was numerous and fashionable.

Strand.—A new petite comedy was produced here on Monday last, entitled "Appearances are Deceitful." The title sufficiently expresses the spirit of the piece, which is satirical, and directed against the spy system, by which unskilful people to disguise their antecedents and present position, and to pass themselves off for what they are not in regard to family and station. Thus, Mr. Montgomery Plantagenet Fitz-Ooze (Mr. Clarke) assumes the name he bears, and would be reckoned an aristocratic gentleman; Mr. Woodcock (Mr. Paulton) would pass for a rich retired grocer; Viscount (Mr. Parselle), a poor foundling, is ashamed of his poverty, and afraid to woo Mrs. Woodcock, for whom he entertains an inextinguishable passion. He turns out to be the hero of the drama; and a miniature of his mother which he wears on his bosom identifies him as the brother of Cecilia Vivod (Miss E. Neville), who is the wife of Mr. Vivod (Mr. W. H. Swanborough), a painter, who copies the portraits and sells it to a fashionable patron, and thereby leads to certain windings and intricate passages which it is impossible for us to thread, to the identification of Viscount. The piece contains nothing whether novel or new to preserve the moral of his piece, and, assisted by the actor's powers, was received throughout with applause, succeeded in producing a marked effect on the audience. The theatre was numerously attended.

Haymarket.—Mr. Maddison Morton has supplied Mr. Buckstone with a farce, the hero of which exactly suits the specialities of the manager. It is called "The Adventures of Fitzpatrick, &c."—the latter being an estate in Somersetshire which the former, a retired grocer, has purchased; and, by his wife's persuasion, has adopted the name of its former proprietor, in order to bring more attention than his own. The lady (Mrs. Wilkins), indeed, is too aristocratic in her notions to endure the additional vulgarity of a young farmer Farmycraft (Mr. Farren) to her daughter, Miss Penelope Smyth, who thereby is driven to an expedient by which she contrives to read a lesson which causes him to repent of his ridiculous assumption. He disguises himself as an artist on a tour, and applies, under the name of Tottenham, at the baronial mansion, having been admitted, he pretends that he is the last of the race of the real Fitzmythes, travelling under a fictitious name, and threatens to expose poor Snoggins's unauthorized assumption of it, unless he maintains in security the property of its original owner. This is not successful, but is led into such extravagance as must overstate in his rôle, and, accordingly, he is unmasked and overcomes his vanity. His wife's pride also gives way; and, ultimately, young Harrowfield can safely compose the vous, and receives the hand of Miss Penelope, with the blessing of her parents, who are thoroughly cured of their pride and aristocratic folly. Mr. Buckstone's distresses are associated with much propriety and humour, and the grotesque disguise, which illustrated by his peculiar humour, kept the house in a roar. A new song by Mr. Rodwell, a cadency, entitled "The Soldier of Fortune," has been added to the attractions of this theatre. The negro-dancing (by Messrs. Charles and Henry Lauri) and the nursery gymnastics, and Miss Louise Leclercq by her taste of execution formed a pleasing contrast to their eccentricities. The scenery accompanying the action was exceedingly pretty.

New Adelphi.—Appropriately to the season, Mr. Webster has received at his theatre a farce, "Going to the Derby," which duly fully represents the bustle and sport of the scenes to which its title alludes.

Lyceum.—A farce, by Mr. Howard Paul, under the title of "Thrice Married," has been produced here, and affords opportunity for Miss Carlotta Leclercq to display her accomplishments as a dancer and a singer. The piece is but a trifle, with no more of story than is sufficient to account for the situation, but is neatly rendered and appropriately played by the fair bacchante Mdlle. Rosee, Gardon, Meadows, and Shore as the two uncles and gracious nephew. Whose gay and fashionable costume of the lady exhibiting her talents to so much advantage.

Standard.—On Saturday "The Merchant of Venice" revived at this theatre, with scenical accessories similar to those adopted by Mr. Kean at the Princess'. The characters made their exits and entrances by gondolas, and the costumes were remarkably rich and brilliant. Mr. Anderson performed Shylock. The audience were numerous on the first night of the appointments, and the revival is likely to be popular in the neighbourhood.

Astley's.—"The History of a Flag" continues to be very attractive. The scenes in this extravaganza abound in extraordinary feats; and these, with the preceding drama, have been exhibited at midday, as well as in the evening, four times during the week with great success.

COUNTRY NEWS.

A fire brigade similar to that in London is about to be established in Dublin with a force of twenty powerful engines and stations as well as fire escapes.

The directors of the Ulster Railway Company have accepted the tender of Messrs. Edwards for constructing the line of railway from Monaghan to Clones, for which Mr. Hamilton Maxwell is engineer. The works will be commenced at once, and will be completed by autumn, 1861.

Horncastle Agricultural Floral Fete at Leeds.—On Tuesday there was a floral fête in the grounds of Kendall Hall, near Leeds, and the show was attended by a very fashionable and numerous body of people. The show was generally considered very successful. In the evening the grounds were illuminated, and at the close the magnificent ruins of the abbey were illuminated with picturesque effect.

On Thursday week a railway train, with two hundred passengers, and a narrow escape with their lives, ran down a waggon had struck across the line, and the driver of the engine, not being able to stop the train, with great presence of mind leaped from the engine, and dashed through the obstacle, an elm tree of eighteen inches diameter, with no other injury than tearing the front of the engine, and passengers' long journey at their danger or escape.

Boiler Explosion at Chillington.—On Thursday week an explosion took place at the Chillington ironworks, resulting in serious injury to one of the workmen. One of the boilers collapsed, and inflicted another, and the top of a tall stack was thrown down, damaging several workshops on which the debris fell. A portion of the disabled boilers were propelled three or four hundred yards, and five of the workmen, more or less scalded, were more or less injured by the explosion.

The Queen's College, Birmingham.—An adjourned meeting of the council was held at the Queen's College, on Right Hon. Sir Robert Lichfield in the chair. A sub-committee was appointed to "consider and report upon the means for the future carrying on of the college in all its departments." A scheme is now under consideration by which it is believed the college will be placed on a more self-supporting basis. The Chancellor Law retains his office of Warden pro tem., and the entire income from the endowments derived from the bequest of the late Great Western Railway shall be applied to the purpose of the College.

An inquest was terminated on Saturday last before Mr. A. F. Fowler, of Chatham, who had died, as was alleged, from an overdose of opium, negligently administered to the medical attendant. Evidence proved that the doses were proper, although the effect was fatal; and the jury found "That the deceased died from the effects of opium, negligently administered to him for the treatment of rheumatic fever; and that we consider, from the evidence before which has been produced, that Dr. Burton was justified in following out the treatment in the way he did, and exercised more than ordinary skill.

Mr. Bright at Birmingham.—Mr. Bright on Wednesday night addressed a meeting at the Townhall, Birmingham, on the subject of the Government Reform Bill; and, in the course of a lengthened speech, described the idea of the people consenting to accept any less extension of the franchise than was contained in that measure. The hon. gentleman also alluded, in terms similar to his Manchester address, to the conduct of the House of Lords in rejecting the Paper Duties Repeal Bill, and condemned the course pursued by a portion of the press with reference to that bill. On Tuesday afternoon Mr. Bright addressed an adjourned meeting of the Council of the Lancashire Reformers' Union in the Free-trade Hall, Manchester.

† This wreck was entitled "A Short Account of the Ancient History, Present Government, and Laws of the Republic of Geneva." It was dedicated to Voltaire, and was compiled by Mr. Keate during his residence at Geneva.

He was born about 1729 or 1730, and received his education at Kingston School. SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

THE present Session commenced with a promise of fruit which, from every appearance, will result in a great degree in that dust and ashes which the poet has inclosed in some of the most golden danglers from the most beautiful trees in the most lovely-seeming garden. There has been a growing unreality in all the proceedings which bids fair to keep this Parliamentary year within that category of keeping the promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope which has characterised so many in the past history of legislation. It is true, Mr. Gladstone has, by force of an energy which only now shows symptoms of flagging, driven most of his Budget (only maimed in its passage by the loss of the repeal of the paper duty) through the narrow straits and shoals that have ever and anon sprung up in unexpected places, and at unlooked-for moments, from time to time; and one fancied that he gave vent to a superb groan of relief when, without a word of interposition from the members for Marylebone and the Tower Hamlets, who had sat all night in grim, twinlike attitudes, the Refreshment Houses and Wine Licenses Bill passed its last stages at an advanced hour in the morning. Probably, now that a bill, the title of which must have puzzled outsiders—to wit, Sir John Barnard's Act Repeal Bill—has been rescued in its second reading from the tenacious grasp and slipped away from the sarcastic moralities of the member for Norfolk, the Chancellor of the Exchequer may catch some of that Parliamentary repose of which his worn expression of countenance seems to indicate his want, and his desire for which he appeared to evince by sitting on the last evening on which the House met before the holidays in a quiet place below the gangway, seeking, as it were, relief from the multifarious demands on his faculties and energies on the Treasury bench during a Session which up to this time has been as nearly as possible all Gladstone.

This unreality and hollowness, which we believe is becoming chronic, was very palpably to be traced in the playing out of that tragi-comedy—the moving of the Committee of Inquiry in reference to the naughty doings of the Lords on the Paper Duty Repeal Bill. There was something ludicrous in the manner in which Lord Palmerston, having named the Committee—the members of which, as far as could be observed, never left their seats—in five minutes afterwards brought up the report, which consisted of an extract from the minutes of the proceedings of the Lords, and by means of which the Commons were technically informed, in a mixture of queer Latin and still queerer English, that their Lordships had considered the bill, to which an amendment had been moved, which "after debate" had been carried by a large majority. It is, nevertheless, the fact that, except for this bald and trumpery proceeding, the Commons could by no possibility have been supposed to know nothing whatever of a transaction about which the whole public had been talking for several days, and which had been the subject of indignant remark by such eager sticklers for the privileges of the Lower House as Mr. Whalley and Mr. Digby Seymour on more than one occasion. The second act of the farce was scarcely less unimpressive, except, indeed, in the case of Mr. Bright's speech, the moderation of which, in language at least, scarcely covered the suppressed passion which was working within him, roused as it must have been by an act which, if it mean anything, was intended as a direct blow at himself and that which is called his party. Mr. Thomas Duncombe, who, but the shadow of himself physically, still retains all his powers as a humorist, was never more ironical than when he made a motion which would have set aside the prerogative of the Crown with regard to the prorogation of Parliament, and which would in its effect have tested the actuality of that indirect way of getting rid of a measure which is comprehended in the custom of moving that a bill be read that day six months. There was a comic twinkle in his still brilliant eye when he proposed that that period should be allowed to elapse, and thus an opportunity be given to the Lords to read the bill a second time next November. Mr. Duncombe probably never yet gave a more decided proof of that belief which, somehow, one cannot help thinking that he entertains—namely, that Parliamentary proceedings and governmental systems, and public affairs in general, are only an exaggerated joke got up for the amusement of the people, and for diverting them from too close an attention to the positive process of imposing taxation. Not among the least remarkable events of this occasion was the fact of Mr. Disraeli's absence on the Friday evening when this measure was discussed. One more proof of the assertion that everybody begins to think that all chance of real work and business of an abstract kind (of course, getting national money is a crying exception) is over was to be found in the burst of ironical laughter which greeted Lord Palmerston when he, endeavouring to persuade the House to give him some votes on account, stated that it was necessary to do so because after the holidays they would be too much occupied on other important business to go regularly into the Civil Service Estimates. There was incredulity in every countenance, except in the disciplined wooden faces of trained officials.

There was in the course of that omnium gatherum which takes place on the motion for adjournment on Fridays—and which, to the readers of Parliamentary debates, must be as puzzling as "Bradshaw's Railway Guide" is to the generally travelling public—an incident which deserves notice. During his possession of a seat in the House of Commons, whether in or out of office, no man has obtained so great a personal popularity or won a better reputation for practical administrative ability than Lord Clarence Paget. On this occasion the kind hostility of Mr. Lygon gave him an opportunity of showing that as a public man the noble Lord has preserved curiously intact that usually spongy and squeezable commodity—a conscience. Let it be known as widely as possible that a gentleman (we prefer the term to that of nobleman) who happened to possess property in ships not only refused office connected with the Navy on that account, but who, when, in his capacity as a private member of the House, he took up the question of bad management in the building of our ships of war, first disencumbered himself of any share in profits, actual or in supposition, in the mercantile marine, careless of loss, and regarding only a high principle. When the capability he has displayed in the comparatively subordinate office he now holds is added to this, we will not say rare but still remarkable, instance of self-denial, it is not too much to say that at the least Lord Clarence Paget deserves promotion on the first opportunity to the post of First Lord of the Admiralty and a seat in the Cabinet, when he will have, besides the other gratifications attending it, the pleasure of gaining for Sir Charles Napier one of his long-cherished objects—that of having a naval officer at the head of naval affairs, although, perhaps, the realisation of his desire will not be in exactly the sense which that gallant but grumbling Admiral wished, if he did not expect.

The last scene of the legislative drama before the Whitsuntide recess was nearly as characteristic in the sense of proving the actuality of the influences and impulses by which the House of Commons is guided, as any that have been above signified. To hear the impassioned prate about the horrors and guilt of bribery and corruption which from time to time goes on in that assembly, one would think that there was not a man among them who did not believe that he was pure from any participation, even in the most indirect manner, in the tempting of wretched voters, whose poverty and not their will in many cases, and in others an idea that a vote is a chattel which an Englishman has a free right to dispose of to the best advantage, prompts to the acceptance of donations from those Men in the Moon who act parts like that of Zamiel in "Der Freischütz," and are always hovering with outstretched arms in the dim distance over every election. But on this occasion the mask was to a great extent thrown off, for we had a crowd of suppliants bending before the stern presence of the Attorney-General, and imploring mercy for offenders whom, in vindication of the oft expressed opinion of the House, he had seized and brought within his powerful grasp. There is but one word of explanation, and that is, that at this time it was not alone the miserable John Smith whom the vengeful myrmidons of the law had caught in the act of pocketing thirty shillings for which he had basely sold his vote, but the net had closed on two wealthy candidates for the honour of a seat in Parliament. Oh, Sir Richard Bethell, what a sad proof of your lack of discrimination!

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE ARMY ESTIMATES.

On the motion for going into Committee of Supply on the Army Estimates a great variety of questions were put to the Government.

Major EDWARDS asked the Secretary for War a question respecting the omission from the Estimates of the usual vote for the annual training of the yeomanry cavalry.

Sir JOHN TRELAWNY called attention to the effect of selection of Lieutenant-Colonels of regiments upon the relative position of the Guards and the Line in cases of exchange, and asked several questions relating thereto.

General PEEL urged upon the Government the necessity of maintaining the militia in a state of the most complete efficiency in the existing circumstances of the country, and congratulated the Government and the country upon the success of the volunteer movement, which had been the means of raising a force which he described as a magnificent army. He, however, expressed an earnest hope that it would not be allowed to supersede the old constitutional reserve of the kingdom.

Mr. J. LOCKE called attention to the claims of the artificers of the Land Transport Corps organised during the Crimean war, and charged the Government with the non-fulfilment of the conditions upon which their services had been enlisted.

Mr. DEEDES, whilst giving his approval to the volunteer movement, said there was an impression abroad that the Government were hostile to the training of the yeomanry cavalry corps in consequence of the success of that movement.

Sir DE LACY EVANS brought under the notice of the House the recent appointment of General the Hon. C. Grey to the colonelcy of the 3rd Buffs, and in doing so observed that he was actuated by no wish to disparage or to undervalue the services of that gentleman. On the contrary, he had no doubt that he had rendered very important services as private secretary to his Royal Highness the Prince Consort. His only regret was that there had not been military services rendered; that the appointment had been made in violation of the rules laid down by the late Lord Raglan—namely, that distinguished services in the field gave the first claim, services in the colonies the next, and services chiefly at home the last. General the Hon. C. Grey had the colonelcy of a regiment conferred upon him although there were not less than fourteen distinguished general officers, his seniors, who had filled important commands in the Crimea and elsewhere, and whose claims had been altogether ignored in his favour. He believed the appointment had created an amount of dissatisfaction in the Army that had not been exceeded by any other which had been made during recent years.

Mr. ADDERLEY called attention to the report of the Committee on the Military Defences of the Colonies, with the view of urging the justice and propriety of requiring the colonies to bear the cost of their own internal defences.

Lord R. CECIL insisted upon the right of the colonies to receive the protection of the mother country, and contended that if we threw their defences upon the colonists themselves we should incur the danger of weakening our power, and of weaning them from their allegiance to this country.

Mr. C. FORTESCUE, on behalf of the Colonial Office, said that the chief motive for keeping up an effective force in some of the colonies was not the apprehension of a war with any of the great Powers of Europe, but to prevent the risk of hostilities breaking out with formidable native tribes.

General UPTON asked if it was the intention of Government to recommend to her Majesty a revision of the warrant dated the 1st of July, 1848, with a view to its improvement, and especially to increase the rates of pension to non-commissioned officers and soldiers discharged from the service in a helpless condition?

Mr. WILLIAMS inveighed against the enormous expenses incurred by this country, not only for our own defences, but also for the military defences of our colonies.

Colonel KNOX asked what course the Government intended to take in regard to the purchase system in the Army? The Minister of War seemed to think that the purchase system should stop at the rank of Major, and that from thence the principle of selection should be adopted. Any such system of selection would, in his opinion, amount to the grossest jobbery.

Sir L. PALK wished to receive some information respecting the defences of the country.

Mr. S. HERBERT replied briefly to the numerous questions put to him. Although the Government did not propose to call out the Yeomanry Cavalry for training this year, they nevertheless considered it a most valuable force. The right hon. gentleman also spoke in the highest terms of the Militia force and the Volunteer movement. In reference to the appointment of the Hon. C. Grey to the colonelcy of the 3rd Buffs, Mr. S. Herbert defended it on the ground of the valuable services rendered by that officer whilst in command of the 71st Regiment for a period of nine years in Canada. That gallant officer served also in Portugal.

Mr. DISRAELI also spoke in favour of the appointment of General the Hon. C. Grey.

The House then went into Committee of Supply, and a supplemental vote was taken of 1907 officers and men for the Army; also a vote of £3,236,701 for payment allowances of land forces at home and abroad.

H. W. Eve, Esq., B.A., Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge, has been appointed one of the Assistant Masters of Wellington College. An annual nomination to Addiscombe has been given to the college by Sir James Weir Hogg, and two additional nominations for next year.

The Supreme Government in India has published a notification, based on instructions from the Secretary of State for India, from which it appears that no clergyman is to be appointed an inspector of schools; and that no one who is or has recently been engaged as a missionary is eligible for any appointment in the educational department.

Last week 11,881 persons visited the South Kensington Museum. On Monday, Tuesday, and Saturday (free days) there were 3509; on Monday and Tuesday (free evenings), 4006; on the three students' days (admission to the public 6d.), 1720; one students' evening (Wednesday), 146; at the Society of Arts conversazione, on Saturday evening, 2500.

THE "GREAT EASTERN."—The exertions of the Great Ship Company directors and their subordinates have been so unremitting that there is now no doubt about the readiness of their vessel to start next Saturday, June 9.

A beautiful collection of modern English pictures and drawings, the property of Mr. Henry Bradley, of Leamington, and other highly-important works, were disposed of on Saturday last by Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods, at their rooms in King-street, St. James's-square. The day's sale amounted to £6900.

SOCIETY FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF THE FINE ARTS.—The fourth conversazione of the season took place on Friday evening in the magnificent picture gallery at Bridgewater House, the residence of the president of the society, the Earl of Ellesmere. The whole suite of apartments was filled by an elegant and fashionable company, about 800 in number. The Earl of Ellesmere presided, and the proceedings were opened by the reading of a paper by Mr. H. Ottley on the "Italian and Dutch Schools," during which he occasionally illustrated his subject by directing attention to some of the principal chefs-dœuvre of the gallery. A concert followed, the performance of which gave great satisfaction.

THE RECENT STORM.—A strong gale set in last Sunday, and blew through the night and on the following day, with great violence. Chimneys and trees were blown down in London, and great confusion and some damage took place with the shipping in the river. At Scarborough, a hairdresser, named Parkinson, while at breakfast felt the house rocking, and rushed up to get his children, who were still in bed. A stack of chimneys fell as he was going, and killed him on the spot. His wife and children were extricated unhurt. Windows were blown out at the same place. At sea there were many casualties. A schooner laden with coal went down off Shoeburyness, but her crew escaped. A despatch from Yarmouth, dated Monday, says:—"Eight vessels went down to-day, and forty to fifty lives were lost. As the vessels foundered with all hands, their names are unknown." Snow fell in several parts of the country. At Beeston observatory, on Monday, the wind blew at a pressure of 12lb. on the square inch; at Clifton (Bristol) it reached 16lb. The Æolus, of North Shields, was wrecked on Monday, off Winterton, Norfolk; five men perished. The master and cook only were saved. At Liverpool, a great number of vessels slipped from their moorings in the river, and came into collision with each other or drifted up against the piers or landing-stages, to their great injury. At York, fourteen fine elms—some of great size—which adorned the public promenade by the Ouse, were uprooted. At Shields two vessels were wrecked. The gale also spread over the country, for it was felt at Wakefield, Bradford, and other places; and the Whitsuntide festivities were considerably marred in consequence of the unpleasant weather. The damage to fruit-trees is everywhere described as most lamentable, after the splendid promise of productiveness which they before presented. The latest news from various parts of the coast respecting the storm of Monday is of a very distressing character; indeed, it would appear that the storm almost equalled in severity the fearful one which occasioned such a terrible loss of noble ships and precious lives towards the close of last year. Information has reached London of the loss of upwards of one hundred vessels, and in a very large number of cases the ill-fated crews also perished. The greatest mischief was done upon the eastern and north-eastern line of coast. The fishermen on the coast have been severe sufferers by the storm; and it is estimated that those living at Filey Bay alone have sustained a loss amounting to upwards of ten thousand pounds. We regret to find that the calamities occasioned by the storm have extended to the shores of the Continent. A Dutch steamer, which had left Rotterdam on an excursion trip, foundered with all on board, numbering eighty souls; and several other serious casualties are reported from that quarter.

FINE ARTS.

THE SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.

SOME additions have lately been made to the multifarious art collections of the South Kensington Museum which call for a brief notice.

The English gallery of paintings has been enriched by the addition of fifty, in water colours, presented by Mrs. Ellison, of Sudbroke Park, Lincolnshire, in accordance with the wishes of her late husband—intended by him to form the commencement of a National Gallery of Water-colour Painting. The works in question appear to have been purchased from time to time out of the exhibitions during the last twenty or thirty years, and some as recently as within the last season or two. They include interesting specimens of well-known names:—J. Varley, T. Martin, Copley Fielding, Cattermole, C. Stanfield, Byrne, Dewint, T. Sydney Cooper, W. Hunt, L. Haghe, &c. Occupying a whole side of one of the apartments in the museum, they will easily be distinguished from the general collection.

Another very important addition is the marble singing gallery removed from the Church of Santa Maria Novella at Florence, and the story of which is not a little remarkable. It appears that a little more than a year ago, before the revolution there, an English gentleman connected with the Government Fine-Art Department entered the fine old Church of Santa Maria and found the floor littered with fragments of marble, being parts of the beautiful singing gallery, the work of Baccio d'Agnolo, in A.D. 1500, which the monks were about to sell for little more than the value of old marble to a dealer of Florence, who himself was about to transfer it to a builder in France, for the purpose of being applied to some villa in course of erection in the neighbourhood of Paris. Mr. J. C. Robinson, the gentleman in question, saw his opportunity and the importance of the prize, which by a prompt negotiation he secured for £350, and transferred it to England, where his purchase was accepted by Government for the national collection. On the expulsion of the Hapsburgs and the establishment of a popular Government at Florence, the conduct of the monks in their works of "restoration" was brought under severe notice of the authorities, and a public prosecution has been ordered of those who had a share in the alienation of the noble work in question. For our own part, we must confess that we have some misgivings upon the merits of the transaction upon the score of public morality; but, having so stated, we will not discuss the question here. We have now only to speak of the famous singing gallery, however obtained, as a work of art. This work is of the very best period of Italian art, and is remarkable alike for the simplicity and chasteness of its form and the masterly skill and taste displayed in the ornamentation. The sculptures on the face are in three panels. In the centre is a cross surrounded by a trophy of fruits, with birds, exquisitely carved, among the branches. The left-hand panel contains a group of flowers, conventionally treated, surrounded by various fruits; and the right-hand panel an escutcheon, on which is sculptured a spread eagle, crowned with fleur de lis, and standing on the back of a dragon. At the sides, on one end, is a scroll, with the word "Libertas" under a shield, carrying three fleur de lis; and at the other a group of three lilies, the emblem of the Florentine Republic, freely carved after nature. The details throughout are of the highest order of art and in the purest taste, and deserve attentive study as models of artistic decoration.

EXHIBITION OF ROSS'S MINIATURES AND DRAWINGS.

An extremely rich and interesting collection of miniatures, drawings, and pictures by the late Sir Wm. C. Ross, has been opened in the great room of the Society of Arts in the Adelphi. The collection consists of upwards of two hundred works, about forty of which have been contributed for the occasion by her Majesty, and about seventy by the executors, by whom they will be sent for sale at Messrs. Christie and Manson's rooms at the close of the exhibition. The Society of Arts have a peculiar claim to interest themselves in the fame of this artist, having been the first to recognise and reward his talent with their prizes when he was quite a boy; and the performances for which these rewards were given are now, after the lapse of something like half a century, displayed in the very room where he received them. Another curious specimen, also, is his first miniature—one of the Duke of Portland, a grave man in spectacles, with a star on his breast, for painting which the youthful artist received the sum of ten shillings. His next commission, we believe, was for the portrait of a drunken sailor, for which he received three half-crowns.

The exhibition will remain open for a fortnight or so longer, and is well worth a visit.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

Major-General Felix: The will of Orlando Felix, Esq., formerly of Madras, Lieutenant-Colonel Unattached, and late of the Villa Colombier Montbriliant, in Geneva, a Major-General in her Majesty's Army, was proved in London, on the 16th of May, by John James Johnson, Esq., of Chester-square, Pimlico, and Charles John Martyn, Esq., of Craig's-court, Westminster, two of the executors—a power being reserved to John Binney Key, Esq., of Madras. The personalty in England was sworn under £12,000. To his niece, Julia Colston, who, he states, is sufficiently provided for, he leaves his books, plate, and other valuables, and a legacy of £1000. To Mr. Frederick Lockyer, of the Admiralty, £1000. To his sisters, Mrs. Henrietta Chatterton, widow of N. W. Chatterton, of Cork, and Mrs. Jessie Brown, widow of Colonel James Brown, 43rd Regiment, he has left specific bequests of railway shares and shares in the Bank of Bombay, and also appointed them residuary legatees. The will bears date the 27th of July, 1848, and was attested by General Sir George Brown, and Joseph Millings, jun., East Court.

C. B. Lawton, Esq.: The will of Charles Bourn Lawton, Esq., of Lawton Hall, Cheshire, was proved at Chester by the executors, the Archdeacon of Chester and Randle Wilbraham, Esq., of Bode-heath. The will was signed in May, 1858. Mr. Lawton died February 7, 1860, in his ninetieth year. After giving directions for the payment of debts and funeral expenses, he leaves to his wife, in addition to her jointure, for her own use absolutely, such of his household goods, plate, jewellery, prints, pictures (not being heirlooms), glass, china, linen, wines, books, and other effects, as she shall select; together with his carriages and horses, cows and farming stock, and all moneys. To his late brother's widow and son, and to his butler, housekeeper, and gardener, he has left legacies. The entailed estate devolves on his nephew, John Lawton, Esq., of Presbury-hall.

Mr. Albert Smith, by his will, dated the 3rd of March last, leaves his house and premises, North End Lodge, Fulham, with all the furniture, books, plate, and other effects, to his widow. He then gives several pecuniary legacies to relations and friends; and, after making provision for his widow, mother, and sisters, he leaves the residue to his brother Arthur, whom, together with his friend Mr. Arthur Pratt-Barlow, he appoints executor and trustee. His effects will probably be sworn under £25,000.

IMPROVED MODE OF POSTING LETTERS, &c.—In order to prevent as much as possible the breakage of seals, and the rubbing off labels from letters when posted at St. Martin's-le-Grand, the whole of the openings to the letter-boxes have been fitted with small hoppers, attached to which is an inclosed sliding-board, leading directly to the "facing-table," so that the "broom" formerly used for sweeping the mass of letters from time to time out of the boxes is no longer necessary.

AID TO GARIBALDI.—The real character of the American vessel loaded with rifles, whose mysterious appearance in Cork Harbour some months ago attracted no little attention, has now become known. She was freighted by the Garibaldi committee, at New York, during the Italian war, and her cargo was intended for the gallant General's use; but the unexpected termination of the war prevented its appropriation for that purpose. The vessel has now left Cork, and it is not unlikely that Italy may again be her destination.

The officers now serving in and those who have served in the 17th Lancers dined together on Wednesday evening at the Clarendon Hotel, Bond-street, his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge presiding.

Yesterday se'nnight the officers of the 3rd Manchester Regiment of Rifle Volunteers entertained their newly-appointed Lieutenant-Colonel, the Hon. Algernon Egerton, M.P. for South Lancashire, at dinner at the Palatine Hotel.

A supplementary estimate has been issued stating that a vote is required of £2500 towards dredging and extending the great harbour at Malta. There will still remain a further sum of £101,126 to be voted in future years for the completion of the work.

A service of plate is to be presented in July to Sir Morton Peto, M.P., by gentlemen connected with the East Suffolk Railway and the district through which the line passes. The presentation will be made at the Royal Hotel, Lowestoft, and the Earl of Stradbroke, Lord Lieutenant of Suffolk, will preside on the occasion.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE defeat of so many favourites for the Oaks gave the book-makers a good turn, and a capital settling has been the result. One gentlemen has "gone" for a fair amount, and the reporters, by an ingenious quotation, have taken care to indicate his identity. The Scott party are dissatisfied with the use that was made of their horse by French in the last quarter of a mile, but they hardly venture to assert that even a Frank Butler could have nursed him home first. Mr. Nichol's luck has been very remarkable, considering that he has seldom more than one or two horses in training. Since the spring of 1849 he has won the Two Thousand and St. Leger twice, and run second for the St. Leger and the Derby. Both his Wizard and Warlock were bred by the Earl of Durham. America has had her laugh against England for being so very confident of her Tom Sayers, and England can now retort by pointing to Umpire. What with Thormanby, Umpire, St. Albans, Buccaneer, Horror, Wizard, and the mysterious outsider which has turned up six years running on Doncaster Moor, there seem to be hopes of a pretty good St. Leger. The Oaks was spoiled by Seclusion's wretched start, and of the first three only Contadina has a St. Leger nomination. The winner, Butterfly, was capitally ridden by little J. Snowden in the Towneley colours, and looks quite a mare to race and stay, though perhaps the latter is rather her forte. Mr. Eastwood's luck has been well deserved.

Next week will be devoted to the Ascot revel. Her Majesty's Vase, the Queen's Stand Plate, the Ascot Stakes, the Four-Year-Old Triennial, and the Two-Year-Old Biennial are the principal events of Tuesday. Walloon, Sister to St. Albans, Poolthorne, Sister to Mincepie, and Brother to Sunbeam are in the latter; and The Wizard, seeing that St. Albans is hors de combat for the present, has no opponent of importance in the Ascot Derby. The Royal Hunt Cup, the Three-Year-Old Triennial, in which High Treason, Brother to Rainbow, and The Wizard, will probably meet; the Three-Year-Old Biennial, in which Thormanby in engaged; and the Coronation Stakes, which includes Seclusion and Contadina, will be leading features of Wednesday.

The Gold Cup Day has been strengthened by the Royal Stand Plate, and the Cup entry numbers the high-priced Promised Land, Butterfly, Seclusion, Rupee, Thormanby, Gamester, Mainstone, and Newcastle among its twenty; so that Derby, Oaks, St. Leger, Doncaster Cup, and Two Thousand, all have representatives. Among the New Stakes entries are Folkestone (5lb. extra), and a great many "dark" ones. Friday has a pretty good bill of fare for such as care for four days. The Spencer yearlings, six in number, come up for sale at Tattersall's on Monday; and we do not hear any further talk of the Grimston sale going off. We learn from The Sporting Magazine that the late Lord John Scott has left Cannobie to his faithful stud-groom, Hemming. No legacy could have been better deserved, as it was entirely on his unaided judgment that his Lordship hired Pantaloon and bought Phryne.

A seventh match between the two elevens has just given the odd game to All England. The matches of 1857 will always be remembered for the brilliant batting of George Parr. In 1858 Carpenter and Hearne came out as "colts," and made most brilliant scores; and in 1859 they got together again, and were not separated till they had achieved 149 runs. Atkinson, also, made his début as a bowler in last year, and only 46 runs were made from his 264 balls, while, out of 46 maiden overs, 13 followed in succession. The appearance of "the Cambridge colt" Tarrant, as a bowler for the All England, was the feature of 1860; but, brilliant as was his luck in the first innings, it quite deserted him in the second, and the other Cambridge man, Hayward, took his place with very telling effect. He is a slight lad of twenty-two, a capital fielder, but no batter, and his balls are so difficult to hit away that they required a totally new arrangement of the fielders. Jackson's bowling on the first day was not so good as usual, and, on the part of the United, Slinn and Caffyn were remarkably effective. The palm for the fielding must, perhaps, be awarded to the United, and that for the batting to All England. In the second innings of the latter George Parr knocked one of Caffyn's balls for 6 clean into the tavern garden, and was finally caught for 55. H. Stephenson's 22 and Jackson's 29 were also made in good style, and the United had 114 to get when they began their second innings. Grundy stuck in for a long time, and saw six wickets fall, and was then beautifully caught by Jackson; and Griffiths made a very dashing innings of 26. The hopes of the United fell sadly when Carpenter was run out for one, and, as Caffyn and Lillywhite were not in the vein to retrieve the day, a most beautifully-contested match became the All England's by 21 runs. The return one will be played at the Oval on the 19th, 20th, and 21st of July. On Monday the M. C. C. and Ground meet the County of Sussex at Lord's, the Gentlemen of the Surrey Club play the Gentlemen of Kent, and the All England go to Bath against twenty-two of the Lansdowne Club.

The principal yachting fixtures are the Ranelagh Yacht Club on Tuesday; the Norfolk and Suffolk Yacht Club, at Cantley, on Thursday; and the Clyde and Birkenhead Yacht Clubs on Saturday.

MANCHESTER RACES.—WEDNESDAY.

Phillip's Handicap.—Lady Grosvenor, 1. Montrose, 2.
Sapling Stakes.—Doe Fool, 1. Amain, 2.
Union Cup.—Rising Sun, 1. Ripon, 2.
Produce Stakes.—Restes, 1. Bab at the Bowster, 2.
Trafford Handicap.—Purmeses, 1. Griffin, 2.

THURSDAY.

Two-Year-Old Stakes.—Wynnstay, 1. Amain, 2.
City Handicap.—Lady Grosvenor, 1. Griffin, 2.
Tradesman's Cup.—Ben Webster, 1. Rameses, 2.

LATEST BETTING AT TATTERSALL'S.—THURSDAY EVENING.

ASCOT CUP.—6 to 4 on Thormanby; 6 to 1 agst Promised Land (t); 10 to 1 agst Gamester.
ST. LEGER.—3 to 1 agst Thormanby (t)
ASCOT STAKES.—8 to 1 agst Flitch (off.); 8 to 1 agst Ancient Briton (off.); 12 to 1 agst Duneany (off.).

YACHTING.—The first regatta this season of the Thames Yacht Club took place on Wednesday. There was a large and fashionable company, and the race was sustained with great spirit. The racing was with the second, third, and fourth class boats, and the race finished as follows:—

	H.	M.	S.
Quiver (4th class, Capt. Chamberlayne's)	6	4	15
Kitten (3rd class, Mr. Leach's)	6	5	40
Southampton Folly (4th class, Mr. Blanchard's)	6	19	15
Violet (4th class, Lord De Ros')	6	21	30

and of the second class:—

	H.	M.	S.
Phantom (Mr. Lane's)	7	10	20
Thought (Mr. Marshall's)	7	11	27

By the above result the Quiver took the prize of the third class, and the Kitten that of the fourth; the second prize for the second class was withheld, there not being four in the race.

CRICKET.—The great match between the United and the All England Elevens commenced at Lord's Ground on Monday in the presence of four thousand spectators, and was brought to a close on Wednesday, the All England Eleven winning by twenty-two runs. The following is the score:—All England, first innings, 71; second ditto, 131. United, first innings, 89; second ditto, 92.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

COMPARED with several previous weeks, rather more business has been transacted in Home Securities since we last wrote; nevertheless, the increased purchases of Stock, almost wholly on account of the public, have had very little influence upon prices. They have, however, been fairly supported.

The supply of capital in the Discount Market has further increased, but the demand for accommodation has continued steady, at quotations nearly on a par with Bank rates. In Lombard-street first-class short bills have been done at 3¾ to 3⅞; three months', 3⅞; four months', 4 to 4¼; and six months', 4½ to 5 per cent.

The imports of the precious metals have not exceeded £200,000, of which very few parcels have been sent into the Bank of England, notwithstanding that nearly the whole of the Continental exchanges are still favourable to this country. An export of £30,000 has been made to the Peninsula; but only about £200,000 in silver will be forwarded to India and China by the steamer of the 4th. There is, consequently, very little doing in the silver market, at 5s. 1⅝d. for bar qualities, and 5s. 2¼d. per ounce for Mexican dollars. The next packet from the West Indies is expected to bring a large quantity of the latter.

We have observed much less activity in the market for Indian Stocks and Securities, the prices of which have not been supported. The only exception is in the Bonds, which have improved to 7s. and 3s. discount.

The committee of the Stock Exchange have continued their investigations into the Pullinger frauds. Explanations have been offered by a certain house in reference to their dealings with Pullinger; but they do not appear to be of a satisfactory character.

Throughout the Continent money is still very low in price. In Paris it may be had at 3, at Amsterdam and Brussels the same quotation prevails, whilst at Hamburg it is freely offered at 1¾, and at Frankfort as low as 1 per cent.

The shares in the newly-formed companies have been dealt in only to a moderate extent. Ocean Marine Insurance have realised 2 to 2¼ prem.; Thames and Mersey Marine, 1⅝ to 1⅞ prem.; Universal Marine, ⅛ to ⅜ dis.; and London and South African Bank, ½ to ¼ discount.

On Monday scarcely any change took place in the value of either Home or Indian Stocks:—Bank Stock left off at 228; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 93½ ⅝; Consols, 95¼ ⅜; Long Annuities, 1885, 17¼; India Five per Cents, 106⅞ ⅝; Ditto, Five per Cent Rupee Paper, 97¾, Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 103¼; Ditto, Debentures, 96⅝; Ditto, Bonds, 5s. to 4s. discount; Exchequer Bills, 10s. premium. Prices were, in some instances, a shade easier on Tuesday. The market, however, was by no means heavy:—Bank Stock sold at 228½; India Stock, 221 222 and 220; Ditto New, 106⅞ ⅝; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cent Enfaced Paper, 103. The Reduced and New Three per Cents marked 93½ ⅝; Consols, for Money, 95⅛ ¼; Ditto, for Time, 95¼ ⅜; Long Annuities, 1885, 17¼; India Debentures, 1858, 96⅝; Ditto, Bonds, 3s. dis.; Exchequer Bills, 7s. to 10s. prem. Quotations generally were firm on the following day:—Bank Stock closed at 229; Reduced Three per Cents, 93½ ⅝; Consols, 93⅜ ½; New Three per Cents, 95⅝ ½; India Stock, 223; Ditto New, 106⅝; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cent Paper, 103; Ditto, Debentures, 1858, 96⅝; Ditto, Bonds, 7s. to 3s. dis.; and Exchequer Bills, 7s. to 10s. prem. On Thursday the market was flat, at reduced quotations:—Consols, for Money, were 94⅞ ⅝; for the Account, 99½ 05; the Reduced and New Threes sold at 93⅜ ⅝; and Exchequer Bills, 7s. to 16s. prem.; Bank Stock was 227½ to 228; India Stock, 221½ to 224; Ditto, New Loan, 106¾ ⅞.

The directors of the Trust and Loan Company of Upper Canada have declared a dividend at the rate of 8½ per cent per annum.

Although the business doing in nearly all Foreign Securities has not been to say extensive, prices, generally, have ruled firm. The leading quotations for the week are as follows:—Brazilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 1858, 91; Mexican Three per Cents, 21¾; Portuguese Three per Cents, 45; Russian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 97; Sardinian Five per Cents, 85⅜; Spanish Three per Cents, 48; Ditto, New Deferred, 37⅞; Turkish Six per Cents, 74⅞; Ditto, New, 58¼; Venezuela Three per Cents, 25⅞; Belgian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 95¾; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 66¼; Dutch Four per Cents, 101¼.

No material change has taken place in the value of Joint-Stock Bank Shares compared with last week, with the exception of those of the Union Bank of London, which, in consequence of the further investigations concerning the late frauds by the committee of the Stock Exchange, have receded from 25½—our quotation of last week—to 24¾. The amount of business transacted is moderate, as follows:—Australasia, 66½; Bank of London, 52; British North American, 54; City, 76; English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered, 16¾; London Chartered of Australia, 23½; London and County, 35½; London Joint-stock, 33; London and Westminster, 62; National Provincial of England, 94½ ex div.; Oriental, 43; Ottoman, 17⅜; Union of Australia, 44¼.

Colonial Government Securities have met an inactive market; yet prices, in most instances, have been maintained. New Brunswick Six per Cents have realised 108; New South Wales Five per Cents, 1838 and upwards, 100⅛; Victoria Six per Cents, January and July, 106¾; Ditto, April and October, 106⅞.

In Miscellaneous Securities but few transactions are reported. Canada Land shares have sold at 120; Copper Mines of England Seven-and-a-Half per Cent Preference, 25⅛; Crystal Palace, 32½; Ditto, Preference, 99½; Electric Telegraph, 106¾; Madras Irrigation and Canal, 4½; London General Omnibus, 1¾; National Discount, 4¼; North British Australasian, ⅞; Peel River Land and Mineral, 47; Peninsular and Oriental Steam, 79; Red Sea and India Telegraph, 17½; Rhymney Iron, 20¼; Berlin Waterworks, 4⅝; Chelsea Ditto, New Guaranteed, 1862, 23¾; Birmingham Canal, 94; Grand Junction, 59; Kennet and Avon, 6⅜; Leeds and Liverpool, 500; Regent's, 21; London Docks, 67.

Owing, in some measure, to the preparations for the fortnightly settlement—which shows a diminished amount of floating speculation—the Railway Share Market has been extremely quiet, but no change of importance has taken place in the quotations. The total "calls" for the present month amount to £2,490,095. The traffic returns are still large—the increase in the London and North-Western, compared with the corresponding week in 1859, being £13,255; the Great Western, £7258; and the London and South-Western, £7184. Annexed are Thursday's official closing quotations:—

ORDINARY SHARES AND STOCKS.—Caledonian, 90¾; Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee, 30; Great Northern, 116; Ditto, A Stock, 116; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 111¼; Great Western, 69¼; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 104⅞; London and Blackwall, 70½; London, Chatham, and Dover, 11¼; London and North-Western, 101; Ditto, Eighths, 9¾; London and South-Western, 93½; Midland, 116⅞; North British, 61⅞; North-Eastern—Berwick, 96½; Ditto, Leeds, 52½; Ditto, York, 80¾; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, 45¼; South Eastern, 85¼.

LINE LEASED AT A FIXED RENTAL.—Hull and Selby, 111.

PREFERENCE SHARES.—Eastern Counties, Five per Cent, No. 2, 110¼; Great Northern, Four-and-a-Half per Cent, 104½; Great Western, Four-and-a-Half per Cent, 100⅜; Newport, Avergavenny, and Hereford, Six per Cent, 11⅞; North Eastern, G. N. E., Four per Cent, 96; Ditto, York, H. and S. Purchase, 10; Stockton and Darlington, C., Six per Cent, 32½.

BRITISH POSSESSIONS.—Bombay, Baroda, and Central India, 96¾; Cape Town and Dock, 1½; East Indian, 102; Ditto F Shares Extension, 15; Ditto Five per Cent Debentures, 101; Grand Trunk of Canada, 32¼; Ditto Six per Cent Preference, 92¼; Ditto, Second Preference, 78¾; Ditto, Debenture, 63½; Ditto Seven per Cents, 1867, 67; Great Indian Peninsula, 100; Great Western of Canada, 12⅜; Ditto Five-and-a-Half per Cent Bonds, payable 1878, 93½; Indus Steam Flotilla, 94.

FOREIGN.—Bahia and San Francisco, 6½; Dutch-Rhenish, 9¼; Great Luxembourg, 6⅝.

THE MARKETS.

CORN-EXCHANGE, May 28.—Although only a limited supply of English wheat was on offer in to-day's market, the demand for all kinds ruled very inactive, at last week's quotations. In foreign wheat—the show of which was on the increase—the transactions were trifling, at previous currencies. Floating cargoes were dull, but not cheaper. Barley was in good supply, and heavy request, at 1s. to 2s. per quarter less money. No change took place in the value of malt. Oats moved off heavily, at 6d. to 1s. per quarter decline. Beans and peas supported previous rates, but the demand for them was by no means active. No change took place in the price of flour, but the transactions were much restricted.

May 30.—For nearly all kinds of produce the demand was inactive to-day. Compared with Monday, however, no change took place in the quotations.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 44s. to 54s.; ditto, white, 45s. to 58s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 43s. to 53s.; rye, 30s. to 31s.; grinding barley, 27s. to 29s.; distilling ditto, 28s to 30s; malting ditto, 30s. to 46s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt 49s. to 70s.; brown ditto, 48s. to 49s.; Kingston and Ware, 64s. to 70s.; Chevalier, 70s. to 72s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 22s. to 27s.; potato ditto, 27s. to 30s.; Youghal and Cork, black, 21s. to 26s.; ditto, white, 32s. to 39s.; tick beans, 37s. to 39s.; grey peas, 36s. to 38s.; maple, 38s. to 41s.; white, 22s. to 29s.; boilers, 30s. to 41s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 46s. to 50s.; town households, 44s. to —s.; country marks, 36s. to 38s. per 280lb. American flour, 25s. to 30s. per barrel; French ditto, 33s. to 41s. per sack.

Seeds.—We have no change to notice in the value of any kind of seeds. Generally speaking, the trade is heavy.

Linseed, English, crushing, 49s. to 52s.; Calcutta, 49s. to 51s.; hempseed, 40s. to 42s. per quarter; coriander, 15s. to 16s. per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 9s. to 14s.; ditto, white, 11s. to 14s.; tares, 7s. to 7s. 6d. per bushel. English rapeseed, 6[illegible]s. to 6[illegible]s. per quarter. Linseed cakes, English, £9 15s. to £10 10s.; ditto foreign, £9 10s. to £11 10s.; rape cakes, £5 10s. to £6 0s. per ton; canary, 44s. to 50s. per quarter; red clover 4[illegible]s. to 54s.; white ditto, 80s. to 90s. per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 8d. to 8½d.; of household ditto, 5½d. to 7½d. per 4-lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 52s. 6d.; barley, 35s. 2d.; oats, 25s. 6d.; rye, 37s. 3d.; beans, 44s. 8d.; peas, 40s. 9d.

The Six Weeks' Averages.—Wheat, 51s. 8d.; barley, 3[illegible]s. 2d.; oats, 25s. 3d.; rye, 34s. 4d.; beans, 43s. 1d.; peas, 39s. 7d.

English Grain Sold last Week.—Wheat, 115,798; barley, 3513; oats, 5951; rye, 57; beans, 2124; peas, 316 quarters.

Tea.—The public sales held this week have gone off slowly, and, in some instances, prices have had a drooping tendency. The shipments from China to the latest dates were 21,000,000lb in excess of last year.

Sugar.—Considerable inactivity has prevailed in the demand for all raw sugars, and prices have given way 6d per cwt. West India has realised 32s. to 45s.; native Madras, 33s. to 35s.; Porto Rico, 38s. to 45s. 6d. per cwt. Refined goods move off slowly, at barely last week's currency. Crushed sugars support previous rates.

Coffee.—Owing to the large quantities on offer the trade has continued very inactive, on rather easier terms.

Rice.—On the whole the trade is steady, at previous quotations. A few parcels of very fine Bengal have sold at from 14s. to 14s. 6d. per cwt.

Provisions.—We have very little change to notice in the general quotations, and the demand is chiefly confined to moderate quantities. Cork butter is selling at from 70s. to 100s.; Limerick, 100s. to 104s.; Carlow, 102s. to 108s. Sizeable bacon, 70s. to 72s.; oversized, 64s. to 68s. Bladdered lard, 66s. to 78s.; and kegs, 58s. to 63s. per cwt.

Tallow.—The market is steady as to price, but the business doing in it is limited. P.Y.C., on the spot, is selling at from 52s. to 52s. 6d.; and for delivery during the last three months, 51s. 9d. to 52s. per cwt.

Oils.—Linseed oil is quoted at 28s. 3d. per cwt. on the spot. Most other oils are in moderate request, at previous quotations. Spirits of turpentine, 35s. to 35s. 6d.; rough, 9s. per cwt.

Spirits.—No change has taken place in the value of rum. Proof Leewards is selling at from 1s. 8d. to 1s. 9d.; and proof East India, 1s. 7d. to 1s. 8d. per gallon. Brandy and grain spirits are as last advised.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 0s. to £4 15s.; clover ditto, £4 0s. to £5 15s.; and straw, £1 6s. to £1 12s. per load. Trade dull.

Coals.—Best house coals, 17s. to 17s. 6d.; seconds, 15s. to 16s.; Hartley's, 14s. 9d. to 15s. 9d.; and manufacturers', 12s. to 15s. per ton.

Hops.—The plantation accounts being favourable, the demand for most kinds of hops is very inactive, at barely previous rates. The duty has been done at £180,000.

Wool.—The public sales are just closing. This week they have been well attended, and the whole of the wool offered has changed hands, at full quotations.

Potatoes.—The arrivals are good for the time of year, and the trade is inactive, at from 80s. to 140s. per ton.

Metropolitan Cattle Market.—(Thursday, May 31).—Our market to-day was very moderately supplied with beasts, and all kinds changed hands steadily, at fully Monday's currency. Sheep—the show of which was by no means extensive—moved off freely, at extreme rates; in some instances prices were 2d. per 8lb. higher. The lamb trade was firm, but no change took place in the quotations. We have to report a firm sale for calves, at full currencies. Pigs commanded quite last week's prices, and milch cows were steady. During the late gales about 2000 sheep on passage from Hamburg were thrown overboard from the various steamers. Per 8lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 3s. 10d. to 4s. 2d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 4d. to 4s. 8d.; prime large oxen, 4s. 10d. to 5s. 0d.; prime Scots, &c., 5s. 2d. to 5s. 4d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 4s. 4d. to 4s. 8d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 10d. to 5s. 4d.; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 5s. 6d. to 5s. 10d.; prime Southdown ditto, 5s. 10d. to 6s. 2d.; large coarse calves, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 6d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 2d. to 5s. 6d.; large hogs, 4s. 0d. to 4s. 6d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 8d. to 5s. 0d.; lambs, 6s. 0d. to 7s. 6d.; suckling calves, 21s. to 24s.; and quarter-old store pigs, 23s. to 30s. each. Total supply: Beasts, 856; cows, 127; sheep and lambs, 7500; calves, 250; pigs, 200. Foreign: Beasts, 230; sheep, 855; calves, 149.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—The supplies of meat are moderate, and the trade rules steady, as follows:—Beef, from 3s. 4d. to 4s. 6d.; mutton, 4s. 2d. to 5s. 4d.; lamb, 6s. to 6s. 8d.; veal, 4s. 0d. to 4s. 8d.; pork, 4s. 0d. to 5s. 0d. per 8lb by the carcase.

THE SICILIAN EXPEDITION.—GARIBALDI'S DEPARTURE.

FEW events of our time have created more wide-spread astonishment and sympathy than the long-suffering of the inhabitants of Sicily and Naples, the plague-spots of Europe, in which tyranny has been rife and powerful while the shouts for liberty and freedom have frequently been echoed far and wide throughout the disturbed Continent. The wrongs perpetrated by Bomba and his successor are of world-wide notoriety; all the Governments of Christendom have at some time or other protested against them; diplomatic relations with the Neapolitan Government have been many times interrupted on their account; and yet the obstinate Bourbons heeded not the counsel that might have saved them. Surrounded by their mercenaries, they seemed to think their throne invulnerable, because able to crush all resistance from within by brute force; so that, while "tyrants threatened, meeker victims bowed," and suffered, and died, without having enjoyed even a glimpse of the sweetest aspiration of their existence—liberty. The recent Italian campaign was professedly a war of affranchisement. Italy was to be emancipated from foreign yoke, and the nationality of the Italians to be established on a footing based upon freedom; the point of departure was the relief from Austrian tyranny, and this "idea" rallied the disconsolate Italians round that banner which has been rarely unfurled in vain. So far the cause was good and holy, and promising. But, the Italian campaign finished, it was found that only a portion of the suffering Italia had been treated for the mortal malady of oppression. Venice, Naples, Sicily, and the Papal States were still bleeding from their accumulated wrongs, now rendered still more painful by the immediate vicinity of a moderate liberty so little abused by its new possessors as to have inspired the admiration of the entire world. We do not seek to diminish the injustice of Austria during her occupation of certain portions of Italy; it was certainly more than sufficient to justify the intervention to which she has so recently succumbed; but we have no hesitation in saying that, however great that injustice may have been, it was but slight when compared to the horrors committed by the Neapolitan Government—horrors that have never been surpassed at any period of the world's existence, and which have become a crying shame and an outrage upon European civilisation. It has been affirmed by some of the French journals that an opportunity was afforded to the Neapolitans and Sicilians for making an effort to emancipate themselves during the Italian war, but the overwhelming forces of their despotic ruler rendered such an attempt at that time hopeless; and it was not till extraneous assistance could be hoped for that the Sicilians rose in insurrection. The Peace of Villafranca set at liberty a number of those brave men whose whole lives have been devoted to that holiest of causes, the emancipation of their native country; and the kingdom of Sicily and Naples—that land of sighs and dungeons—immediately asked for help from those who had already given so many proofs of their patriotism and of their love of rational liberty. Garibaldi and his "band" were appealed to in their temporary retreat, in which they might have enjoyed the repose and the honours they had so justly won; but they preferred accepting the risk of even greater dangers than those to which they had already been exposed, and, abandoning their ease, risking their lives and property, and separating, perhaps for ever in this world, from those they love, ventured forth on the perilous expedition that has aroused in Europe—nay, throughout the civilised world—a feeling of breathless agitation.

At what precise period the prayers of the Sicilians were conveyed to Garibaldi and his followers we have at present no knowledge. Looking at the completeness of the arrangements, however, the expedition must have been a considerable time in preparation, for it seems to have been got up with as much talent and foresight as courage. What we do know is, that the word of order was given to meet at the Villa Spinola on the night of the 5th and 6th of May and that early on that memorable Sunday morning the modern Crusaders sallied forth on their hazardous undertaking. What a solemn meeting, and what a sorrowful yet consoling parting, must have been witnessed in the grounds surrounding the Villa Spinola on that evening night! What a "God-speed" must have been murmured by those who, although not forming a part of the expedition, were still vitally interested in its success! When all were ready General Garibaldi led the way down to a retired spot on the shore, where a number of barques were awaiting the volunteers in the cause of Sicilian, or rather Italian, liberty. The arms were put on board the boats; salutations, quiet but hearty, were exchanged; the calm pass of the air and sea appeared to augur favourably for the safe departure of the "band." Garibaldi and his staff remained on shore till all the rest had started, the General himself being the last to leave. The wife of one of his officers (Crespi) having desired to accompany the expedition in the capacity of nurse to the sick or wounded, and persisting strongly in her wish, Garibaldi, at the last moment, acceded to her patriotic request. Her womanly appeal to the bold chief is the episode represented in our drawing. One of the boats was provided with a lantern showing a red and green light. This light was to be the guide for the steamers as soon as they made their way out of the port of Genoa to pick up their valiant freight. The two vessels received all on board safely, and, shortly after half-past three in the morning, the Piemont and the Lombardi, commanded respectively by Garibaldi and Bixio, started fairly under full steam on their mission of deliverance.

We need not recapitulate here the events relating to the voyage of the two ships to Marsala, or the details of occurrences subsequent to the disembarkation of Garibaldi and his followers, which will form the subject of future Illustrations in this Journal, accompanied by their timely description. We are glad to perceive that the European Powers seem disposed to let Garibaldi and the son of Bomba fight it out. France is patient; England, though applauding by words and money, stirs not; Spain refuses to succour the Bourbon; Italy beats the hoof and would be moving. In the meantime all goes well in Garibaldi's camp, and at the period we write the banner of liberty, the only banner that will ever lead to a really permanent triumph in Europe, waves proudly in a portion of that fine land whose inhabitants have so long "withered to each tyrant's will," and who will not fail to acquit themselves befittingly of their debt of gratitude towards that illustrious "saviour who shall set them free."

SCENE FROM THE NEW DRAMA, "IT'S AN ILL WIND THAT BLOWS NOBODY GOOD," AT THE ADELPHI THEATRE.

PRESENTATION OF A SILVER BUGLE TO THE 3RD COMPANY OF KENT VOLUNTEER RIFLES.

On the 16th ult. this company, which has long since attained its maximum strength, assembled in the grounds of the Manor House, Lee, the residence of Captain Farrall, who commands it, to receive from the ladies of Blackheath and Lee a beautiful silver bugle. Nearly the whole of this fine corps was present under arms, and a very soldier-like set of men they are—an opinion which was universally expressed, as, accompanied by an excellent band, they marched through Blackheath and Lee to their destination. The good effect of the steady drill which they have gone through for the last six months under Sergeant-Major Baker is very obvious and very gratifying.

The grounds of the Manor House, which are full of fine old trees, and are spacious and picturesque, were profusely and tastefully decorated with banners, flags, and tents; and upwards of 600 persons were present, to all of whom tickets of admission had been issued. At 7 p.m. the volunteers were drawn up on the lawn, and Mrs. W. S. Shore, with whom the subscription for the bugle originated, accompanied by a bevy of ladies and gentlemen, left the Manor House and passed down the grounds, the band playing and the assembled company following. She made a spirited speech, and at once presented the bugle to Captain Farrall, who accepted it in the name of the corps, and sincerely thanked the ladies who so generously presented them with the beautiful and useful gift, and thus fostered and encouraged the spirit of true patriotism by their presence amongst them. Three hearty ringing cheers were then given for her most gracious Majesty the Queen, followed by three equally hearty cheers for the ladies. The volunteers then fell out, and the Manor House was opened by Mrs Farrall to the assembled company, the band, which was stationed on the lawn, playing at intervals some fine pieces of music.

At about 8 p.m. this joyous and interesting spectacle was brought to a close.

"IT IS AN ILL WIND THAT BLOWS NOBODY GOOD."

We give an illustration of the last drama produced at the Adelphi for exhibiting the talents of Mr Wigan, a cobbler, and the first time to a long-lost daughter, and cannot restrain the feelings consequent on a recognition. The situation concludes an act, and is well represented by our Artist, who gives the gesture of honest Crispin with great effect. Mr. Wigan has certainly struck into a new walk in this character, and shows as free a feeling for unsophisticated nature as in other domestic possession of the stage, and we shall probably often see Mr. Wigan in the part.

PIANOFORTE, the property of a Lady leaving England. A brilliant and sweet-toned three-stringed WALNUT COTTAGE, in elegant case, 6¾ octaves, metallic plates, patent registered keyboard, and every improvement. Price 23 guineas, cost 40 guineas only a few months since. To be seen at Brompton House, 22 and 23, Queen's-buildings, Knightsbridge.

FURNITURE.—Gratis: a new and elaborately- ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, containing over 300 designs of Furniture, Iron Bedsteads, Bedding, &c., with prices and estimates for all classes of houses. Country orders carriage free.—LEWIN CRAWCOUR and CO., House Furnishers, 22 and 23, Queen's-buildings, Knightsbridge, London.—N.B. A very elegant and complete WALNUT DRAWING-ROOM SUITE to be SOLD for 33 guineas, recently cost 60 guineas; dining-room ditto, in Spanish mahogany, 28 guineas; and two handsome and complete bedroom suites, in fine mahogany and birch, with winged wardrobes and marble-top wash-stands, 25 guineas. The whole of the above are decided bargains.

TO PARTIES ABOUT TO FURNISH.—Very elegant suit of DRAWING-ROOM FURNITURE, in perfect condition, for SALE, an unusual bargain. It consists of a shaped settee, an oval-backed easy-chair with arms, a ditto without, two ecarté chairs, six stuffed-seat chairs, and four occasional chairs, also with stuffed seats, the whole with richly-carved frames of chaste design, and covered with handsome amber and white brocade. The cabinet furniture comprises a noble-shaped walnut and marqueterie cabinet, inclosed by four doors, and surmounted with ormolu; a walnut and marqueterie loo-table; a shaped oval ditto occasional-table with ormolu mountings; a pair of card tables in walnut and marqueterie; a kidney-shaped writing-table; and a lady's work-table, beautifully fitted. The suite also includes two very fine plate chimneyglasses, of large size, in handsomely-ornamented and richly-gilt frames. The whole have just been received in exchange, and will be offered at a figure so unusually low as must ensure an immediate purchaser.—To be seen at BELGRAVE HOUSE, 19, Sloane-street, S.W.

FURNITURE for a DRAWING-ROOM, fine walnut, of chaste and elegant design, in rich silk, very superior manufacture, and equal to new—a great bargain—price for the whole suite 48 guineas, nearly half the original cost, consisting of a beautifully-designed cabinet, with richly-curved back and doors and marble top; superior centre table, on handsome pillar and claws, with occasional and fancy tables to match; six solid carved cabriole chairs, and luxurious spring-stuffed settee, easy and Victoria chairs, all covered in rich silk en suite, with extra loose chintz cases; three fancy walnut occasional chairs, an inlaid whatnot, and large-size brilliant plate chimneyglass, in richly-gilt frame; also, a fine-toned 6¾ walnut cottage piano, by a good maker, 20 guineas; and a massive and complete solid Spanish mahogany dining-room suite, in morocco leather, including handsome sideboard, noble telescope-table, &c., 40 guineas. The above is an opportunity rarely to be met with, and may be seen at 22 and 23, Queen's-buildings, Knightsbridge.

The most powerful and best-suited Harmonium for a Concert or Hall.

The great superiority of ALEXANDRE'S HARMONIUMS over all others is vouched for by the following most important TESTIMONIALS:—

From Sir FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.
Tenbury, May 10th, 1860.
I have great pleasure in bearing my testimony to the superior excellence of M. ALEXANDRE'S Harmoniums.
If I were about to purchase one myself, I should certainly prefer those of this maker to all others.
FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY.

From Professor STERNDALE BENNETT, Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge.
50, Inverness-terrace, Kensington Gardens, W., April 18th, 1860.
The Harmoniums by M. ALEXANDRE, of Paris, which I recently had the pleasure to inspect at the house of Messrs. Chappell and Co., exhibit the utmost perfection of manufacture.
Although I have always been extremely happy in giving my testimony to any improvement introduced by other makers, I have never failed to consider M. ALEXANDRE as the chief benefactor to the Instrument, and that to him it is mainly indebted for its present importance. I may also add that any Harmoniums I have been called upon to select up to the present time have been chosen from those manufactured by M. ALEXANDRE.
WILLIAM STERNDALE BENNETT.

From JAMES TURLE, Esq., Organist of Westminster Abbey.
Having heard and carefully examined the Harmoniums respectively manufactured by EVANS, DEBAIN, and ALEXANDRE, I feel no hesitation in giving the preference to those of the last-named maker.
December 10, 1859. JAMES TURLE.

From Herr ENGEL, Professor of the Harmonium at the Royal Academy of Music.
I have great pleasure in stating that, in my opinion, ALEXANDRE'S Harmoniums are superior to all others, whether made in England or on the Continent.

From Dr. RIMBAULT, Author of many celebrated Works on the Harmonium.
For sweetness of tone, delicacy of touch, and powers of expression, the ALEXANDRE Harmonium is decidedly the best under manufacture. I have had constant opportunities of testing the Harmoniums of various makers, French, German, and English, and have no hesitation in pronouncing them inferior, especially in quality of tone, to those made by M. ALEXANDRE. The English, unless made with ALEXANDRE'S reeds, are decidedly the worst of all.
EDWARD F. RIMBAULT LL.D.

Having examined, side by side, the various Harmoniums, English and French, we are convinced that those made by ALEXANDRE, of Paris, are superior to all, especially in the most material points—quality of tone and equality of power.

Full Descriptive Lists (Illustrated) will be sent on application to CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL'S FOREIGN MODEL PIANOFORTE, price Fifty Guineas. This instrument has (unlike the ordinary Cottage Pianoforte) Three Strings and the fullest Grand Compass of Seven Octaves. It is strengthened by every possible means to endure the greatest amount of wear, and to stand perfectly in any climate. The workmanship is of the best description; the tone is round, full, and rich; and the power equal to that of a Bichord Grand. The case is of the most elegant description, in rosewood; the touch elastic, and the repetition very rapid. Every possible precaution has been taken to ensure its standing well in tune. Chappell and Co. especially invite the attention of the public, the profession, and merchants, to the Foreign Model, feeling assured that no Pianoforte, in all respects comparable, has hitherto been made in England at the same price.
Every instrument will be (if desired) exchanged within twelve months of the purchase.

CHAPPELL'S ENGLISH COTTAGE PIANOFORTES.

No. 1. Mahogany Case, C to A .. .. 25 gs.
2. Rosewood Case, Circular Fall .. 30 "
3. Elegant Rosewood Case .. .. 35 "
4. Elegant Walnut Case .. .. 40 "
5. The Unique Pianoforte .. .. 40 "
(Check Action, Rosewood.)
6. Ditto for Hot Climates. .. .. 45 "

Drawings will be sent on application. Any new instrument can be HIRED (for not less than six months), with the option of purchase, or a discount will be allowed on an immediate sale.
Also,
DEBAIN'S MECHANICAL or SELF ACTING PIANOFORTE 80 to 120 guineas.

CHAPPELL'S WEST INDIA MODEL PIANOFORTE, in elegant rosewood case, price forty guineas. No Cottage Pianofortes have hitherto been made to resist the effects of the climate of the West Indies, and the large and inconvenient Square has alone been available. Chappell and Co. have, in order to meet this want, constructed the above instrument so strong and solid in every part that they feel the greatest confidence in recommending it.
The West India Model is secured in every possible way with extra iron bracings, and with these additions the instrument has been found to stand perfectly up to pitch in hot climates. Every portion of the interior is protected from destructive insects by perforated zinc behind the silk, pedals, &c.

PIANOS FOR COUNTRY HIRE. CHAPPELLL and CO. send the best PIANOFORTES of every description upon HIRE to all parts of the country. If taken for not less than six months certain a new instrument will be sent, with the option of purchase without charge for the hire. Pianofortes by Broadwood, Collard, Erard, Chappell, &c. Descriptive lists and terms of all descriptions for hire will be forwarded upon application to Chappell and Co. 50, New Bond-street.

TO PURCHASERS OF PIANOFORTRS.— CHAPPELL and CO. have a large stock of SECONDHAND PIANOFORTES for Sale, by BROADWOOD, COLLARD, ERARD, &c., &c., at very reduced prices. Also, new instruments of every description.

TO MERCHANTS, SHIPPERS, and RESIDENTS ABROAD.—CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street, Sole Publishers of all the Popular Works of Charles D'Albert, Brinley Richards, Osborne, Lindahl, Blumenthal, &c., and of the most favourite songs by Balfe, Barker, the Hon. Mrs. Norton, Linley, Glover, Wallace, &c., are prepared to supply purchasers in any part of the world with the best MUSIC of every description, in large or small quantities, on the most favourable terms; also PIANOFORTES and HARMONIUMS, varying in price from 6 to 60 guineas, of the best manufacture, and selected from their stock, which is now the largest in London. Catalogues of Music or of Instruments will be forwarded free on application to Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street, London.

the conclusion of the sermon sacred music was again performed, and the choir sang a cantata. At the words, "Go thither, then, and take my burden up," his Majesty moved to the throne, which was placed in front of the altar, and laid aside the mantle and crown he had hitherto worn. The Royal mantle was now placed on his Majesty's shoulders, and the music pealed forth, while the King fell again on his knees, and the Minister of Justice read the oath, which the King repeated after him, keeping his forefinger on the 1st chapter of St. John's Gospel. The King then opened his hand, and the Archbishop took a horn filled with holy ointment and anointed his Majesty's head, temples, forehead, and palms of the hand, repeating a short prayer to the while. As the Archbishop proceeded with his prayer the Minister of Justice, assisted by the Archbishop as a sign that his majesty had the common consent and acknowledgment of the State and the Church, put on the King's arm the Royal robe of purple, and he was invested with the other insignia, accompanied by similar ceremonies. [This is the order of the ceremonies followed on by our Artist, and represented on page 521.] The King now received the sceptre in one hand and the apple in the other, and then mounted the throne again delivered to General Sprengporten, which he now held erect in his hand. On a given signal by the State Marshal the Herald of the Kingdom ascended the highest step of the throne, facing the east, and with a loud voice proclaimed, "Now is Charles the Fifteenth crowned King over sweden and Gothland and the provinces thereunto belonging, he and no other." All the heralds then raised their staffs, and, amid a fanfare of kettle-drums and trumpets, the entire assembly pronounced the words, "Long live Charles the Fifteenth!" A rocket outside the church gave the signal, when the thunders of two batteries, each of 42 guns, announced that the coronation of the King was completed. Whilst this was processing outside the building the Archbishop gave the blessing to the King, who immediately resumed his seat. The Queen was then crowned with nearly the same solemnities. The crown was placed upon her head by the Archbishop anointed her Majesty, but only on the forehead and on the palms of the hands: the insignia were handed to her, and the herald made the proclamation, "Now is Queen Wilhelmina Frederica Alexandrina Louisa crowned as Queen of the Swedes, Goths, and Wends, she and no other." A salvo of 42 guns from the fort was fired, whereupon the brothers of the King and the members of the Council of State came forward, and the oath of fealty was taken by them and kissed his hand. A psalm was then sung as a conclusion to the ceremony, whereupon both the processions set out in order of march, and all returned to the palace in the same order as before, their Majesties wearing the crowns and their kingly robes and mantles, and holding the apples and sceptres in their hands.

THE LANDING OF GARIBALDI IN SICILY.

The following official correspondence respecting the landing of General Garibaldi in Marsala has been presented to both Houses of Parliament, and is just published:—

No. 1. THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY TO MR. HAMMOND.
(Received May 18.)

Admiralty, May 17, 1860.

Sir,—I am commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to send you herewith, for the information of her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, a copy of a letter from Vice-Admiral Fanshawe, dated the 11th inst., with copy of its enclosure, reporting the circumstances attending the landing of General Garibaldi in Sicily.—I am, &c. W. G. ROMAINE.

(Inclosure 1 in No. 1.)

VICE-ADMIRAL SIR A. FANSHAWE TO THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY.

Marlborough, at Malta, May 12, 1860.

Sir,—With reference to the enclosed paragraph of my letter of the 7th inst., acquainting you, for the information of their Lordships, the misconduct of the Admiralty, that the Intrepid, on being relieved by the Argus, was ordered to Palermo, and Captain Cochrane, calling at Trapani, Marsala, and Girgenti on the way.

2. I have the honour to inform you, for the information of their Lordships that the Intrepid arrived at Marsala yesterday, meeting the Argus the same day, and has been sent by Captain Cochrane to remain a few days, in consequence of the Vice-Consul and other residents having been called upon to deliver up their arms, for the purpose of affording them protection that might be necessary, and the Intrepid has just arrived here bringing me the intelligence that about four p.m. yesterday, whilst Commander Ingram was on shore at Marsala, learning from the Acting Vice-Consul the state of the town and port, two small merchant steamers, under Neapolitan colours, steamed rapidly in, and threw on shore, with the assistance of boats from the ships, a number of armed Italian soldiers, who quickly moved up and took possession of the town and neighbourhood, there being no troops in the place, and were well received by the population.

3. Commander Maryat reports the force landed to consist of 2000 men, under Garibaldi in person. I inclose a copy of his letter of proceeding for their Lordships' information.—I have, &c.

COMMANDER MARRYAT TO VICE-ADMIRAL SIR A. FANSHAWE.

Intrepid, May 12, 1860.

Sir,—In compliance with your orders I arrived in the Intrepid with Captain Lambert, of her Majesty's ship Scylla, 1 left Messina on the evening of the 9th inst., having learnt previously that the insurrection would early, and communicated with Captain Cochran, of her Majesty's ship Argus, to that effect, and I was to proceed to join your flag sailing at Trapani, Marsala, and Girgenti on the way.

On the 11th I was the Vice-Consul at the first-named place. He stated that there had occurred there, in the course of the night and now, rich and poor, joined. All the people had, however, been disarmed by the Neapolitan authorities, himself among the number, which had caused him much annoyance; but as the Consul at Palermo had made a like question to the Minister at Naples, I advised him to wait his answer.

Theare I proceeded to Marsala, where I was joined by her Majesty's ship Argus. Whilst on shore, learning from the Acting Vice-Consul the state of the town and country, two steamers came in sight under Sardinian colours, and, steaming close in to the town, began to discharge large bodies of armed men.

I should state that the larger steamer of the two grounded about 100 yards from the end of the mole, but boats of all kinds were soon around her and assisted in landing the men.

Five or six miles distant was a Neapolitan steamer of war, and further off a large sailing frigate. The first bore up for the port, and was within range of the guns before I could get on board of the vessel aground, but, for some reason, did not open fire till they were all disembarked, and had left the town. The frigate stood down, with a strong breeze, in time to deliver one effectual broadside.

The commander of the steamer was on board the Intrepid, and made some inquiries about the force landed, and stated that he and his people had not expected any English officers who might be in the city would leave immediately.

I sent an officer there accordingly, and hoisted the general recall, but the signal had been unseen by the new steamers, who never stopped, very civilly, and informed they must get a permit from General Garibaldi before they could land.

Accompanied by Commander Ingram and Mr. Cossins, now acting for the Vice-Consul, I went on board the Neapolitan steamer. The officer in command told me that a large body of armed men, consisting, he had learnt, of what he had been obliged to fire on them. He seemed excessively nervous and talked about the affair in a manner which they particularly avoided firing on the steamers, which still kept Sardinian colours flying, without a pendant.

On our return to the Intrepid I found a Neapolitan officer on board, who had come from another steamer. He had been sent by the commander with a request that I would send a boat, accompanied by this officer, to the Sardinian steamers, asking them to surrender, which I most positively declined to do, for these reasons: If the vessels were totally abandoned, which I fully believed they were, he simply wanted the use of the English flag to protect his fault; and if, on the contrary, they still had men on board, it might be inferred our flag was used for the means of making them surrender. Eventually boats were sent on board, manned and armed, from all the Neapolitan vessels of war, the Sardinian colours hauled down, and possession taken.

I should add that, when on board the steamer that was firing, I requested that the English flag, wherever it was flying, should be respected, which the officer said should be most strictly done.

Considering this to be the most important event that has occurred during the insurrection in Sicily, I deemed it advisable to come in here with all dispatch to inform you of it; and as to going on to Trapani I shall have time to afford you the opportunity of writing to England by this day's mail, I have complied with the portion of Captain Cochran's instructions.

The last time I was in Marsala, which was a month ago, I had written for the protection of British interests for some days longer.

The nearest vessels to Marsala are detailed in the margin [number 2000; but these with Garibaldi are stated to be 2000 in number, and very few have any clothing.

The English officer commanding the English Crimean medal, and Lately in the Italian campaign.

I have, &c. (Signed) J. H. MARRYAT.

NO. II.—THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY TO MR. HAMMOND.
(Received May 22, 1860.)

Admiralty, May 22, 1860.

Sir,—I am commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to send you herewith, for the information of her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, a copy of a letter from Vice-Admiral Sir A. VICE-ADMIRAL SIR A. FANSHAWE TO THE SECRETARY TO THE ADMIRALTY.

Marlborough, at Malta, May 14.

Sir,—With reference to my letter of this date, I beg to inform you, for the information of General Garibaldi at Marsala, and inclosure in that of a letter from Commander Maryatt, of the Intrepid, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that I have the honour to request you will be pleased to lay before their Lordships the copy of another letter from Commander Maryatt, of the 13th inst., detailing the particulars which I required from him, in consequence of a telegraphic message I received from Mr. Consul-General Hunter at Naples, informing me that "a British ship of war is reported to have landed the Sardinian troops at Marsala, firing upon the inhabitants. This letter will, I think, convey a complete refutation of the report which I presume had reached its Excellency through the Neapolitan government, and the interference of our flag.

I have also to request you will acquaint their Lordships that I sent the Intrepid to remain at Marsala two days, in order to be the means of obtaining further information of General Garibaldi's movements, and the state of affairs generally in that part, whether any further protection was required at either place for British subjects.

The observations returned this afternoon, and I inclose a copy of Commander Maryatt's report on them for their Lordships' further information.

From the report of the state of Palermo, dated the 10th inst., which I received from Captain Cochran, of H.M.S. Sanspareil, a copy of which I inclosed to their Lordships, everything had been tranquil, but was expected by the Sicilians, and suspected by the authorities, and the state of that city had become unsatisfactory for some days previous to his report.—I have, &c. (Signed) ARTHUR FANSHAWE.

CAPTAIN COCHRAN TO VICE-ADMIRAL SIR A. FANSHAWE.

Sanspareil, Palermo, May 10, 1860.

Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th inst., and in answering by Commander Maryatt, and to report that, on the 4th, the state of affairs remained the same city by a proclamation of the Viceroy, who took advantage of the occasion to congratulate the people on the suppression of the revolt after a period of its continuance.

On the 5th another proclamation appeared, calling upon the community to deliver up their arms, and informing them that, after the publication of the last, four hours were found with arms in his possession would be tried by a court-martial.

These contrations in favour of the Italian cause have continued to occur, but nothing has come to my knowledge of a few French arrests. Last night, however, one of a more serious nature took place in the Via Toledo, and was seen by Captain Hastings and myself, and conducted between six and seven o'clock. They were not dispersed without the display of much force, and a number of arrests of the most violent people were killed and wounded. The truth, however, is not yet known.

I am informed that, in consequence of this affair, steamers have been dispatched along the coast for troops to reinforce the garrison, which is now reported to be 20,000, and by the number of forts out to secure the country.

The state of the city has been decidedly more unsatisfactory for some days past, notwithstanding the efforts of the police to create a better impression on the minds of the people. Inflammatory manifestos are constantly circulated to keep up the excitement. Some of these I inclose. They describe in strong terms the hatred of the people to the present Government, and that they are ready and able to put a stop to their circulation.

Reports are current that the Sicilians are expecting extraneous aid. Whether they have grounds for these expectations it is impossible to state; but, as I am informed by the Neapolitan admiral, the dispersible Neapolitan vessels are kept cruising off the coast, the inference must be that the authorities dread something of the kind.

With regard to the island generally, I believe that things are quieter than they were, and the insurrection is on the decrease; but these are isolated cases, the corps being too strong to allow of any serious attack on them. The state of Sicily, however, is that a revolutionary spirit throughout the island, although dormant, is still strong in existence, and ready to break out into a flame at any moment.—I have, &c. (Signed) THOMAS COCHRAN.

COMMANDER MARRYAT TO VICE-ADMIRAL SIR A. FANSHAWE.

Intrepid, Malta, May 14, 1860.

In compliance with your directions to report the particulars of the landing of an armed force at Marsala on the 11th instant, I have the honour to state that I left Messina on the evening of the 9th.

As it may be necessary to account for two English vessels of war not having been off Marsala, I beg to state that I paid every attention to the movements of the Intrepid and Argus during the time in question.—viz., the 9th and 10th. On the 9th her Majesty's ship Scylla relieved the Intrepid at Messina, [illegible] and I received me the orders to proceed to Palermo, where I should receive further instructions from Captain Cochrane, of the Argus, which I received. I arrived at Palermo early on the 10th, and found the Argus and Stromboli there, but the former was ordered immediately in consequence of orders from Captain Cochrane, the Argus and Intrepid left each port almost at the same moment. I was directed to proceed to the Intrepid to Trapani, Marsala, and Girgenti, ascertain the state of those places, and bring you the latest information direct to Malta. Commander Ingram was to go to Marsala and report on the alleged grievances of some British subjects, who have been distressed since the insurrection. I proceeded to Trapani, all was quiet there, and who considered they had not sufficient protection for their property. I left a boat's crew of my ship to protect any of robbers supposed to be in the country making a descent upon their residences. I was no longer under discretion as to remaining there for two or three days, or returning to Palermo direct. To carry out these orders, as I have mentioned above, both vessels left Palermo about nine p.m. on the 10th. Intrepid called in at Trapani, and I communicated with her Britannic Majesty's Consul there. Between 7 and 8 a.m. on the 11th, whilst at anchor here, the Argus passed through the Straits, and eventually both vessels arrived at Marsala within twenty minutes of each other, and between half-past 10 and 11 a.m. Commander Ingram, considering it necessary that he would have to go ashore with the boats, anchored about three miles out, where the look of directions stood the best holding-ground to be. I, on the contrary, knowing that I was to remain but a few hours, brought up as close to the shore as I could, distant from three-quarters of a mile to a mile from the lighthouse at the end of the mole.

At 11.30 we landed, having got pratique; and being met by Mr. Cossins, the gentleman acting for the Vice Consul, proceeded to his house, where some other English residents shortly arrived. The ease of their disarmament was fully discussed, but, as that subject has been referred to the Minister at Naples, it is unnecessary to say anything about it here. We then drove through the town with these gentlemen, visited the cathedral, and eventually went out to the wine-stores, which are on a large number, distant, or rather extending, from half a mile to one mile and a half from the city. We had been in Englishmen's report that two steamers were coming in seconded to a look-out place, and, with a telescope, watched the whole proceeding. Two large and small steamer had a boat in tow, which gave us the idea at the time of having been sent for the land, and some of the men in the boat. There was no hesitation shown in bringing the vessels in; they steamed round the bows of the Intrepid as I stood down for the mole, where they arrived at about 2 p.m., the first one getting in at night, the second grounding within 100 yards of it.

At this time there were three Neapolitan vessels of war in sight cruising between Marsala and Mazzara, a town twelve miles to the southward—viz., two steamers and a sailing frigate, six miles only from the Sardinian vessels. Before the Neapolitan arrived within range the first Sardinian had discharged all her living cargo, which consisted of armed men, to all appearance well disciplined, as they fell into companies on landing, shouldering their muskets, and marched off in perfect order. The one which had grounded, however, having to land all her men in boats, had not succeeded in getting more than one-fourth of the ship when the Neapolitan came within easy range of her guns; her bulwarks were down, and every man, and even women and children, were busy in the work of unloading. Before this I had advised the owners of two or three English schooners to get their vessels out of the port, as they seemed to me to run a risk of being hit; but, with the wind being dead on, they would not be removed; consequently they had to take their chance. The Neapolitan, however, never fired a single gun, but, as before, kept at rest it towards the Sardinians; but when half the distance between the two vessels the Neapolitan officer suddenly turned his boat round, and pulled back to his own vessel as fast as he could. It now became sure that the Neapolitan commenced, but we were surprised to see him pulling out towards the Intrepid, instead of firing at the vessel engaged in landing of the expedition. The commanding officer of the Intrepid states that he was boarded by the commander of the Neapolitan, and asked if there were any English troops on shore. The answer he received was, "No." The commander, I am sure, the English men-of-war are on shore, and two or three officers." Shortly afterwards an officer was sent from the Intrepid for me, and seemed anxious to know when I should return. A boat had, however, been sent to me before his arrival, and I had sent an officer into the town with the message that I should be at this time all of the expedition had landed (four o'clock), and he then began to open fire.

Commander Ingram, Mr. Cossins, and myself, now went on board to see the commander of the Neapolitan. He informed us that large bodies of armed men had landed, and he was now obliged to fire on them, to which not the slightest objection was made, and nothing further was said on the subject, but that he would respect the English flag. Whilst we were on board he continued his firing, and even offered a kind of apology for the shot falling near us; but he said he did not wish to fire into the town, only on the armed men marching from the mole to the city gate. On the steamer the English flag was also very required to ascertain whether they were deserted or not. The latter was the case, and we were able to a knowledge of the fact without running the risk of any injury to themselves; in the latter they would have had the benefit of it to assist them morally in enforcing a surrender. A short time after my return I saw the armed vessels were sent in, and the vessels, being totally abandoned, were taken possession of by the Sardinian officers landed.

6 P.M.—While this was going on I got under way to bring you the above information, and expect to reach Malta in time to allow you to forward the intelligence to England by Saturday's mail. Before I left, Commander Ingram had sent the Argus to the anchorage of Intrepid, in order to communicate more readily with the shore, the nearest British interests.

I was an eyewitness of, and to, the whole.

It is hardly necessary for me to add that the report current in Naples, as conveyed to you, received by the commander of her Majesty's ship Scylla, is entirely without foundation. To say that it is mischievous is to use too mild a term, as it has been received in many quarters by commanders of two English vessels of war, who happened to be there by the merest chance, at the time of this occurrence, and who were as much astonished at it as persons of a new meaning of such a thing could be. I may, however, be allowed, under the circumstances, to offer you an explanation of the whole affair.

So impressed was I with the idea that the commander of the Neapolitan steamer would open fire on the town, that I did, that I advised the removal of English vessels out of the port. I was, in fact, on board his steamers within two or three hundred yards of the Sardinian agrouna, in such a position that every shot fired by him would have raked her from stem to stern, which he must have crowded with men and one may feel convinced that all landing by boats would have ceased. He also would probably have destroyed the town in any one way as any what have would have been committed. On the other hand, nothing but the most friendly expressions were used to me, and I was his object to prevent a landing. I have been at a loss to account for the question whether the English troops on shore. It may have been that the red shirts or coats of the Sardinian officers [illegible] with Neapolitans; but still, as the Sardinian steamers had their colours flying, no reasonable person would suppose English troops to come from on board them.

The following is a description of the officers belonging to the Intrepid who were on shore at the time of this affair:—Whilst pulling on to the landing-place I observed two persons coming in from the north-west. When entering the town they saw several people on the quay, amongst whom were women and children, all looking to seaward, and apparently without any notice of what was time. After visiting the churches and other parts of the town, as they were passing through the principal street their attention was drawn to a large concourse of people at the principal gate, and beyond the armed troops bayonets and the red shirts of Garibaldi's troops. "Garibaldi!" and they took it for a demonstration; they did not, however, join the crowd, but kept close to it, imagining the arms they had seen belonged to Neapolitan soldiery. It was not until the first thing that called forth any remark was a man in peasant's costume [illegible] coming out of the side street, and several bodies of men passing at intervals along the road. Some men, apparently officers, had swords in their hands, and others were revolvers, and, it being noticed that they spoke Italian, the idea occurred that they were Neapolitans, considering the number of them had an English Crimean and several the Sardinian Crimean medal. In consequence of this inquiries were made, and they then ascertained a landing had taken place, on which they thought it advisable to leave the town and go to the Consul's house; but on arriving at the gate they were stopped by an officer in Sardinian uniform, who informed them they could not pass without an order from General Garibaldi, who was at the other gate: accordingly they went there and got permission through an officer who spoke to an elderly man seated in a chair, with a red garment on, and a wide-awake hat containing a feather and tricolour cockade. The officers then left the town and came on board, directly they were met by the officer telling them to do so. It is their opinion that 2000 were landed from the steamers, but this number may possibly be lessened. The men were all armed, and had long beards, fine-looking fellows, many having medals, amongst which were a few English Crimean ones.

COMMANDER AYNSLEY TO VICE-ADMIRAL SIR A. FANSHAWE.
Assurance, at Malta,
May 14, 1860.

Sir,—I have the honour to report my arrival here at 9 p.m., having, in pursuance of your orders of the 12th inst., left Malta at 6 o'clock on the evening of that day. I arrived at Girgenti at 8 a.m. on the 13th, and, after communicating with the Vice-Consul, left by 9 before noon for Marsala, which place I reached at 7.30 p.m.

I communicated with Commander Ingram of the Argus and her Majesty's Vice-Consul, and, finding nothing to detain me, I left on my return to Malta at 10.30 p.m. I found everything at Girgenti in a quiet state, the news of Garibaldi's landing having been concealed by the authorities. All that was generally known was, that a party of Italian refugees had landed at Marsala.

On the evening of the 11th a Neapolitan steamer arrived from the direction of Marsala, took on board 1000 troops, and left immediately for the westward, and, from information I subsequently received at Marsala, she was seen beyond Trapani; so that she must have gone either to Castellamare or Palermo. Another body of 1000 men left Girgenti at the same time by land for Annate, where their head-quarters are now established. Considerable discontent was expressed by these two bodies of troops (some of whom had arrived from Messina about twenty-four hours previously) at having so soon to go into the country to meet the insurgents. They had been sent for the purpose of disarming the inhabitants, but had not done so, owing to their sudden removal. There are now about 100 troops still left in Girgenti. No political arrests had taken place. No mail had been received from Palermo of a later date than that of Garibaldi's landing. There was no fear of British interests suffering from a rising of the population in favour of Garibaldi, the inhabitants being a well-disposed class, and not given to pillage.

At Marsala I was informed that Garibaldi had left that place on the morning of the 12th with 1200 of his own men, each armed with a breech-loading rifle and a revolver, four field-pieces, plenty of ammunition, and spare arms. About 150 volunteers had been raised in Marsala. He arrived at Salemi, six miles distant, yesterday, having been joined on his march by several bands of men from the country. There were no towns on his line of march; but he had been well received by the inhabitants of Salemi, and it is supposed that he intends to go on to Palermo for the purpose of organising the men now in arms round that city. There are several towns on his road to Palermo, which, it is expected, will all declare in his favour as he proceeds, and that he will be joined by a large number of volunteers from each. As yet none of his emissaries have arrived at Girgenti, but he sent a telegraphic message to Messina immediately he landed, and then caused the wires to be cut, destroying the semaphore at the same time. All the roads round Marsala are closed as regards mail communication, and it was reported that the gates of Trapani were shut, and no intercourse allowed with the country. The felons in the gaol at Marsala had been again released, under the idea that they were political prisoners. Both at Girgenti and Marsala every one seemed to be of opinion that as soon as the news of Garibaldi's landing should be known throughout Sicily every Sicilian would declare in his favour. His original force appears to have been composed of a very superior class of men, consisting of Venetians, students from Padua, some Piedmontese and some Sicilian refugees—Colonel Lamasa (who was reported to have landed at Cefalù) being amongst the number; and I am told, on very good authority, that no landing has as yet taken place on any other part of the island; but I cannot discover if any is expected.—I have, &c.,

"HAPPY DAYS," BY C. J. LEWIS, IN THE PORTLAND GALLERY.

"HAPPY DAYS." By C. J. LEWIS.

THE little domestic scene by Mr. C. J. Lewis has been produced with great taste and feeling. The principal group, of the mother dancing the child in the air whilst a young female looks on, is gracefully composed, and somewhat original in design. The happy family are seen gathered outside the cottage, through the door of which, which is open, is seen a portion of the kitchen; and again, through another door opposite, is caught a glimpse of the garden at back. This succession of pictures seen in perspective is very ingenious in idea, and most successfully carried out. The colouring of this picture is both rich and harmonious, the brighter tints below being amply balanced by the luxuriant foliage overhead. The picture is in the Exhibition of the Institution of Fine Arts at the Portland Gallery.

LITERATURE.

In the discharge of a duty we devote some space in our Journal of this week to brief notices of some volumes of poems which have accumulated on our table.

VIRGINIA'S HAND. A Poem. By MARGUERITE A. POWER. Longman.

The authoress of this tale is well known as a graceful writer of verse; while in fiction also she has recently displayed considerable ability in the sketching of character and the construction of a story. Miss Power now comes before us with a poem founded on the same plan as those of Owen Meredith and Charles Mackay, which were noticed in our pages some time since. The principle is modern and the tone realistic, fringed with the romantic; and, though here and there each's evil influence of poesy and prose a rhythmical facilities are offended by lines and phrases that are precisely downright, yet all through the poem there runs a vein of poesy which redeems any faults which are committed, probably as much from the necessity of the case as from any actual failing on the part of the writer. The story is founded on the history of the fortunes of an orphan boy who, in fairy-tale manner, is thrown into contact with a young girl of Virginia, who gains an absorbing influence over him, and who, when she talks to him, > his grief floating upon the stream

> Of her sweet baby eloquence flowed by
> And abundance of it. He looked at her
> And rarely spoke himself, but wondering gazed
> With those large, thoughtful, bewitching eyes
> Upon her speaking face, noted the tones
> Of her clear accent's value more than the words,
> And yielded up himself without a thought
> Of struggle or resistance to her will.
> Content to look upon her and be led.

Arthur, by years to come will look back
To that eventful day of change and grief,
Followed by consolation from the hand
That loving leads you now,—Virginia's hand!

For the working out of the life-drama to which the poem is directed we refer our readers to the book itself; and we will content ourselves with the following specimen of the authoress's versification:—

> "The More, the More !" proclaims the clarion shrill
> And clanging wings of chanticleer,
> Glad, confident, in answer to the faint
> But timid twitterings of the little birds
> That ask each other 'mid the leaf-dimmed shades
> If this be moonlight or indeed the Morn.
> "The More, the More !" replies the bursting light
> That floods the east with radiance overpressed
> And irrepressible : its sterling waves
> Driving back Night to her dull fastnesses
> Which, like the caskets, there shall be unlocked.
> "The More, the More !" exclaims the rosy sea,
> With all the power of all her glittering waves,
> Appeared from last night's wrath by the glad sight
> Of beautiful Aurora's glowing smile;
> And all Creation wide takes up the cry
> And echoes it through all the waking world

SONGS OF LIFE. By WILLIAM FULFORD, M.A., Pembroke College, Oxford. Alexander Dolin.

Sixty lyrics in the compass of two hundred and forty small pages. Here is much and to spare to choose from; and, in variety of subject at least, the poems fulfil the promise of the title; and really, looking to them as a whole, there seems as if some answer had been given to the question put by the author in the last stanzas of the work, in which he asks that he may be armed > for the Poet's work

> To charm mankind from worldly things;
> To bless them home humble Friends to their,
> While others make them Courts a King's;

as worthy of quotation as any other, if not more so, as it conveys the spirit in which the author has composed each every line is conceived pure; while Mr. Fulford has the merit—not by any means a common one—of writing good English. The following poem seems tolerably accurate idea of the style and tendencies of the author:—

A YEAR AGO.

A year ago!
How mournfully,
How tenderly
The words, as to some solemn music, flow!
Long, long ago might soldier sleep,
But, life for ever moving on,
The Present soon is all as sweetly gone
As that for Past we almost think a dream.
Ah! what a year ago yesterday
Is now to us, my Love, my Love!
The voice that thrilled but now upon our ear
Was silent, and we but can keep
Faint echoes that must soon as deeply sleep.
Thus all the Past is long ago, the near
As truly as the distant, and we start
To think how to our soon-forgotten heart
"For ever" sounds scarce longer than "a year ago."

A year ago
So stood we beside me in his truth,
In all the glory of his youth,
The friend whose face calls memory comfort me !
For now between us rolls the unloving sea;
And when through hours and days I hear his voice, and eye
No longer each to each makes sweet reply,
As in hand hours, a year ago.

A year ago!
Ah! why must all things thus for ever change?
The unbelieved new and strange
Supplant the old we love and know;
Thus, grief of griefs! grows dearer and more dear,
Till Love recalls worthiest that which is most mine;
And, Time fast speeding on, and faster yet
Change children, children, we forget,
Or image dimly, part by part,
What once stirred all the fountains of the heart,
In the time that is now for ever flown,
That soon long ages and ages gone,
But is only a year ago.

THE IRONBOUND SHIP, THE SLEEPING BEAUTY, and other Poems By M. WETHER. Bosworth and Harrison.

In bringing this volume under the notice of our readers we would commend them in its perusal to stop short after "The Sleeping Beauty," and to leave the leaves which contain the "other poems" unread. The author should put in the bilges to have translated the "Hermann and Dorothea" of Goethe, and we fancy that "The Ironbound Ship" must have been written while the author was under the influence of the great Germa. The prosaic idea of that unfortunate vessel, with its hand in the chains of the subject, in the construction of the tale, and a good deal in the mode of conducting it, is in the sentiment which pervades the whole. In "The Sleeping Beauty" quite another line is essayed, and there is a bumptiously, a sort of gallop, in the ballad verse that strikes us as very good. There is a touch of humour as well as a music in the following lines, which are apropos of the difficulty in which the king in the story is placed when he finds that his store of golden plates is insufficient to supply his fairy visitors by one :—

> It were better to fail in etiquette,
> And leave one old lady out:
> So this he did, in his hurry and fret,
> Not thought what he was about.
> For ladies, the older that they grow,
> The more they exact respect,
> And they that depend on them shall know
> How well they resent neglect.
> Alas that Revenge should so often wreak
> Its rage on the innocent!
> And the guiltless hurt most pine and break
> That the guilty can may repent.

GATHERED TOGETHER. Poems. By WILLIAM WILSON. Longman.

From the statement on the titlepage we learn that Mr. Wilson does not present the results of his poetic manœuvres to the public for the first time in the present volume. The author appears to possess a facility in the mechanism of his verse, which is apparent. His tendency is less towards the didactic in poetry, physical, a thing by no means strange, his sympathies are far better developed in want of the weak and the sorry, many of which stories are so being well adapted for music, by which we mean no little praise. The writer may, perhaps, take the hint, especially as he exhibits a fondness for the rhythm of the song, and the following lines will justify what we say, and we think:—

Old well-remember'd tunes spe font!
Like tunes sealn about the earth;
Like tones that sweet and low,
What gentle pictures have their Old friendship!

They steal upon the scented vision,
Bringing holy peace unto us,
Bringing happy hours
Then, through all the magic maze
Of the Past the heart can lose
The pleasant, melancholy Past,
That softest wealth all love to ponder

Reopen'd are the olden gates
Of many an ancient feeling;
And here and there a sound of "long
ayne"
From Memory's storehouse stealing.

Old tunes! they up against the heart,
And submission; there to rest
Like some poor bird, all weary-winged
That once again found its nest.

For Music hath to cure and sorrow
Which only Music can remove,
The best of words to such old tunes
Would but Heaven knows what
Old tunes are wonderful about the heart
To keep its memory ever green:
In my heart unmoved by time
Little good has ever been;
Nor can it ever be but by them
Greatness never yet was seen.

POEMS, CONTAINING THE CITY OF THE DEAD. By JOHN COLLETT, late of Wadham College, Oxford. Longman.

The volume before us is a second edition. This fact marks merit in the more emphatic and decided manner. The first poem, which it would seem is put forward in the post of honour, is less to our taste than many of the others. It is a description of the wonders of the Newfegate, and, as we read, we cannot but fancy that its periods were composed with a view, so to speak, of effect, with a view to their rolling through the crowded theatre as Commemoration. In the poems of less pretension there is a good deal to please, if not to charm. The book is handsomely printed, the paper excellent, and the moral always apt and judiciously elicited. As fair a taste of this quality of the volume as we can select from many is to be found in the short stanzas headed "A Summer's Evening in Italy," which run thus:—

> Gradly and slowly the sun is descending,
> And the clouds are all robed in one heavenly dye;
> The gold and vermilion so softly blending
> That the fabled elysium seems pictured on high.
> The crystalline dewdrops are kissing the flowers—
> The jewels that hang on the bosom of Spring;
> And the fireflies are lighting the orange-tree bowers,
> While nature's soft accents float through each grove;
> Deeply blushes the face of the emerald ocean;
> The shadows are sinking in deeper repose;
> And the green waves that ripple with gentlest motion
> Flash back to the sun a last farewell kiss at the bow.
> A rainbow of glory sits high on the forehead
> And steeps the white spray in its resient dye;
> And the tremulous hues of the varieties of the mountains
> Are hasting to join their bright mates in the sky.
> Hark! 'tis Nature's sweet voice, in her evening song flowing
> From each wild-wood and dell, from each leafy grove;
> And a messenger cloud on the hilltop is glowing,
> Either to speed or to woo from above.

POEMS. By C. E. DERING. George Bobb.

Opening this very modest-looking volume by accident at the page where the verse is headed "The Poet's Progress," we were struck by the easy flow of the lines in the first stanza, by the minuteness of description in the next, and the sarcastic power of the writer in the third piece. The author will be found to do better than give the opening lines, which induced us to read the poem. We merely add that the same vein of satire runs through a history of aristocratic inner life, which made so glibly that it reminds like truth, which we sincerely hope it is not:—

> Right well born of the proud Bell,
> His cradle chequered o'er with pink or blue,
> Watched o'er by nurses and by mothers too,
> His wants foreestalling, lies he lording hair,
> Ringlets descending first on pinkwash back,
> The ball-door echoes one continued knock,
> The laughing hour his sister hails his call,
> And ghosts in silence whilst his babe is fed.
> Ay! happy father! young, while you can,
> O'er each misfortune of unhappy man:
> A few short years that blue shall turn to woe,
> The one sure legacy to all below.
> Then shall those words to mind in future years,
> When joys' outgoings turn to bitter tears,
> When interchanged with the pure sigh
> The silver thread appears of age or care,
> When that pure sigh no more's once transparent brow
> Shall show the furrows of the avenger's plough;
> Sweet Spirit of Peace, and true Religion, say,
> All, all on earth at best is vanity.
> Ay! humble man, whose every attempt to show
> Is error, if faulty, still to nature true,
> Some consolation piece of thine may be left,
> And longer each to others on this earth abide.

We are informed that the verse contained in this book was written in various countries at different intervals: some in the sunny valleys of Cashmere, some on the waters of the Indus, some on the Ocean Sea, some in moments of repose after long and glorious days in pursuit of Indian tiger and elephant over the boundless jungles of Central Africa. That being so, we are inclined to think that the faculty which must have enabled him to keep himself en rapport with civilisation and home under such circumstances.

LIFE AND POEMS OF WILLIAM DUNBAR. By JAMES PATERSON.

A transition from the consideration of the poetry of 1860 to a notice of the work of a poet who flourished in the thirteenth century, and may be called the laureate of the Court of James IV. of Scotland, is, perhaps, somewhat abrupt. Nevertheless, it is not without purpose that we attempt to direct the attention of the readers of both authorities, both English and Scotch, admit to have been a poet of extraordinary power. Of the life of this poet but few facts were many noble followers of the muse, who has been compared to Chaucer, and characterised by the same publicist, but who has a variety and quality of his imagination, humour, and powers of description, and whom Scott has classed next to an excellent poet, unrivalled by any which Scotland has produced. Dunbar's poems appeared in a half-dozen times have annotated Dunbar's poems it appears that he was born about 1460, and that his paternal inheritance was but a birthright would seem to have been in Lothian. It is known that he studied at the University of St. Andrews, and took the degree of Master of Arts in 1479. In early life he became a friar of the order of St. Francis; and was for a branch of whom was established in Edinburgh by James I.; but he deserted the order, and afterwards came to be employed by the King, and was one among the retinue of Princess Margaret, when she left Scotland to marry from Berwick in 1491. It is supposed that, when the embassy returned, Dunbar was left in Paris "for the purpose of crossing the Alps in the further prosecution of the errands of his Royal master." Though, no doubt, frequently employed in the capacity of secretary to Scottish ambassadors before the year 1500, he was not recognised as a familiar attendant in the Royal household. Much of his poetry, however, at least of what has been preserved, has reference to the Court, and is thereby sufficiently identified to be placed in the second period into which his writings are divided in the volume before us. All such pieces as cannot be so identified are placed in the first period. The first in order is "The Golden Targe," a purely allegorical poem, in which there is a description of a May morning, which it is asserted is more gorgeous than anything that was ever penned by Chaucer or any one else; while throughout the whole poem, in which the moral sought to be inculcated is that Reason is the Golden Targe to be used as in most other matters, the allegory is beautifully conceived and powerfully sustained. The muse of Dunbar, although frequently of a philosophical cast, was nevertheless prone to various moods—joyous, sad, and humorous by turns. Of each and all of these veins there are excellent specimens in the work before us, and there is every justification for this publication, the object of which is to render the poems of a universally known than they are; while, with a view to their greater intelligibility, the orthography has been just so much modified as to preserve as large a full idea of its original, and to avoid more paraphrase. There is no design of publishing the author of the "Golden Targe" which constitutes one of the most interesting features of the olden poets; but what has been done is simply to render the many words more intelligible, and to explain such as have become obsolete.

We have named but one of the poems which are included in this volume, for it is impossible, within the limits of our space, to embrace every variety of subject. As we have given samples of the powers of those children of the muse who strayed through the mirkiness of our smoky age, it would be scant justice to the poet of ancient days if we did not give a taste of his quality, and therefore we subjoin a portion of that description of a May morning to which allusion has above been made:—

> Up the hill, up the hawen's minstrel fire
> In May, in till a morrow mirthfullest.
> Full angel-like this birdis sang their hours
> Within their sundry oratories fine of flours,
> Apparelled white and red, with bloomis sweet;
> Right pleasant was the field with all delicates,
> The pearis droppis shook in silver shoures;
> For to report the diamond of the day
> For to rejoice, did Aurora greet:
> Her crystal tearis hang upon the flours,
> While he for love all drank up with his heat.
> For mirth of May, with May's sweet nourice,
> The birdis sang upon the tender crops,
> With curious voicis, that called unto their makis:
> The roses young, new spreading of their knops,
> Ourpurpurit with the sanguine hue,
> Through beame red, burning as ruby sparks;
> The air attemperit for pleasing of the lucks,
> The purpis heaven ours seat's in silver slops
> Bedewit all with balmy liquor, nectar, and bukis.

A MANUAL OF BOTANY; being an Introduction to the Study of the Structure, Physiology, and Classification of Plants. By Professor BALFOUR, M.D., &c. Adam and Charles Black, Edinburgh.

The study of botany is well fitted to call the observant faculties into exercise. It is a science fitted for all ages, for all ranks, and for all seasons. It teaches the student to look for the differences and resemblances between objects, and leads to habits of correct observation. It, moreover, adds pleasure to every walk, affords an endless source of gratification, and it can be reduced to practice even in the closet and in the field.

The manual before us is intended to initiate the student into this charming department of nature. Professor Balfour's aim has been to provide a text-book for beginners, and, at the same time, a general view of all departments of the science, including the microscopical structure of plants, their classification, and distribution over the globe, and their condition at various geological epochs. Both a commercial or economical purposes, as well as the medicinal properties of plants, are fully treated of, and a valuable chapter is given on the mode of collecting and preparing specimens for the microscope, together with a number of useful general terms, and a glossary of eight hundred well-executed woodcut illustrations make this one of the best and cheapest text-books lately published.

THE COMPARATIVE PROPERTIES OF HUMAN AND ANIMAL MILKS. THE PRACTICE OF HIRING WET-NURSES, &c. By M. A. BARRY.

These pamphlets, trenching of kindred subjects, are from the pen of a benevolent-minded lady. In the former Mr. Barry-Nightingale school, who has undertaken the somewhat difficult task of ascertaining whether it is possible to find a substitute for the various nutritious substances with cows' milk, to compose an artificial food that shall be well adapted to the physical constitution of the infant, and thus form a closer imitation of the natural aliment. This has to be furnished by any of the animal milks alone; and in such wise assist in diminishing the present high rate of mortality in the early months of infantile existence. The object of the writer is highly praiseworthy, and is one well deserving the most favourable consideration of Englishwomen; and for this reason alone we have no hesitation in directing attention to the subject in the columns of this Paper.

THE MANAGEMENT OF INFANCY, &c. By CHARLES. Revised and Edited by ROBERT DICK, M.D., &c. Edinburgh: Macfachlan.

This work having already passed through several large editions, needs but a passing notice at our hands to commend a new and revised edition to the favourable notice of the public. It appears that the eminent Physician to the Queen has, since his father's death, undertaken a thorough revision of his book, and has thereby given the stamp of authority to the whole system. For our part we can see been to carry out "what he knew was the object of the author—namely, to render his work useful to the junior members of medicine and teachers of youth, as well as to parents, for whose guidance the work was originally intended."

THE MEMOIRS OF THESSALY.—In this classic land, which formed a portion of the ancient Hellenic kingdom, considerable archæological research has been known to exist from the remotest periods of which history has left us any record. Homer tells us that Alexander carried away from these mineral treasures and drew therefrom vast quantities of silver, which enabled them to carry on their conquests. It is consequently not a reason in the nineteenth century those mining operations beyon long prior to, and which have since continued down through the whole of the Roman era. An English company is reported to have acquired a concession of all the mineral rights over Thessaly, and to have commenced operations in Epirus and the Ionian Sea. Before long the miner's pick and the blasting-powder will arouse the echoes of Mount Ossa's Vale, the classic Tempe, while the traditionary grandeur of Olympus, the abode of the gods and the resort of Jupiter; of Pindus—sacred to Apollo; and of Oeta, the residence of the Centaurs, will be made subservient to the requirements of a more practical age than that which Homer and Hesiod sang. Already concessions have been commenced at the pine-clad Mount Pelion, whence the gifted Centaur Chiron received his education from Apollo, and which was said to yield coin containing gold, silver, and lead—the latter existing in considerable quantities.

SHIPWRECKED FISHERMEN AND MARINERS' ROYAL BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.—The twenty-fifth annual meeting of this charity was held yesterday week in Willis's Rooms. The Duke of Marlborough presided, and was supported by the Earl of Donoughmore, Viscount Bridport, Mr. Seymour, Captain the Hon. F. Maude, the Rev. J. B. Owen, Rev. H. Bonamy Price, and several gentlemen connected with the society. The noble chairman stated some statistics to show its usefulness, and at length urged its claims upon the public for support (Mr. Lane) read the report, from which it appeared that during the year 6767 shipwrecked persons had been assisted, and that since the establishment of the institution 94,000 persons of the mariners in the number of 3832, making a total of 19,314. The receipts for the year had been £13,345, and it was stated that during the last three years the expenditure had exceeded the income by £4000 or £5000 annually. The report was unanimously adopted on the motion of Lord Bridport, seconded by Mr. Lane. The committee intended to expend £1000 and no hospital for worn-out coastguard men and their widows, and the Earl of Donoughmore the report was received and read, addresses from Captain Maude, the Rev. J. B. Owen, and others. The proceedings closed by a vote of thanks to the chairman.

THE DIGNITY OF KNIGHTHOOD.—The Queen has directed letters patent to be passed under the Great Seal granting the dignity of a Knight of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland unto William Martin, Esq., late Chief Justice of New Zealand; Francis Bordy, Esq., Chief Justice of Newfoundland; James Hurtle Fisher, Esq., President of the Legislative Council, South Australia; Chirtefield Josephus Brand, Esq., Speaker of the House of Assembly of the Cape of Good Hope; and Charles Cowper, Esq., Speaker of the House of Assembly of Victoria; Redmond Barry, Esq., Senior Puisne Judge of Victoria; Thomas Maclear, Esq., Astronomer Royal at the Cape of Good Hope; and Walter Currie, Esq., Commandant of the Armed Mounted Police at the Cape of Good Hope.

"THE RETURN OF THE MISSING CREW," BY F. HARWELL, IN THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

"COLONEL BELL, V.C., ROYAL WELSH FUSILIERS, 23RD REGIMENT," BY L. W. DESANGES, IN THE VICTORIA CROSS GALLERY, EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY.

THE VICTORIA CROSS GALLERY.

THE idea of establishing a Victoria Cross Gallery, to commemorate the deeds of valour of the British soldier considered worthy of that distinguished mark of favour, originated with Mr. Desanges a couple of seasons ago. He commenced with subjects which presented themselves in the Crimean war, and some most striking and interesting pictures were the result. Since then, the suppression of the Indian mutiny, and return to their native land of many of the gallant men who so lately saved the British empire in the East, have enabled the artist to enrich his collection with several scenes of enthralling interest from that quarter, together with portraits of the brave men engaged in them. The exhibition which results is a most interesting one, and cannot fail to excite the admiration and emulation of all who behold it and consider the events commemorated in it.

But, independently of the historical and national interest attaching to these pictures, we may state that simply as works of art they are of a very superior merit, displaying an amount of knowledge of composition and colour not generally found in the painters of official subjects. Amongst the more remarkable pictures we may mention that of William Nathan Wright Hewitt, acting Mate of her Majesty's ship Beagle, who, when in charge of the Lancaster battery before Sebastopol, which was placed in jeopardy by the advance of the Russians, disregarded a supposed order to spike the gun and retreat, observing, "Both an order did not come from Captain Lushington, and he would not do it if it did." He then pulled down the parapet of the battery, and, with the assistance of some soldiers, got his gun round, and poured upon the advancing enemy a most destructive fire. For this conduct he was promoted to the rank of Lieutenant. Then, what honour is due to the cool courage of Sergeant Alfred Ablett, of the Grenadier Guards, who, seeing a shell falling in the midst of a number of ammunition-cases, coolly seized it, and threw it outside the trench, where it exploded before it touched the ground! But we have not space to go into particulars of these gallant achievements, and which illustrate the names of Colonel Henry Tombs, Brevet Major Goodlake, Major Probyn, Major Teesdale, Captain Alexander Kerr, Commander H. J. Raby, Corporal Robert Shields, and a host of others whose acts of valour are recorded in the pages of history. The picture which we engrave commemorates the gallant conduct of Colonel Bell, of the Royal Welsh Fusiliers, at the Battle of the Alma, where he was the first to seize upon and capture one of the enemy's guns which was limbered up and being carried off. He moreover succeeded to the command of the above-named regiment, which he brought out of action, all his senior officers having been killed or wounded. We cordially recommend this interesting collection to all who have a wholesome patriotic regard for the character and renown of our brave army.

THE FARM.

Mr. Alderman Mechi, whose Agricultural Benevolent Institution is to hold its first festival at the London Tavern, on the 26th instant, with the Duke of Richmond in the chair, has put some rather pertinent queries to the London Farmers' Club on the subject of their Lois Weeden discussion. He asks, "Where is the report of the members of the club, who were to anatomise Mr. Smith's practice, as well as his mutton and roast fowl? Where the comparison between the past and present condition of his land? and where the contrast between his crops and those of his neighbours on the same description of soil? Echo says, where? Then what have we learned from this deep and prying investigation by the sharp men of the Farmers' Club? Literally nothing—they don't tell us that the adjoining lands are only tilled to the depth of a common wineglass, all below that being like cast iron: they don't say that, owing to Mr. Smith cultivating to four times that depth, he grows much more on half an acre than his neighbours do on a whole acre, &c." "This practice of deep cultivation is a permanent and pungent condemnation of the shallowness of British agriculture—I mean in its first great principle and basis, 'deep cultivation;' and I feel humiliated that the central agricultural club of the kingdom did not recognise the advantage of this great truth, and award to Mr. Smith that meed of praise to which he is so pre-eminently entitled."

The Bath and West of England Meeting, which was established in 1777, holds its annual meeting at Dorchester from Monday to Friday next; and then we shall soon be in the thick of the great agricultural gatherings. For the Two Year-Old Heifer Prize at the Royal it may be said to be even betting between Mr. Grundy's Faith and her old rival Duchess 77th, while Mr. Douglas quite hopes that Maid of Athelstane will be thereabouts, and Warlaby sees a great deal of improvement in its Soldier's Nurse. Some ardent "Bates-men" are disposed to fancy that Captain Gunter will sweep the prizes in both heifer classes with his Duchesses; and divers are the opinions as to whether the white or the roan of the younger pair is most likely to catch the judge's eye. The Duke of Atholl's milking prize at the Ayrshire County Show brought out eight competitors, which were shut up and watched for five days in the trial by pail. The greatest milking of the winning cow amounted to 28lb. 7oz., while the average of her ten was 26lb. 5oz. Still the percentage of cream was only 12; while that of the fifth cow, which averaged 22lb. 1oz. in her ten milkings, was 15.

Mr. Strafford has announced two important sales, one for July 5, at Springfield, near Lancaster, of the Waterloo tribe of Mr. Bolden's herd, and some choice bulls of Wiseton and Warlaby descent. The Waterloo tribe was one on which Mr. Bates set great store, but he would never say from whom he obtained them. Waterloo 17th and 18th are by Second Grand Duke, that thousand-guinea son of Duchess 64th. Mr. Mark Stewart's Southwick's herd is also on Mr. Strafford's list for July 31, the day before the Highland Society's Show at Dumfries, which is very handy for visitors. Among the eighty or ninety head are Rose of Autumn, the dam of Mr. Douglas's celebrated Rose of Summer, as well as descendants of Colonel Cradock's Old Cherry, and Emily by Gainford. M'Turk is the sire of most of the young stock, and many of the remainder are by Baron of Ravensworth, Hudibras, and Heir at Law.

The choice little Holker herd forms chapter xviii. of "The Herds of Great Britain" in this month's number of the Farmer's Magazine; and we observe that both the American and Irish newspapers are following the example, and are publishing similar reports. The Duke of Devonshire formed his first herd, principally from Castle Howard blood, in 1840, and sold it off in 1851. Since then he has been, through his land agent, Mr. George Drewry, a very extensive purchaser of cows and heifers at nearly all our best sales, and is now the possessor of the only Oxford cows in England. They are sprung from Oxford 15th, which was purchased by his Grace for 200gs. at the Tortworth sale. She is the granddam of Countess of Oxford 2nd, which is, perhaps, the flower of the herd. Owing to the close proximity of Third Grand Duke, to whom the three Oxford cows have been sent to two years in succession, a Grand Duchess of Oxford race is fast springing up, which bids fair to give a great character to the herd. The Cleopatra and Gwynne tribes are also especial favourites, and so are Cosey and her Statesman's Daughter, from Mr. W. Wetherell's; Laurel by Grand Turk; Dustie and her daughter, Maid of the Mill, from Cobham; and Coral, the latest purchase from Mr. Adkins, of Milcote. Cambridge Barrington 2nd, from Lady Barrington 8th, a purchase at Mr. Tanqueray's sale, did them great good, but died, owing to an accident, very early. Since then they have principally used Oxford bulls of their own breeding. Old Sarah Gwynne is put up to feed, and, according to the weighing-machine by which the principal animals are tested every fortnight, she has made 58lb. in one of those intervals. Strange to say, Statesman's Daughter, when under a year old, made 62lb., and Ninth Duke of Oxford added a hundredweight a month to his weight for four months' running, and 82lb. of it in the course of one fortnight. This result, however wonderful it may seem, was achieved without any forcing, as his Grace does not care for shows. At present the herd, which is kept at Holker Hall, a few miles from Ulverstone, consists of twenty-five cows and heifers, and eight bulls. The latest accessions are two Eighth Duke of Oxford bull-calves, from Cleopatra 2nd and Dustie, which have been named Orion and Ossian.

Mr. Rarey at the Alhambra.—Last Saturday Mr. Rarey illustrated the principles of his science, first by a grey mare, of a quiet disposition, which readily succumbed to his treatment. Next, a restive blood colt was submitted to his manipulation, of which it was stated that he had the greatest objection to the saddle, but which after a short process was rendered as tame as a donkey. The third and most difficult subject was a fine Arabian horse, the property of a Shropshire gentleman, Mr. Nevill. This animal was introduced, closely muzzled, by two assistants, and champed defiance to all the arts of persuasion or force to subdue him. Such was his temper that Mr. Rarey struggled round the ring with him for ten minutes before he could bend up his near leg, having to prevent himself from being crushed against the sides of the ring by placing his leg against them as a lever. With great difficulty he succeeded in strapping up the leg, and after some furious plunging on the part of the animal he strapped up the other, and threw him on his knees. "Poor thing!" was audibly murmured by the ladies of the audience, as the panting sides of the animal gave evidence of the violence of the struggle. But the superiority of mind over matter was evident. The horse, after a few more vain attempts to resist the influence of his conqueror, quietly succumbed to the power that had literally laid him, and allowed every reasonable liberty to be taken with him. The drum was the acme of these liberties, which he permitted to be beaten on his back, and he was finally led out a sadder but wiser animal.

The Aberdeen Failure.—The examination into the affairs of Messrs. John and Anthony Blaikie, advocates, of Aberdeen, who suspended last month, in consequence of the flight of the senior partner, leaving deficiencies to the estimated amount of £200,000, is now in progress. According to the evidence of the junior partner, Mr. Anthony Blaikie, the firm had actually been insolvent for ten years past, its principal nominal capital consisting of a debt from his brother, John Blaikie, which he supposed to be good. This debt went on increasing, owing to losses from private speculations, in which John Blaikie continued to engage, and which apparently embraced not only all kinds of stock and share dealings, but also consignments of cotton goods and produce to China and other parts of the world. In May last he held, among a large quantity of Eastern Counties, North Stafford, and other railway stocks, 2050 shares of the Great Western Railway of Canada, a total which he subsequently increased by another purchase of 1800. Of these, all that now remain are 1190 held as security by the Union Bank of Scotland. He also embarked in an adventure in Australia called the Peechelba Investment Company. In two years from February, 1858, to March, 1860, his operations in shares are ascertained to have been to the extent of £1,800,000, involving a loss of £32,000. The business of the firm yielded an average net annual profit of £4000, and Mr. Anthony Blaikie states he did not consider its bankruptcy inevitable until a day or two before it occurred. Anthony Blaikie had a share of one-third, but his expenditure for ten years past has only been at the rate of £800 a-year. The books, however, have been always in arrear.—The Times City Article.

THE COLOURED SUPPLEMENT.

"THE RUSH-GATHERERS ON LOUGH CORRIB." BY J. J. HILL.

How gently thy waters, Lough Corrib, are waving,
While the storm is asleep on Atlantic's smooth breast!
And how proudly thy mountains their shadows are laving
In thy mirror beneath, by the sunbeams caress'd!

But madly thy billows in surges are tossing,
And savage and dark frown thy cliffs o'er the scene,
When the west wind in wrath o'er thy bosom is crossing,
And the thundercloud lowers o'er yon summits so green.

Then, woe to that boat with the rush-gleaners freighted,
Whom thy fickle smiles tempted to ply their wild trade;
Spreads the gloom in the distance!—too long have they waited—
And instinctive the sea-birds fly homeward, dismay'd!

But, pull, boatman, pull at thy oars undespairing!
There yet may be time thy loved shieling to gain,
Where thou and thy sisters, its rude comforts sharing,
Shall bless Heav'n for your rescue from peril and pain!—H. H.

In our Coloured Supplement this week we reproduce Mr. J. J. Hill's beautiful picture "The Rush-gatherers on Lough Corrib," exhibited this season at the Suffolk-street Gallery. Few and simple as are the materials which the artist had to deal with in the production of this work, he has treated them so admirably, with the eye and hand of an artist, that the result is truly charming. The waters of the lake spread far into the distance, pellucid, and of a deep blue colour; and the same breadth of treatment is observable in the shore and sky—partly obscured in the distance by the gathering mists from the Atlantic settling round the hilltops. The boat, with its living freight of peasants returning from gathering rushes, and the few animals on the shore on the left, form a focus of light and warmth in the centre which, by contrast, seems admirably to set off and enliven an otherwise monotonous landscape.

Lough Corrib, the romantic beauties of which have as yet been comparatively but seldom visited and slightly appreciated by the tourist, will, with the adoption of Galway as a packet-station for America and the colonies, become every day an object of increasing attraction and interest. Situated in the midst of the mountain wilds of Connemara, appropriately termed the Irish Highlands, it is 44,000 acres in extent, and measures in extreme length about twenty-seven miles, and in parts is more than six miles broad. The scenery presented upon it, from all points of view, is in the highest degree picturesque, being thickly studded with islands, many of which are inhabited. Its navigation, however, is not free from danger, owing to sudden squalls of wind to which it is subject at certain seasons of the year, and to sunken rocks which obstruct it in various quarters; but the positions of almost all of these are known to the boatmen who are employed in the conveyance of goods and provisions to and from Galway. At the eastern portion the lough narrows very much, terminating in the River Corrib, which falls into Galway Bay. Nearly adjoining Lough Corrib, inland, and separated from it only by a narrow neck of land of about two miles in breadth, is Lough Mask, which contains an area of 22,000 acres, and is ten miles in length. A short canal, connecting these two magnificent expanses of water, will shortly be opened, if not already open, presenting to the district a still-water navigation of upwards of forty miles in length, with a coast-line of upwards of one hundred miles, and will result in the further advantage of lowering the water in Lough Mask to the level of that in Lough Corrib, the difference being now forty feet, at the same time draining lands equal to 150,000 acres in the neighbourhood, which are now covered with water. Further, it is intended to open a short canal from Lough Corrib to the sea, which, with the other works of improvement, will be of incalculable advantage to the district. If the water power of this district were put to account and applied to the purposes of manufacture, in connection with the commercial channels now opened, the poorest region in Ireland might in time become one of the most wealthy, and even enter into competition with the manufacturing districts of England itself, where the use of water has been so well understood and so taken advantage of. For the water power of the district is not confined to Lough Corrib and Lough Mask; the whole country is studded with lakes and rivers in every direction, which could easily be rendered navigable. In fact, as Mr. Nimmo has remarked in his able report on this district, there is no portion of it more distant than six miles either from the sea or some navigable lake.

To the lover of angling there is perhaps no part of the British Islands where so much sport is likely to be afforded as amongst the lakes of Connemara. In Lough Corrib is found the gillaroo trout, which is remarkable from the circumstance of its possessing a gizzard, and so enthusiastically described by Sir Humphry Davy in his "Salmonia." He had never met with gillaroo except in Ireland, and it was at one time thought that the fish was peculiar to Lough Corrib. It has, however, of late been found also in Lough Neah, Lough Erne, and Lough Mask; and is sometimes said to weigh from fifty to sixty pounds.

"EARLY SUMMER-TIME." BY B. W. LEADER.

In this work, which we have reproduced in colours, Mr. Leader selects a truly English bit of landscape under a truly English May sky, clear blue, chequered with clouds, and with just enough of freshness in the air to render exercise agreeable. The fields and trees are of the tenderest green colour—such a green as is only seen in early summer, before the sun has assumed its full scorching power, and creation on all sides is putting forth its strength in every description of vegetation. All this has been most happily represented by the artist, who, in the composition and treatment of his subject, shows himself possessed of a soul to enjoy Nature in her gladdest and grandest moods.

The conversazione of Mr. G. P. Bidder, President of the Institution of Civil Engineers, will take place next Tuesday, the 5th of June.

Yesterday se'nnight the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, in accordance with a time honoured custom, entertained her Majesty's Judges, with the leading members of the Bar, and the officers of the Corporation, at a banquet in the Egyptian Hall. Covers were laid for about 150 guests.

A Parsee Prince's Opinion of England.—We learn from the Bombay Gazette that his Highness Meer Jaffer Ali Khan Bahadur entertained the Parsee community of that place at dinner in honour of the late marriage of his daughter. He made a speech to them in which he said that he reckoned the Parsees as his brothers—"as, indeed, the whole human race is one common brotherhood." Of the impressions which England had produced upon him his Highness thus spoke:—"I was anxious that an occasion should arise when I could give an account of my sojourn in England to my fellow-countrymen; and by the grace of God an opportunity has presented itself to us this evening. I wish I could describe to you the remarkable intelligence of the Englishmen as displayed by them in their various dealings—social, political, commercial. So vast and varied is their knowledge in everything that they have rightly earned the title of being ranked amongst the first and foremost of nations on the face of the globe. On the first occasion when I visited England, in 1844, I stayed there for about five months. The gentry and nobility of that delightful country treated me with all the kindness and consideration for which they are so remarkable. In 1853 I paid a second visit to England, and had occasion to prolong my stay there for five years. During that long period I had every opportunity of making myself acquainted with their manners and customs, their social and political laws, their judicial system, &c., &c. I moved amongst the leading men of the realm; and my association with Englishmen in general has impressed me with a very high opinion of their transcendent intelligence in every branch of human knowledge. To appreciate their several virtues, to admire their mechanical ingenuity, and to become acquainted with all that exalts our mind and enlarges our heart, we must be there on the spot. No description, however full and glowing, could adequately convey the idea I have received from personal visit of the magnificence and grandeur of England and her people. One of the most remarkable things that struck me was the system of their legislation and government. Their form of government is the best I have yet seen. To the people of the East it strikes us as very strange that the people should have so such control over the acts of the Queen; in point of fact, the people govern the country; and to my mind it should be so. If we go deeper into the subject, we will see that the people of a country should be the ruling body. I was also struck with the mode in which justice is administered. I would go no farther than myself—you are all well aware, gentlemen, of the particulars of my case; you see how equitably they have disposed of the matter. Let us all pray for the permanent establishment of the British power in India, and for the welfare and prosperity of their nation wherever they go, and wherever they are."

TOPOGRAPHY OF SICILY.

M. Viollet-le-Duc communicates to the Moniteur the following account of the parts of Sicily into which Garibaldi's band have penetrated:—

"From Marsala two roads lead towards Palermo: one in good repair, following the coast on the north to Trapani, and from Trapani, turning suddenly to the east by Mount San Julliano, crosses the defiles to Calatafimi, redescends towards the sea through Alcamo, and then proceeds right along the splendid valley of Palermo. A second road, less carefully attended to, goes from Marsala to Calatafimi. Marsala only possesses a small port, and a roadstead not very deep; on the land side it is defended by old walls flanked with square towers. It is clear that troops disembarking at Marsala, an open town on a low shore, could not intend to remain there an hour. If the Neapolitan troops had intended to hold the country, they would only have had to guard the defiles which lead to Calatafimi; and, in that case, even if the insurgents had possessed a numerous artillery and regular troops, they could not have advanced more than five miles into the interior. As the Neapolitans did not defend the defiles of Calatafimi, they abandoned voluntarily or forcedly all the western part of the island. No obstacle preventing the insurgents from presenting themselves before the latter town, any offensive return from Palermo was impossible, or at least very dangerous. The insurgents possessing Calatafima are masters of Trapani, Marsala, Mazzara, Castel Vetrano, and even Sciacca. But let us examine an instant this western part of the island. Alcamo is a town situated on a plateau in the midst of a plain; it was formerly an Arab establishment, as its name indicates, and is well chosen to command several little ports, of which the nearest and most important is named Magazinazzo. From Palermo to Alcamo is rather more than twenty-one miles, and from Alcamo to Calatafimi about eight. To go to Palermo from Alcamo we follow one of the most admirable valleys of Sicily, in which are olive-trees centuries old, and groves of orange and citron trees. But on passing the height which closes the valley to the south the scene suddenly changes, and the approach to Alcamo is through arid mountains. Then entering deep gorges we arrive at Calatafimi, a town, not of ten thousand inhabitants, as stated in the newspapers, but of four thousand or five thousand. The town, which is of wretched aspect, is dominated by a castle now quite in ruins. From this castle an extraordinary country is seen—the land and rocks being in confusion, as if tossed about by some terrible earthquake. The Neapolitans ought to have defended these parts; but, not having done so, they have left great advantage to the guerrillas. The latter, in fact, without leaving the mountains, can surround Palermo, either by going to Bagaria on the east, or in turning Monreale and occupying the Monte Pellegrino to the west; they can command the solitary plains of Marsala and Mazzara, can possess themselves of Mount San Juliano, which dominates Trapani, can cut of all communication by land between the town and Palermo, and can cause the inhabitants of Trapani to suffer dreadfully from thirst by destroying the only aqueduct which conveys them water from Mount San Juliano. If the insurgents be numerous, they can besides reach the rich valleys of Castel Vetrano and Campo Bello to the south, and the towns of Termini and Cefalu on the north coast. The place of disembarkation of Garibaldi's bands was chosen with so much intelligence as to cause us to suppose that he and his Lieutenants will profit by all the advantages which the nature of the country affords. Trapani is a pretty town, formerly fortified, and has a sort of citadel, which commands the port. If it were not for the want of water the town could easily be defended on the land side, as it is only united to the plain by a tongue of land cut by salt marshes. From Calatafimi to Trapani the road winds through irregular hills; and on this road, a length of upwards of eighteen miles, there is not a house, not a tree, not a shrub. At a distance of two or three miles from Palermo, and all other great towns, there is scarcely any trace of cultivation. The inhabitants are so borne down by taxes on all they produce that they abandon the soil, though it is, perhaps, the most fertile in Italy, and the peasants contrive to live on a handful of pulse daily."—"Viator" writes in the Times on Tuesday as follows:—"Permit me, as a traveller in Sicily, to say that Marsala is full seventy miles from Palermo, and that Calatafimi, Alcamo, Partenico, and Monreale are towns containing from 15,000 to 20,000 inhabitants each, and distant about a day's march from each other. Monreale, which is the see of an Archbishop, is situated on the slope of the hills which surround Palermo. Between Monreale and Partenico is the pass over these hills. If Garibaldi's forces once get possession of that pass, the Royal forces will never cross the hills again. These hills are about half a mile in perpendicular height. The forces of the King of Naples are all Neapolitans or mercenary Swiss. There is not a single Sicilian regiment in the service. The Sicilians have never been allowed to carry arms, or to be trained as soldiers. Let not your readers suppose that the fortifications of Palermo and Messina are easier to take by land than by sea. On the contrary, the guns of these fortresses point not outwards against the enemy and the corsair, but inwards against the town. I think the Castellamare of Palermo will be taken by Garibaldi. The citadel of Messina is much stronger. It is built on the sickle, or braccio, and it commands both the straits and the town. It is a modern fortification of great strength. Let us hope, therefore, that Garibaldi will be supplied in time with powerful artillery. In their last endeavour to gain their freedom the Sicilians melted the bronze statues of their unpopular Kings to make guns and mortars. That cannot be done again. Garibaldi will want help. Sicily in all her struggles has looked to England, and has sometimes complained that England has been unkind."

Alleged Interception of Royal Correspondence.—A curious discussion has been going on in the Prussian journals. The writers discuss at some length the means whereby the contents of a despatch from the Prince Regent to the Prince Consort of England have been brought to the knowledge of the French Government; and an interview has taken place between the Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne, the French Ambassador at Berlin, and M. von Schleinitz, the Prussian Minister of Foreign Affairs, on the subject. The Dusseldorf Gazette, in a recent number, gives a very particular account of a conversation said to have taken place between them; but the Prussian Gazette says it is authorised to declare that no such conversation ever took place. The journals speak of thefts of despatches having been discovered, and one states that the contents of the despatch in question can only have become known through an indiscreet communication in Ministerial circles on the English side of the Channel.

The Neapolitan Navy.—The Moniteur de la Flotte gives some information about the Neapolitan Navy which just now is important:—"The naval establishment of the kingdom is concentrated at Castellamare, which communicates with the capital by means of a railway which passes through Portici. None of the improvements adopted by the navies of other countries have been neglected, and the docks and workshops of Castellamare are worthy to figure, by their organisation and their resources, by the side of those of France and England." The same authority tells us that thirty vessels have been added to the Neapolitan Navy since 1856, but it omits to state that they are merely small gun-boats. The official print then enumerates the naval forces of King Bomba, which is manned by about ten thousand officers, seamen, and marines:—Sailing-vessels: one ship of the line, 90 guns; one ditto, 80; six frigates, 308; three corvettes, 50; ten brigs, 200; three schooners, 14—making a total of twenty-four vessels, with 742 guns. Steamers: five frigates, 450 horse-power; mounting 12 guns each, 60; fifteen ditto, 800 horse-power, 6 guns each, 90; five corvettes, 240 horse-power (six guns each), 30; five dispatch-boats, 200 horse-power (four guns each), 20; one dispatch-boat, 120 horse-power, 5; ten ditto, 50 to 80 horse-power, 40; three transports; fifteen mortar-boats, 15; fifteen gun-boats, 30; thirty ditto, mounting Paixhan howitzers, 40; forming a total of 104 vessels, of 10,000 horse-power, and having 900 guns.

The British Museum.—The annual account of the British Museum has been presented to Parliament, with the usual statement of the mode in which the proposed estimate for the current year, £100,850, is to be expended. The salaries of so vast an establishment necessarily amount to a large aggregate, £89,084, and no less a sum than £25,282 is appropriated to purchases, chiefly of books, antiquities, and minerals, with nearly as much for repairs, furniture, and fittings, the latter principally for the library and department of antiquities. Bookbinding costs £7500 a year. The additions to the library are greatly beyond the number of books directed by law to be supplied by the publishers. Above two-thirds of the books placed in the library last year were purchased. The number of readers was 122,424, which would give an average of 418 a day. The number has more than doubled since the noble and spacious apartment now appropriated to them was opened in 1857; but the number of visits to the other parts of the Museum, the general collections, does not quite keep up. Last year it was 517,895. In addition to the usual days—Monday, Wednesday, Friday—the Museum is now open on Saturday from twelve to six, and will be so until the end of August. All the departments have been greatly enriched and improved during the year.

Testing Telegraph Cables.—The telegraph cable of 1200 miles to be laid between Rangoon and Singapore is now being tested by a process invented by Mr. W. Reid. During the manipulation of gutta percha a great quantity of air and water is liable to become mixed with it, and in marine cables, when covered with ropeyarn and iron wire, these faults have hitherto been detected only after submersion. By the plan of Mr. Reid, however, all such defects are alleged to be certain to be discovered. A coil of gutta-percha, from one mile to five, is placed in a strong cylinder that can be made air and water tight. The first operation is to exhaust the cylinder; when a vacuum is formed a column of water is allowed to rush in and fill up all the holes and crevices formerly filled with air. The cable in this state is tested with a delicate galvanometer and noted. A pressure is then applied equal to the pressure of a column of water the height of which is equal to the depth of the sea where the cable is intended to be laid, whether it be the Atlantic or any other. This is continued for a certain time, when the wire is again tested. On the pressure being removed another testing takes place, and it is affirmed that if the smallest defect in the insulating medium, or mechanical injury, however minute and invisible to the naked eye, then exists, its detection is inevitable. Should it be defective it can be removed and repaired, and the manufacture proceeded with. Finally, it appears that the whole expense of the testing falls short of 5s. per cent of the cost for making the cable.

"THE CHOICE OF PARIS—AN IDYLL," BY MISS FLORENCE CAXTON, IN THE PORTLAND GALLERY.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

"THE CHOICE OF PARIS: AN IDYLL." BY MISS FLORENCE CLAXTON.

THE Pre-Raphaelites are smartly satyrnised by Miss Florence Claxton in an elaborate sketch, exhibited at the Portland Gallery, which, as an artistic curiosity, we engrave on another page. The picture, as will be seen, is divided into two parts—one interior, the other exterior—by a brick wall. In the interior, the left-hand compartment, the principal group is that of Mr. Millais presenting the apple to a Pre-Raphaelite belle-ideal, whom he prefers to a figure of Raphael's (from the well-known picture of "The Marriage of the Virgin"), and to a pretty, modern, English girl, dressed in the mode of the day, with plaited hair and crinoline complete. He carries in his hand a volume of Mr. Ruskin's, and on the ground is a treatise "On Beauty," by the same author. On the floor, also, are some of the famous apple-blossoms which Mr. Ruskin invoked the artists of England to paint, and the onions, as painted by Hunt, which that gentleman was so enthusiastic about last year. Behind these we see another Pre-Raphaelite worthy examining the feet of a female through a manifying-glass, the textural surface of which he is copying minutely in his sketch-book. In the background at this side is an artist of the middle ages thrusting one of Raphael's apostles out of the door; and on the opposite side are the portraits of Raphael, Sir Joshua Reynolds, and Van Dyck, with their faces turned to the wall, whilst those of Millais, Ruskin, and—Barnum are exhibited underneath them to the homage of the public, whilst a mediæval figure, reclining on a sofa, proclaims their ascendancy through a trumpet. In the looking-glass over the mantelpiece is seen reflected the window on the opposite side of the room, and through that window is discovered the vision of a lady and gentleman walking up a gravel-path to church. The countenance of the dandy sipping his tea at the left of the fireplace is intended to express the bitterest feelings of horror and jealousy at this to him unwelcome apparition. It will be recollected that in a picture recently produced by Mr. Calderon a lovelorn lady is represented as about to faint against the garden wall, having just caught a glimpse of her lover presenting a flower to a girl on the other side of the wall. In Miss Claxton's "Idyll" the hapless fair one sees through the brick wall, for the flower is being presented to her rival (who munches an apple) inside the room, whilst she is standing outside in a Pre-Raphaelite attitude of intense affliction. A little beyond this figure is seen an artist making a careful study of a brick by the aid of an opera-glass. Looking upwards, we discern a young lady who is being dragged in at the window by the hair of the head, having lent too favourable an ear to the serenading monk beneath. Her fiery red hair has partly given way under the severity of the tension to which it is subject. Behind this figure is the famous Sir Ysumbras of 1857, and in the foreground a pic-nic, where Mr. Hunt's "Scapegoat" is anxiously waiting for some of the milk which a female (somewhat after one of the figures in Mr. Millais's "Spring") is drinking. The grave-digging nun, and the sprawling figure of the girl sucking a straw, in the foreground on the right, will at once be recognised as of the same paternity. This crowded little composition will afford much amusement to the artistic world and those who are up in professional incidents and tradition. There are some follies which are better met by ridicule than argument, and Pre-Raphaelism is of them.

THE TRADE AND POPULATION OF BARBADOES.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.)

IN your Periodical dated April 7, 1860, just brought by the mail-steamer, I notice a misstatement in the remarks accompanying the excellent Sketch of the portion of our city laid waste by the desolating fire of the 14th of February last, which I beg leave to correct. You remark—"Barbadoes appears to have declined both in its population and in its trade." Now, I beg leave to inform you that the reverse of the above is the case. We are now the most densely-populated portion of the earth, not even excepting China, our population being at this time about 140,000; and, although we lost 18,000 by the cholera six years since (principally of the labouring class), so large a number is not missed. The neighbouring islands every year relieve us of numbers of our redundant peasantry, who emigrate at the earnest solicitations of, and for premiums offered by, agents who come hither to promote that object. With regard to its trade, I do not overrate the amount when I say that its imports are double what they were thirty years since, which may be realised from the fact that, although we have an import duty now of only three per cent ad valorem, our revenue from all sources has risen from forty or fifty thousand pounds sterling to about one hundred and twenty thousand pounds sterling, and we have generally a surplus of revenue varying from fifteen to thirty thousand pounds per annum, notwithstanding the continual outlet we have in the way of additions to our official staff, increased pay and number of our clergy, the increased grants for educational purposes, and for public works and improvements of various kinds. The number of chapels, both of the Established Church and Dissenters, has also largely increased, as well as schools of every grade. We are also establishing a waterworks company, with a capital of sixty thousand pounds, for the purpose of supplying Bridgetown with pure water from springs fifteen miles distant.

With regard to our products, to give an adequate idea of our increased prosperity, I will only compare the amount of our principal article of export, sugar, for the year 1829, which was about twenty-three thousand hogsheads, whereas for the year 1858 we exported upwards of fifty thousand hogsheads. These facts speak volumes and require little comment upon them. In fact, the continued and increasing prosperity of Barbadoes is constantly cited by the anti-slavery party in England as an overwhelming evidence of the benefit which has attended the emancipating of the slaves of bygone years, many of whom are now holders of freeholds of considerable value. I hope the vindication of my native land will plead its own excuse for troubling you. W. R. BAILEY.

Bridgetown, May 10.

MAILS FOR THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA BY CANADIAN MAIL PACKETS VIA LONDONDERRY.—The following notice has been issued from the General Post Office:—"The Canadian mail-packets, leaving Liverpool every Wednesday, will in future call to embark and land mails at Londonderry, instead of at Queenstown. Supplementary mails for Canada and the United States will continue to be made up at this office every Wednesday evening, containing letters, &c., posted or arriving in London up to the usual post hour on that day, and will be forwarded to Londonderry, to be put on board the Canadian mail-packet, together with all other correspondence reaching Londonderry, on Thursday morning."

EARTHQUAKE IN PERU.—The Atrato brings intelligence from the Pacific: from Callao April 27, Paita May 1, and Guayaquil May 2. The papers were full of the particulars of a great earthquake which had occurred at Lima and Callao. One account dated from Callao says:—"A heavy shock occurred about two in the morning, which lasted eighty seconds. It was said to be the heaviest shock that had been experienced since the submerging of old Callao, and the general opinion is that Lima and Callao cannot stand a much heavier shaking. On Sunday, at one p.m., the ground began to shake in good earnest, but lasted only fifteen seconds, doing in that short space of time the estimated damage in Lima of one million of dollars, in Callao about twenty thousand, and in Chorillos about forty thousand, and destroying several estates in Caneto, which may be set down at two hundred thousand dols. In Manta trees were rooted up out of the ground, and one of the mountains close by was rent in two, and produced a volcano of hot fœtid water. The earthquake then took a northern course. The greatest effect was in Caneto; the greatest state of alarm exists. All the public squares are occupied by families, who prefer the open air to their insecure houses. Up to the present time slight shocks continue to be felt. I have counted twenty-eight, but there have been many more. On Monday in Callao an alarm was raised that the sea was receding from the shore, and presenting the same phenomenon as in 1794, during and preceding the sinking of old Callao. People were to be seen running about greatly distracted, and a general panic prevailed. All the roads leading out of Callao were lined with affrighted sinners fleeing from the wrath to come. Special trains were running all day, carrying away hundreds to Lima, whilst the most devoted or fanatic went to Bella Vista, and took from the church the image of Senor del Mar—the same that was used in 1794. A procession was formed, accompanied with music and a guard of honour, and the image that was to calm the sea and bring it back to a proper sense of its duty was carried down to the mole with all the pomp and ceremony the Church could afford. The same evening a proclamation was issued by the Prefect calling the inhabitants back to their homes, assuring them the alarm was false; and that, if the sea began to show symptoms of overflowing the city, the fact would be announced by the firing of three cannons, so that there would be time to escape. As yet the greater portion who left Callao have not returned. In Lima the shaking and rumbling still continue, and the panic is much greater there than here. The priests are preaching in the open air to the people. Another account says that walls were cracked, roofs fallen in, people wounded, and churches were left in such a condition that they will have to be pulled down. No person can imagine the terrible effects of such a scene who was not here during the panic. More than fifty shocks were experienced in seventy-two hours, and the oscillations caused a moving to and fro with such a force that it appeared as if the earth would open and bury us all. There is not a dwelling in Callao, Lima, or Chorillos that has not suffered damage."

A KNIGHT OF CLAPHAM.—We have stated, at least a hundred times, that a King can be castled after he has been in check.

W. H. A.—Your mistake is in not perceiving that Black has two K Bishop's Pawns. The Kt at White Q's 5th cannot, of course, capture the Pawn at Black's K's Bishop's second square, but he can, and does, take that at K's Bishop's 5th.

ERRATUM.—In the first of the two games in our last Number M. Anderssen, by mistake, is made to play the white men, and to win the game. In reality, it appears that M. de Rivière played the white men, and to him are the honours of victory due.

WEST YORKSHIRE CHESS ASSOCIATION.—This gathering, which is the great event of the year to the Yorkshire chess amateurs, came off at Bradford on Saturday, the 19th ult., and may be said to have been a very successful one, bringing together as it did most of the leading players connected with the various Yorkshire clubs. The saloon of St. George's Hall was open for chess play as early as ten o'clock in the morning, and amongst the Bradford gentlemen present we observed the following:—S. Laycock, Esq., the president of the association for the present year; B. Broughton, Esq., the vice-president; J. A. Heselton, Esq., the honorary secretary; and Messrs. M. E. Werner, H. Ammelburg, Landolphe, Miligan, &c. The Huddersfield Club was represented by D. Marsden, Esq., the president; D. A. Cooper, Esq., the vice-president; Mr. Walter Parratt, honorary secretary; and Messrs. J. Watkinson, J. P. Roberton, Beerensson, and M. Liebmann. From Leeds came John Rhodes, Esq., the president of the Leeds Chess Club; and Messrs. Cadman, Myers, and Bishop. Wakefield sent as its representatives E. Shepherd, Esq., the president of the club; and Messrs. W. H. B. Tomlinson, W. Hunter, J. W. Young, W. L. Robinson, &c. From Halifax were Mr. J. C. Wainhouse, &c. Messrs. E. Thorold and Birchall attended from Sheffield, and Messrs. Burrow and Armistead from Settle. Last, though not least (at any rate as regards chess talent), there was present from London Herr Harrwitz. Two tournaments were arranged of eight players each, the first eight consisting of leading players, and the second of players somewhat inferior. The former eight were drawn in the first round as follows:—Mr. E. Thorold against Mr. W. Parratt, Mr. J. Watkinson against Mr. Bishop, Mr. Cadman against Mr. Tomlinson, and Mr. Hunter against Mr. Birchall. Mr. Thorold defeated Mr. Parratt after a prolonged contest. Mr. Watkinson was similarly successful against Mr. Bishop. Messrs. Cadman and Hunter achieved victories over their respective antagonists. In the second round the lots were thus:—Mr. Thorold against Mr. Hunter, and Mr. Cadman against Mr. Watkinson. Mr. Thorold succeeded in winning his game with Mr. Hunter. In the deciding game with Mr. Cadman, Mr. Watkinson, by a hastily-played move, at the very commencement of the game, was so unfortunate as to lose his Queen, and in consequence resigned in a few moves afterwards. The two winners, Messrs. Cadman and Thorold, now played for the prize, a set of chessmen and board, and Mr. Thorold proved himself the better man. This is the second time Mr. Thorold has thus distinguished himself, he having carried off the honours at the tournament held at the Huddersfied meeting last year. Mr Harrwitz entered the lists against John Rhodes, Esq., of Leeds, giving the odds of the pawn and two moves. After a very fine game of three hours' duration, Mr. Rhodes made a move which laid himself open to a forced mate in two moves. Mr Harrwitz next encountered twelve players at twelve boards. This encounter excited great interest, and was witnessed in apparent astonishment by numerous lookers-on. Mr Harrwitz's play was characterised by its usual brilliancy and accuracy, and he defeated eleven of his adversaries, losing at the twelfth board to Mr. Hunter, of Wakefield. An immense number of games were contested between the visitors present, but of which we could take no account. At six o'clock the company, upwards of seventy in number, adjourned for tea and coffee, with substantial accompaniments, after which some routine business was transacted, and Leeds was selected as the town for the next meeting of the association in 1861. Chess play was then resumed and kept up with great spirit to an advanced hour.

The following Game, in which Mr. HARRWITZ gave the odds of the Q's Knight to Mr. WERNER, of Bradford, was played on this occasion, and attracted very general attention.

THE PRINCE OF WALES AND OUR NORTH AMERICAN COLONIES.

THE visit of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to our North American possessions is not a pleasure excursion nor a Court ceremonial. It is an historical event of the gravest political importance, and will in perpetuity mark an epoch in colonial annals. The year 1860 will be memorable as the first in which the heir apparent to the Crown of these realms honoured with his presence one of our transmarine possessions, and that pre-eminent for loyalty and inflexible attachment to the mother country. Such an occasion invites us to throw a retrospective glance over our past connection with this portion of the North American continent. Canada was not originally an English colony. In 1536 Jacques Cartier, the celebrated Breton mariner, was the first European who beheld the hill Mont Real, where now stands the opulent city of Montreal. In 1608 Quebec was founded by merchant adventurers belonging to Dieppe and St. Malo, the expedition being conducted by the illustrious Champlain, who gave his name to the beautiful lake in the State of New York which perpetuates his memory. He it was who first established the authority of France on the banks of the St. Lawrence. In 1629 this heroic pioneer of Canadian civilisation was compelled to surrender Quebec to the English, by capitulation, one hundred and thirty years before its final conquest by General Wolfe; but, as peace had been signed between England and France in Europe before this first capture had been effected, the capital of Canada was restored to the vanquished, who spread their dominions far and wide, and by the zeal of devoted missionaries carried the cross into the wilderness. When, therefore, the whole province came into our possession by the valour which stormed and triumphantly held the formidable Heights of Abraham, it was inhabited by a mixed population, differing in race and religion, Canada East being French in character and traditions, Canada West being British. They were also distinguished as the Lower and the Upper Province, and placed under separate provincial Governments, an English Viceroy being placed at the head of each. When the American colonies confederated themselves into the United States, the eleventh article of that confederation stipulated that "Canada, according to the confederation, and joining in the measures of the United States, shall be admitted into and entitled to the advantages of this Union." Canada declined the offer, remaining loyal to the British Crown, from which fidelity she has never swerved.

In 1812 the province was invaded by the American General Hull, when the volunteers nobly took up arms and repulsed the enemy; and at the battle of Queenston Heights, where the English General, Sir Isaac Brock, was slain in the very moment of victory, the native militia emulated the British troops in discipline and courage, and night with honour and justice have inscribed "nulli secundus" on their banners. When this war broke out the Cabinet of Washington had completely mistaken the spirit of the provincials. Dr. Eustis, the United States' Secretary at War, said, "We can take the Canadas without soldiers; we have only to send officers into the provinces, and the people, disaffected towards their own Governments, will rally round our standard. The Hon. Henry Clay, one of the greatest of American celebrities, was equally sanguine of success and equally mistaken in judgment. "It is absurd," said that statesman, "to suppose that we shall not succeed in our enterprise against the enemy's provinces; we have the Canadas as much under our command as Great Britain has the ocean. I am not for stopping at Quebec or any where else, but I would take the whole continent from them and ask them no favours." Canadian loyalty frustrated these vaunting hopes, and Mr. Clay himself was one of the Commissioners who gladly signed the treaty of peace. In 1837, when Mackenzie's Rebellion broke out, similar attachment to the mother country animated the population, and treason was promptly suppressed. During the Crimean war Canada raised a egiment for her Majesty's service, and the unexpected cessation of hostilities alone deprived it of the opportunity of displaying its courage against the legions of Russia; but it remains permanently enrolled in the Royal army. A generous subscription on behalf of the survivors of the Indian mutiny attested sympathy with their unmerited misfortunes, and still further proved how warmly the heart of Canada beat towards Old England. These facts abundantly prove the intensity of national feeling that pervades our North American possessions, and ensure an enthusiastic reception for the Prince of Wales.

Though this steady attachment to the British Crown may be deemed universal, local divergences of opinion have frequently arisen between the Upper and Lower provinces, the consequence of difference of race and religion, and of some fancied collision of interests. It was, therefore, a measure of wise policy to put an end to their separate Governments; and in 1841, under the viceroyship of Lord Sydenham, they were incorporated together under one Parliament, each province returning an equal number of representatives; and it was agreed that the Parliamentary Sessions should every alternate four years be held at Quebec and Toronto, the two capitals. Thus both parties were placed in Legislative equality, but from natural causes this arrangement could not continue for ever. West Canada has increased in numbers since 1841, while East Canada has remained nearly stationary. The former demands additional representation, which the latter refuses, insisting that the Constitutional Act of 1841 must be construed as a permanent compact, not admitting of any modification so long as the Union exists. This controversy has given rise to what is known as the "double majority" question. Other leading political questions, as upon ambulatory Parliaments, as expensive and inconvenient, on account of the periodical removal of the archives. The force of this argument was generally felt, but each of the cities had claimed a preference for itself, and such was the difficulty of commanding a sufficient majority of votes for a new site that the exhausted disputants determined to refer the choice of a future capital to her gracious Majesty, who selected Ottawa, which was then at first resisted, but at length obeyed. Other purely local objects still float about political circles and divide them; but none have as yet acquired solidity. Some desire a dissolution of the Union of 1841—the party being led by Mr. Dorion; while others desire representation according to population; to defeat that project others advocate a general alliance of all the North American provinces under a federation similar to that of the United States in form, but still recognising the imperial supremacy of Great Britain. One of the latest schemes was proposed during last year by the Honourable William Merit, and to carry it out he gave notice of the following motion in Parliament:—"That an address be presented to her Majesty praying that her Majesty may be pleased to authorise his Excellency the Governor-General to take immediate steps for the election, by the Parliamentary electors of the provinces, of twenty-four delegates (twelve from each province) to a general convention, charged with the preparation of a constitution for the future government of Canada, and for the submission of the same, when prepared, for the approval or rejection of the people of the province, and subsequently of the Imperial Government."

Finally, there is a small knot of crotchety politicians—mainly influenced by commercial considerations, and these badly defined—who would prefer becoming an integral part of the United States. This last scheme would find favour with the northern section of the Republic, as it would give to it the St. Lawrence, the whole of the lakes, and the noble harbour of Halifax; but it would not be consented to by the South, as it would destroy the slave balance of power in Congress.

Such local differences of opinion will always exist in free States, and in Canada, as in England, there is a class of restless and ambitious men eager to create political capital out of imaginary grievances. The vast majority of the colonists, however, gratefully acknowledge that the mother country has granted to them the pleasing power of self-government. They vote and pay their own taxes, enact and administer their own laws, and enjoy without stint the full measure of British liberty. Under the Constitution Act they do as they please within their own territory and the laws which thus frame to the very verge of what is allowed, at the same time, as strong as iron. We may best judge of their real freedom and progress by the acts of the united Legislature. Within the last few years they have secularised the clergy reserves and abolished all seigneurial tenure; by the former ensuring religious equality, by the latter destroying the last badges of feudalism. They have wonderfully improved their municipal institutions and organised a most efficient militia. They have constructed new and deepened old canals, illumined them with lighthouses, and established ocean steamers from Montreal and Quebec to Liverpool. They have codified their laws and decentralised their judiciary system. Geological surveys have revealed to them their mineral and metallic wealth, while railways have extended their power of locomotion and transport. Canada has been pre-eminently wise in the attentions and liberality she has bestowed on her educational establishments, the foresight which has built schools rendering unnecessary the multiplication of gaols. This rapid glance at their past career is the best evidence that can be given of their social and political independence, and proves, among other numerous instances, what energy freedom imparts to man.

The principal external object which will engage the attention of the Prince of Wales will, of course, be the opening of the magnificent bridge at Montreal, erected by the genius of Stephenson. It must strike all beholders as the crowning glory of Canadian industry. We will award to it the highest praise, but there are other grand works of imperial magnitude which will, no doubt, be submitted to the mind of his Royal Highness, and be earnestly held in his remembrance. The long-cherished project of uniting all the lakes through navigable channels in one unbroken course to the St. Lawrence, so that a vessel might sail from the inland seas of the West to Liverpool without breaking bulk, would be one of the noblest of engineering enterprises, and in those regions the manufactures of England would secure an almost unbounded consumption. Another plan well worthy of Royal solicitude would be the formation of a continuous line of railway from Halifax to Vancouver, or to New Westminster, the capital of British Columbia, which, passing entirely through British territory, would connect our Atlantic with our Pacific shores, and gives us easy access to China and Japan, to India and the whole Eastern Archipelago. This route, or at least the first part of it, from Halifax to Quebec, was fully appreciated by the late Earl of Durham, when he was Governor-General of Canada; nor has it escaped the attention and approval of the present Duke of Newcastle, Earl Grey, and Earl Elgin. The position has now occupied by Russia, Nicholaiff, on the mouth of the Amoor, by France at Saigon, in Cochin China; and by the United States at Port Townsend, in Puget's Sound, point out that the North Pacific Ocean will be the future basin of Oriental traffic, as the Mediterranean in former times. In this view the railway would prove of inestimable value; and, in order that Canada may bring her full power into action, it may be necessary to call the privileges of the Hudson Bay Company should cease, so that land now retained as the lair of wild beasts that profit may be derived from fur and skin, may be devoted to agricultural uses.

These projects may probably engage the thoughts of the Prince of Wales. His journey is that of an observer, of a recipient of information. It is not to be expected that he is to be bound by promises. He will appear in British North America as a bestower of courtesy, not as a donor of favours. In the loyal and rising colony he will see much to admire, much to kindle emotions of honourable pride. He will meet with every mark of deference due to his princely rank, and of liveliest affection personally to himself and to his most admirable parents. His visit will form an imperishable epoch in Canadian history, and will constitute a new point of departure in the annals both countries for the renewals of old friendships under the happiest auspices, and the confirmation of a loyalty which has never swerved in its willing fidelity and devotedness.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Emperor and Empress proceeded to Lyons yesterday week to meet the Queen of Spain, and returned to Paris on the 31st ult. on Saturday night. Their Majesties' reception at the manufacturing capital during their brief stay there appears to have been of the most cordial description. The Emperor, in his speech to the Municipal Council, declared that the relations between France and England were more friendly than ever. The Emperor of Russia, he said, had given him during the last few days the most satisfactory assurances of his sentiments towards France, which have considerably increased his confidence in the King of Prussia. As to Italy, the affairs of Naples and consulting, moreover, the interest of provinces separated from the rest of the Peninsula by the Apennines. The Emperor, however, added, in a treaty which is about to unite them to France after the solemn vote of the populations. Such, he said, is the state of the political horizon for new acquisitions of territory. The thoughts which animate it, however, are wholly pacific. The Government, he proclaimed, will repress those manœuvres destined to propagate daily the most inexact impressions of its conduct. Nothing, he said, is more false than the alarm which has shaken confidence of Europe. His unique desire is to live in peace with the Sovereigns who are his allies, that is to expend all his care in actively developing the resources of France.

The marriage of the Princess Clotilde with Prince Alphonse de Polignac was celebrated on Tuesday at the Madeleine, the Bishop of Marseilles, who came to Paris expressly for the purpose, officiating at the high altar.

SPAIN.

The treaty with Morocco has been published. The first payment of the indemnity by Morocco will be effected on the 1st of July next.

Don Juan de Bourbon, brother to the Count de Montemolin, refuses to abdicate his claims to the crown of Spain, and has issued a protest to that effect, which has been published in Madrid. This document will be found at page 566 of this week's Supplement.

AUSTRIA.

On Thursday week the ordinary Council of the Empire met in the chapel of the Imperial Palace at Vienna, and were sworn in after High Mass. Count Rechberg and Count Nadasdy took the earliest opportunity of declaring that the political programme of the Hungarians does not involve the severance of the connection of Hungary with Austria, and, with the Austrian monarchy, on the basis of common liberal institutions. Next day the members of the Council were received in the Imperial Palace by the Emperor, who, in a speech recommending important projects to be submitted to the Council, by which a provincial Government would be created for the better management of the Empire, without disturbing the unity of the State, and without specially favouring any single province.

PRUSSIA.

The Prince Regent of Prussia has just visited the Rhenan province to inaugurate the railways from Bingen to Sarrebruck, and from Cologne to Crefeld. At Cologne the Prince delivered a patriotic speech, in which he declared that Prussia would never consent to the cession of a single German fortress to the territory. Baron de Jeanin, Prefect of the Moselle, and General Marcy-Monge, Commander of the Metz, were sent to that place to present their respects to the Prince, in the name of the Emperor of the French. Prince Frederick William accompanied his father, and the Royal party left Cologne at three o'clock on the 25th for Treves, where they were received in the most enthusiastic manner. At seven o'clock the Prince Regent left Treves for Coblentz, at the junction of the Moselle.

The directors of the Colosne and Minden Railway are about to erect equestrian statues of the King of Prussia and the Prince Regent at the gates of the railway-bridge over the Rhine, and the models, prepared by the sculptors Rie and Blanck, have been approved. The statues will be in bronze, eighteen feet high, and will be on pedestals of eighteen feet. It is intended to ornament the bridge with various other works of art.

RUSSIA.

It is said that the measures for the long-expected enfranchisement of the Russian serfs have at length been accepted by the deputies of the nobility, and that the emancipation will be effected during the coming autumn.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

A letter from Warsaw of the 25th of May states that the concentration of the Russian troops on the frontiers of Turkey is an undoubted fact. Besides the 5th corps, which has arrived to occupy a position on the Upper Pruth, a second corps is concentrated in Bessarabia and Podolia, so that when the two corps are united the force will amount to 60,000 men. All soldiers on leave of absence have been warned to hold themselves ready to join their regiments at a moment's notice, but the recruiting service, which has been suspended for the last five years, has not yet been commanded for this year. The Government of the Porte is, on its part, using every effort to form a numerous army, in order to prevent Servia and the Danubian provinces from escaping from its authority and conquering their independence. The Turkish army at present consists of five points. The army of Roumelia is divided into four corps, which occupy a vast extent of ground, from the Herzegovina to Bosnia. The second is more numerous, and guards the frontier of Servia; its head-quarters is at Pristina. The third is composed of 30,000 men, and is concentrated on the Danube, near Widdin, with its reserve at Sophia. The fourth is stationed between the Danube and the Black Sea, that is between Silistria and Kustendjeh. The reserve is at Schumla. The Porte has collected 30,000 men in Thessaly, mostly Redifs, for the purpose of acting against the Greeks in case of necessity.

A despatch from Constantinople, dated Tuesday, informs us that Mukhtar Pasha, Minister of the Civil List, has been appointed Minister of Finance, replacing Hasab Pacha. Chekib Pacha, hitherto Minister without portfolio, succeeds Mukhtar Pacha. Abdoul Bahzani is dead.

The Gottinger Post contains the following news from Constantinople:—"The French and Russian Ambassadors have made a declaration to the effect that their respective Governments fully agree to an independent inquiry by the Porte into the condition of the Christians in Syria, and that they have received instructions to express the satisfaction of their Governments therewith."

The disturbances in Syria are on the increase. Letters from Beyrout to the 5th ult. state that assassinations were committed. The Christians and the Druses had assumed a hostile attitude towards each other. An account by way of Alexandria states that disturbances have taken place at Lebanon, and that the Pacha of Beyrout has not sufficient troops to re-establish order.

UNITED STATES.

The National Republican Convention at Chicago has completed its labours, after a session extending over three days. The first vote for a candidate for the Presidency resulted as follows:—Mr. Seward, 173½; Abram Lincoln, of Illinois, 102; Mr. Bates, of Missouri, 48; Mr. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, 50½; Mr. Dayton, of Ohio, 12; Mr. Chase, of Ohio, 49; Mr. Wade, of Ohio, 3; Mr. Dayton, of New Jersey, 14; Mr. Collamer, of Vermont, 10; and one each for Messrs. Sumner, Hamlin, and Fremont. On the third ballot Mr. Lincoln received 230 votes, or within 1½ of a nomination, whereupon a sufficient number of votes were changed to give him the requisite majority, and he was declared the nominee of the Republican party for the Presidency. Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine, without enthusiasm, Senator Hamlin, of Maine, was nominated on the second ballot, as the candidate for the Vice-Presidency. The vote being:—Hamlin, 367; C. M. Clay, of Kentucky, 86; and Hickman, of Pennsylvania, 12. The "platform" adopted by the Convention is eminently Conservative in its tone. It declares for the principle of Sovereign States from interference with their domestic institutions, condemns the lecture of Mr. Seward, advocates an established tariff, and a relaxation of the naturalisation laws. Messrs. Lincoln and Hamlin are both lawyers, the first about equal age, the latter hanging in his fifty-second year, and the latter fifty-one. It is stated that Mr. Lincoln used, as a youngster, "barefoot-ed, and with ragged trousers, to drive his father's team, and spend his days in splitting rails."

There are now two Presidential tickets in the field—namely, the Union ticket, nominating John Bell, of Tennessee, for President; and Edward Everett, of Massachusetts, for Vice-President; and the Republican ticket, nominating Abram Lincoln, of Illinois, for President; and Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine, for Vice-President.

Slavery and the slave trade have formed the main subjects of discussion in the Senate and House of Representatives; and the debates have been characterised by the customary violence.

Another American ship, laden with 550 slaves, has been captured off the Isle of Pines by the United States Sloops Dodes' cruiser Dodd, and has been taken into Key West. The disposal of her cargo will add to the embarrassments of the Administration at Washington.

The ceremony of exchanging ratifications of the treaty with Japan took place on the 22nd ult. at the State Department. It consisted merely of comparing and certifying the correctness of the copies.

A terrible storm has swept the lakes and the neighbouring country on the 21st ult., and caused damage to the amount of £100,000 in the city alone.

CANADA.

The inhabitants of Montreal are subscribing largely towards providing a fund for entertaining the Prince of Wales. Public meetings have been held, at which the utmost enthusiasm prevailed; and there are hardly in a single house the grand decorations which will be made on the auspicious occasion in the commercial metropolis of Canada will surpass anything of the kind ever attempted in English North America. Other towns and cities are also busy with their preparations, and intend to evince their loyalty in a conspicuous manner.

CHINA.

The accounts from different sources as to the nature of the Chinese answer to the demands of the French and British Governments do not tally. A telegram just received states that the answer was a positive rejection of the ultimatum; whilst we have intelligence by way of Marseilles to the effect that the ultimatum has not been absolutely rejected by the Chinese, and that the Plenipotentiaries have remitted to them a modified ultimatum. This is borne out by the Times, which says that "the answer is that the terms of the reply made to the ultimatum by the General Council at Pekin have not yet transpired; but it must have been conciliatory and, on the whole, approaching to a compliance with the ultimatum, for after thinking over the subject for a week the Plenipotentiary sent, on the 14th inst., a second communication, signifying that the conditions previously specified in the ultimatum were unalterable, as being the minimum of her Majesty and further intimating that, if the Chinese Government would yield immediate compliance with it, the demand for indemnity would not be pressed. All the stories about the ultimatum having been insolently rejected, or sent back torn into seven pieces, may be safely considered as totally unfounded. There is little doubt, however, that the Chinese do not intend full compliance to this second requisition, the matter will be handed over to the same Commissioners appointed to Chief Kiang, and one day during the past fortnight has seen the arrival of steamers and sailing vessels with large bodies of troops from Calcutta and Singapore. Nothing is known relative to the preparations being made by the Chinese.

From Japan accounts are unsatisfactory. The foreign residents at Yokohama consider themselves in danger. There was a report that the Regent had been attacked and wounded by the retainers of the Prince of Mito, who is a partisan to the position of Japan, and is said to be unfriendly to foreigners.

REJECTION OF THE BRITISH ULTIMATUM BY THE CHINESE.—An important correspondence relative to the quarrel with China has been published. It contains Mr. Bruce's recent letter to Lord John Russell, announcing the failure of the negotiations with the Chinese Government. His despatch containing the ultimatum was also addressed to the Secretary of State at Pekin, and the reply of the Chinese authorities, together with terms offered to them, are also published.

An interesting effort has been lately made by the English community at Constantinople to found a Literary and Scientific Institution. It has been also proposed to establish a paper, to be called La Gazette Littéraire and Science. His Excellency Sir Henry L. Bulwer has expressed his hearty approval of the movement.

LITERIC FAIR.—The commercial transactions this year at the great Leipsic fair have been more extensive as an entrepôt, more concise, rapidity and facility of communication enabling persons now to transact business which was formerly monopolised by the fair. The book trade had a considerable part in the affairs carried on at the fair. No books are now sold there, but the last week of business is devoted to the settlement of accounts by the publishers and dealers who collect together from all parts of Germany. A catalogue of the fair has been published yearly for the last three centuries. That of 1564 mentions only 326 German publications; in 1600, 1607; in 1700, 1695; in 1760, 1317; in 1814, 2115; in 1830, 2930; in 1850, 11,000; in 1848, 16,168; and in 1856, 8787.

The young Prince Christian William of Denmark, son of the Crown Prince, has just been admitted as a pupil to the Royal Naval School at Copenhagen, after undergoing the required examinations. This is the first time that a Prince of the reigning family of Denmark has competed for admission to a public school.

GARIBALDI'S EXPEDITION.

SUCCESS has crowned Garibaldi's enterprise—the most daring, perhaps, recorded in history; and it is not too much to say that Garibaldi is virtual master of Sicily. In this case, as in numerous other cases, the happy audacity of genius has triumphed where a far more formidable expedition, with less dash, would have signally failed. As stated in our last Impression, Garibaldi, on the 27th ult., pounced upon Palermo, of which he retains possession. We will endeavour to bring into some order the contents of the numerous reports, more or less accurate, concerning the capture of this city; giving first, however, by way of clearing the ground, a brief summary of the proceedings immediately preceding that eventful day.

The march to the heights around Palermo was a succession of combats. Garibaldi's force, augmenting every day, and spread out to the right and left of Monreale, distracted the attention of the enemy. In Palermo itself there was great fear on the side of the enemy. Gates were walled up, valuables embarked, and emigration of obnoxious persons; the police had disappeared by the 25th; the ships of war were brought up to command certain portions of the town, and the defensible places, within and without, were occupied. Lanza's force was estimated at 20,000 men and forty guns. On the 24th an action was fought on the heights about Parco and San Martino, and curious observers on board ship watched with interest the progress of the battle, marked by the wavering line of smoke which gradually came down the mountain-side. At night the hills were ablaze with watchfires. All this time the Neapolitan Government sent forth lying telegrams, marked official. At length, on the 27th, Garibaldi closed with his enemies.

Palermo (as we learn from a correspondent of the Morning Star) is divided into four main parts by two large streets intersecting each other in the form of a cross, and leading to the four principal gates. To the south-west is the sea and Porta Felice; to the north-east is Monreale and Porta Nuovo; to the north-west is La Favorita and Porta Maqueda; to the south-east the road to Messina and Porta Termini. The street which leads straight from the Porta Nuovo to the Porta Felice, that is to say, to the sea, is called the street of Toledo, and, in its lowest part, near the sea, the Cassaro. Outside the Porta Nuovo a suburban avenue stretches far into the north-east, adorned on both sides with magnificent villas belonging to the Palermitan nobility, but now nothing but a long line of ruins, stripped of everything, and finally burnt down by the King's soldiers. Outside this gate is also part of the old walls of Palermo, which is still left standing, to be met with, as well as the palace of the Duke of Aumale, the Swiss barracks, and, on the left-hand side, the immense square of barracks, which is called Quattroventi. This entire suburb is called "La Paperita."

In this suburb it was that General Lanza had concentrated about 18,000 men, protected by the two barracks, by the ruins of the old walls, by the Royal Palace and the battery which had been planted near the Porta Nuovo, besides by trenches and advanced redoubts erected on the main road to Monreale, as well as by other works right and left of this road, on all of which cannon had been planted. From two to three thousand men had besides been distributed between the Royal Palace and the Cathedral, inside the Porta Nuovo; 500 occupied the Convent of the Jesuits in the Toledo-street; 2000 were encamped on the Marine Parade, close to the Porta Felice and the Cassaro; others were at the Custom House, at Castellamare, at the Revenue Office, at the Palace Pretorio, and at the hotel of the "Commandant du Place," the Quattro Centoni—that is to say, at the crossing-point of the two large streets which cut Palermo into four quarters—the force amounting altogether to rather more than 25,000 men. Thus far about the stage, and one part of the actors: now for the other part, and the drama.

At about half-past three o'clock in the morning, on Sunday, the 27th of May, the Royal troops were all up and under arms; each at his particular post. A strong detachment of lancers, sent out to reconnoitre in the direction of Misilmieri, and a detachment of dragoons, sent out likewise to reconnoitre in the direction of Monreale, had returned to sound the alarm, having been received with discharges of musketry by advanced posts of the insurgents, and having observed an extraordinary movement in the encampment of the latter. At half-past three, indeed, the first dawn just rising on the horizon, the foremost sentries of the Neapolitan army gave the signal of the enemy's advance. Garibaldi had divided his forces into three columns. He himself commanded that of the centre, which followed the main road; Baron Stocco, though wounded at Calatafimi, commanded the left wing, and Sirtori or La Masa the right. Others say that Bixio, and not Stocco, was at the head of the left wing. Their insignificant artillery was masked by the central column. The distance between each column and the other was about a gunshot. The two wings, which had to pass through vineyards, orchards, and gardens, kept always a little in advance of the centre, the march of all the three columns being directed to the same point. The Royalists, who expected them, received them by a terrible fire of artillery; the insurgents then fell into quick step, without firing a single shot. General Colonna now issued from the barracks, Quattroventi, at the head of a body of cavalry. Garibaldi's column opened, and Colonel Orsini received the charge of the cavalry with grapeshot. The cavalry fled in disorder, and Garibaldi resumed the advance, following on their heels, thus getting the protection of the wall formed by the flying enemies against the fire of their own comrades. He soon, however, found himself in face of the rifles commanded by General Bosco. A rolling fire was then began. It was now five o'clock in the morning. The position of the insurgents was quite open; that of the Royalists was protected by the ancient walls of Paperita, and behind barricades and redoubts. The Sicilian patriots, novices in a pitched battle, appeared a little shaken. Garibaldi had the charge sounded—it seems to be his panacea for such an emergency—and on they went against the enemy, thrusting forward the bayonet. A great massacre ensued. General Catoldo rushed to the assistance of Generol Lanza, at the head of the troops distributed over the town. The butchery lasted altogether up to ten o'clock. The Royalists had lost all the cannon placed in the advanced redoubts. The three columns of the insurgents had mixed into one irregular mass. At ten o'clock the retreat of the Royalists towards the Porta Nuovo became general. Stocco or Bixio took the Swiss barracks, where two companies were made prisoners, who presented their arms to the cry of "Viva l'Italia!" The right wing of the insurgents attacked the fortified barracks, Quattroventi, where eight pieces of artillery were seized, and a large number of prisoners was made, a General—Salzano or Landi—among them. The insurgents, at the same time, found great stores of arms in these barracks. The Royal troops were now rushing along Toledo-street in great disorder.

It was now that the alarm-bells began to peal in all the clock-towers of the city as if by enchantment. The people descended into the streets and began to erect barricades and to harass the troops. On the Foro Borbonico, or square of the Royal Palace, General Lanza attempted to form a square of troops which he had drawn from Castellamare, and to stop the disorderly flight of his army. At the same moment the Italian tricolour appeared at the top of the Ministerial hotel, situated on this very place, as well as on the top of the cathedral. The General gave orders to fire a volley against the windows of the hotel, but in the mean time the tricolour had made its appearance on the Palaces Linguaglossa, Carini, Arouri, Risa, Rudini, Lardiria, Aceto, and on every house in Toledo street. The troops, who fled through this street, were mowed down by projectiles of all possible kinds thrown at them from the windows. Whole pianofortes came down upon them, flower-pots, nicknacks, aquariums, and boiling water. This was the part the women took in the war. The men sent down shots from pistols and fowling-pieces, or descended into the street. This hot reception caused the retreating troops to turn from their way and to attempt an escape through the street Cinturinari, the Place Carafella, the Place Fonderia, the street Mercata, and to seek an asylum in the fort of Castellamare. Part of them had already shut themselves up in the Royal Palace near the Porta Nuovo.

The "Borbonians" having thus disappeared, the insurgent force made its appearance at the Porta Nuovo. At this moment the men-of-war stationed at the Porta Felice began to fire with grapeshot right down along Toledo-street. The other vessels at anchor in the roadstead and the fort of Castellamare began to shell the interior of the town. It was now one o'clock. Garibaldi took a rest at the Porta Nuovo, occupying the suburbs of Paperita; but the men under the command of Stocco or Bixio, and the company La Massa, went round the town on the northern road, and made their appearance at La Favorita, near the Porta Maqueda, which is not far off from the fort of Castellamare, and opens into the Marine-square. They were provided with some pieces of artillery. Another column turned to the right, and went up to the gate Porta Termini. As soon as Garibaldi had made sure that his friends had reached these two places he entered the city, and advanced up to the great crossing point, Quattro Cantoni, under the grapeshot of the fleet. He established his head-quarters at the hotel of the "Commandant du Place." His general staff took the Palace Pretorio for themselves, where the revolutionary committee of Palermo was already assembled. The fire of the fleet and of the castle had ceased, or, to speak more correctly, had slackened. The Consular body and the commanders of foreign vessels in the port—the Austrians among the number—had almost compelled General Lanza to put a stop to the bombardment. The damage done is not considerable. Palermo is built altogether of hewn stone, and its structures are very substantial. It was now five o'clock.

The King's forces, pushed back towards the sea, placed themselves again in order on the Marine-square, and those that were found to be most demoralised were shut up in the fort or in the Custom House, in the Revenue Office, and in the Cassaro, where the guns of the vessels stationed at the Porta Felice protected them. Garibaldi was master of the whole of that part of the town which extends in the north from the Porta Termini to the Porta Maqueda. The insurrection covered the town; everywhere there were barricades to oppose the return of the troops to the quarters already freed from them. The soldiers in the Royal palace were cut off from the remainder of the army, and regularly besieged. No effective resistance could be expected from them.

At six o'clock the bombardment recommenced, the shots, however, being fired at long intervals only, and just as if merely for conscience sake, and for preventing the insurgents from attacking the Royal troops. This went on the whole night. On the morning of the 28th Garibaldi made his preparations to attack the fort of Castellamare, the fortifications of which are not of the best kind on the land side, and already was the siege train found at La Flora on its way to the square Della Sanita, to be placed before M. Pojera's workshop, when a messenger of General Lanza presented himself and asked for a suspension of hostilities. It was accorded on conditions not yet known, and half an hour afterwards a frigate left for Naples.

Various rumours are afloat as to the nature of the armistice. According to one account a capitulation has been signed on board the Hannibal between General Lanza and Garibaldi and the revolutionary committee, which stipulates that the Neapolitan army, 25,000 strong, should quit Palermo with all the honours of war, and embark with their matériel on board the Neapolitan squadron. The recommencement of hostilities was reported early in the week, but this, it appears, was incorrect, the last despatches from Sicily positively announcing that the armistice had been indefinitely prolonged.

The direct steamer from Messina to Marseilles brings news to the 3rd inst. The city was deserted. All merchandise had been embarked. All the Consuls had left excepting M. Boulard, the French Consul, who was transporting his effects to the Descartes, on board of which he would retire as soon as the city should be besieged or become the theatre of fighting. The Supreme Committee of Palermo had announced, in the name of the Dictator, that a vote will be taken on the question of annexation to Sardinia. The inhabitants of the towns in insurrection had requested the neighbouring communes to send in provisions. The whole of Palermo was barricaded and fortified. Garibaldi had a great number of grenades at his disposal. Other Royal troops stationed in the neighbourhood of the Custom House had gone over to Garibaldi with arms and ammunition. Influence was also exercised by Girabaldi's agents in the other portions of the Neapolitan army. It was said that there 2000 sick and wounded among the Royal troops. One thousand volunteers from Cagliari had disembarked at Marsala. The English Admiral had announced the signature of an armistice. In the affair of Catania the peasants fought well, but were ultimately repulsed. The Neapolitans lost 200 men. Orders had been given to the various bands of insurgents to concentrate for the final combat. The force under the orders of Garibaldi is now said to amount to about 29,000 men, well armed.

Other towns in Sicily have risen, the inhabitants everywhere shouting "Italy for ever! Victor Emmanuel for ever!"

THE LATE GALES.

Another gale rose on Saturday and blew up to Sunday evening.

Many vessels in the Pool suffered severely, and several boats were stove in and swamped. The roads and pavement were strewn with branches of trees wherever any were growing near, and numbers were torn up by the roots even in the comparative shelter of London streets. A fine elm at the Archbishop's Palace at Lambeth was snapped in two. Two men had to be taken to Westminster Hospital from blows on the head received from falling chimney-pots.

At Brighton, which escaped the first gale, a house was blown down, and windows were blown in. A brig ran ashore to the eastward of the Chain Pier, and by means of rockets a line was conveyed to the crew, and they were safely landed. The brig was knocked to pieces in a few minutes. Another vessel was driven ashore opposite the Albion Hotel. One man was lost in this case; and a mechanic was killed on shore in helping to get out the life-boat, by the boat-carriage passing over him.

Near Chichester harbour a brig went down with all on board.

The lamentable effects of the gale of Monday week were only partially known when we gave our account last week. It seems that there were no less than three hundred and fifty wrecks. Out of the nine ships which went down in Yarmouth roads on that Monday not a soul was saved. A barque called the Jane Green went on to the Black Hall Rocks, Hartlepool, and six out of eleven of those on board were drowned. A tug left Sunderland on Sunday and has not since been heard of. At Moerdyk, near Flushing, a Dutch excursion-steamer foundered, with eighty souls on board, of whom only three escaped. Several vessels have been passed in the North Sea bottom upwards. A steamer arrived at Tonning reports passing through a mile and a half of wreck off Lowestoft. The northern ports have lost at least one hundred seamen. As regards the damage to property it is too various and extensive to enumerate.

The Times devotes a leader to the late storms, and offers some practical advice to those "who go down to the sea in ships." Our contemporary is of opinion that the wreck register of the year will be heavy beyond precedent, but urges that the disasters were to a great extent preventible. "Nothing (it says) is now more plainly established than that coming storms may be accurately predicted from the evidence of the barometer. The barometer began to sink as early as the 21st of the month, and declined daily, till even on the 26th it was ominously low. On Whit-Sunday, however, the 27th, by five in the afternoon, the signs were such as the most heedless should have observed. The glass showed a decline so rapidly that in the course of the night a fall of three-quarters of an inch was registered in four hours and a half, while combined with this prognostic was an abrupt change of temperature from sultry heat to almost wintry cold. These tokens told their own tale. The storm was called sudden—so sudden that its unexpected burst was reported to us as one of the prominent features of the phenomenon; but is is now perfectly certain that the very warning which, according to meteorological science, should have preceded such a tornado, coming from such a quarter, did precede it, and might have been proclaimed in time to prevent half its consequences. One of our scientific correspondents, indeed, assures us that a central station for such observations, communicating by telegraph with those points of Ireland and Cornwall where the signs of the heavens are earliest seen, could flash the information of a coming tempest to all parts of the country with as much ease and certainty as the approach of an Atlantic steamer or a gold-ship. It seems plain that with such powers placed providentially in our hands the calamities now endured by our fishermen and coasters might in most instances be avoided. A good barometer in a public situation would inform them exactly what to expect. They would be able to tell whether there was a storm in the air as surely as whether there was a shoal of herrings in the sea; nor can we think they would neglect the opportunity." The Times urges also that greater care should be exercised in procuring well-made cables and anchors, and that the number of life-boat stations should be increased.

The grand review of rifle volunteers by her Majesty is fixed for the 30th instant. Meanwhile Viscount Ranelagh, it is stated, has made arrangements for a grand field-day in Kent on the 23rd instant, when a sham fight will take place, after which the members will dine in bivouac

THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH decided yesterday week, in the case Smith v. Mundy, that if a man sends half of a bank-note to another man the latter acquires no property in the half, and no one has power to enforce the giving up of the other half, but that, on the contrary, till the transmission is complete, both halves remain the property of the sender.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegrams were received through Mr. Reuter's office yesterday (Friday):—

SAVOY AND NICE.—Geneva, Thursday.—Immediately after the annexation of Nice and Savoy, France will address a note to the Powers notifying the fact, and demanding a reply as a recognition of the annexation by Europe.

GARIBALDI'S EXPEDITION.—Paris, Thursday.—The Patrie of to-day says that, according to the latest despatches, nothing had changed at Palermo. The capitulation had not yet been signed. Garibaldi had constituted a Ministry, and had appointed a Governor of Palermo and of the province. He had likewise ordered an extraordinary levy, and had issued many decrees for energetically carrying on the war. One of Garibaldi's proclamations threatened with heavy punishments those who should commit thefts or assassinations.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The whole of the troops who are under orders to proceed to India during the present and following month are to be supplied with cholera-belts previously to embarkation.

Major-General Gascoigne resigns the command of the Dublin district on the 1st of July. No arrangement respecting his successor is yet made, but a rumour, says the Army and Navy Gazette, refers pointedly to Sir Richard Airey, now Quartermaster-General.

The men of the 72nd and 74th Regiments, stationed in Dudhope Barracks, were engaged in rifle practice with blank cartridges in the Barrack-park, when a boy, who was playing, was fatally shot with a pea. A private is in custody charged with culpable homicide.

A fatal accident has occurred at the village of Sholding, about a mile and a half to the west of Deal, through the bursting of a shell fired from Sandown Castle. Some of the Royal Artillery were practising with shell firing, when one of the shells fell and burst near some Coastguardmen who were engaged in piling shot near No. 1 Battery; and one of them (Oxford) was struck by a piece of the shell, and killed on the spot.

The London Volunteers continue to work hard at drill, and seem determined to deserve even higher praise than has been already awarded to them. Last Saturday, notwithstanding that heavy rain was falling, a number of the metropolitan corps met in Hyde Park, and for the first time went through a course of brigade drill. About 2000 are reported to have mustered. They were under the command of Lord Ranelagh, and the manœuvres were remarkably well executed.

Several of the new screw despatch-vessels recently launched, and others now building for the Government at various private yards, are intended to be supplied with Armstrong guns, which will be fitted on gun-carriages of an improved description, constructed for the naval service with a view to counteract the inconvenience arising from the powerful recoil of rifled ordnance and the rolling of a heavy sea. Several pattern gun-carriages, constructed on different principles, both for the naval and military service, have been turned out of the Royal Arsenal, and will be subjected to experiments.

THE NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION.—A meeting of the National Association for the Encouragement of Rifle-shooting was held last Saturday at Willis's Rooms. The Right Hon. Sidney Herbert presided. The meeting was attended by several eminent persons who have taken an interest in the success of the volunteer movement. The association was established for the purpose of forming a central body of communication for all the different volunteer corps in the United Kingdom, and under its auspicies will be held the great rifle-shooting contest at Wimbledon in the course of this year. It was stated by the chairman that the financial prospects of the association were promising, the receipts amounting to more than £3000; but Lord Elcho thought that, considering the heavy expenses likely to be incurred at Wimbledon, the accounts would show a deficit at the close of the year. A letter was read from Lord Lyndhurst showing that truly venerable nobleman's warm interest in the volunteer cause.

CHURCH AND UNIVERSITIES.

The Bishop of London and Mrs. Tait gave a garden party to the metropolitan clergy in the grounds of Fulham Palace on Wednesday afternoon.

The Rev. Richard Wall, Incumbent of St. Anne's, Birkenhead, has been elected Head Master of Brewood Free Grammar School out of seventy candidates.

The Hon. and Rev. Samuel Waldegrave, Canon of Salisbury, and Rector of Barford St. Martins, Wilts, a son of Lord Waldegrave, is to be the new Bishop of Carlisle.

At the recent confirmation held by Bishop Trower at St. James's Church, Devonport, of the 329 candidates, 46 males and six females were from the garrison, and 132 seamen, including six officers, from the men-of-war in the harbour.

TESTIMONIALS.—The Rev. G. R. Gilling has recently received a pocket communion service and salver from the parishioners of Chalgrave, Beds; and the Rev. W. Sutcliffe, M.A., an address on parchment, a set of robes, a handsome silver salver, and a purse containing £60, from the parishioners of Bosley, Cheshire.

The Gazette of yesterday week publishes an order for a congé d'élire empowering the Dean and Chapter of York to elect an Archbishop, and recommending "the Right Rev. Father in God Dr. Charles Thomas Longley, now Bishop of Durham, to be by them elected Archbishop of the said See of York."

The consecration of Wolvercott Church, Oxford, which has been rebuilt with the exception of the tower, took place on Thursday week. The edifice, designed by Mr. Buckeridge, of Oxford, is in the Geometrical Decorated style, contains 292 sittings, and consists of a nave, chancel, north aisle, and south porch.

At a meeting of the electors of the Downing Professorship, Cambridge, held at Lambeth Palace on Wednesday, William Lloyd Birkbeck, Esq., M.A., one of the readers at Lincoln's Inn, and formerly Fellow of Trinity College, was elected Downing Professor in the room of Andrew Amos, Esq., deceased.

The Bishop of Kingston has been employed for six weeks in a visitation of the Bahamas, making a voyage in a little schooner of sixty tons. On April the 21st the Bishop returned to Jamaica and landed at Port Antonio about noon, during market hours, and was cordially greeted by the people. The next day the Bishop preached in the parish church, and confirmed one hundred and thirty persons.

The venerable parish church of Uppingham is about to be restored at a cost of about £4000. This church is peculiarly interesting from the fact that Jeremy Taylor was Rector of Uppingham. The pulpit from which he preached is in existence, although much disfigured by paint, and the interesting associations connected with it have determined the Rector and restoration committee to retain it, although the style in which it is designed is not in accordance with the supposed date of the church. The energetic exertions of the Rev. Chancellor Wales, Rector, the hon. secs., and the committee, have in a short time resulted in subscriptions exceeding £3000.

A new north aisle at Christ Church, Friezland, Yorkshire, was opened by the Bishop of Manchester on Whit-Tuesday. One hundred and sixty-eight persons were confirmed by the Bishop on the occasion, which was also the the tenth anniversary of the consecration. The new aisle adds one hundred and fifty sittings, of full size, to the church, and is built at the sole expense of F. F. Whitehead, Esq. The church, with its schools and parsonage, and endowment of £300 a year, has thus been completed at the expense of Messrs. R. R. Whitehead and Brothers, of Royal George Mills, near Manchester. The cost has been about £16,000.

On Thursday week the first stone of St. Luke's Church, Heywood, Lancashire, was laid by the Rev. W. Hornby, Vicar of St. Michael's-on-Wyre, in the presence of a vast concourse of people. There were ten bands of music, flags were flying from many of the houses, and also from factories and churches. There was a general holiday. A procession was formed in a field in the suburbs of the town, consisting of the children of Sunday schools, clergy, Freemasons, Orangemen, Oddfellows, Order of Ploughmen, Order of Gardeners, &c. The amount already raised in subscriptions is over £8000, and the probable cost of the structure will be £10,000. Yesterday se'nnight a numerous party of gentlemen dined together in the Mechanics' Institution—the Rev. J. Shadwell presiding.

LITERATURE.

THE MAGAZINES FOR JUNE.

Blackwood is solid and instructive this month, but with sufficient lightening of the matter by articles on travel, by fiction, by poetry proper, and a heroic Sayers-Heenan ballad entitled "The Fight for the Belt." The paper under the heading "The Schoolmaster at Home" is written in that tone for which this magazine is now remarkable, that is, without any positive obstructiveness against modern progress, but with a kind of effort to steady and keep straight the machinery which is going at speed. As, for instance, there is an advocacy of an education for the working man, of which he can make practical use without questioning the blessings which literary pursuits are capable of conferring on any man, if he have a taste for them. The section which relates to school-books is suggestive and worthy of consideration. Apropos of Dean Ramsay's conscientiousness, we have a treatise on "Scottish National Character," which is of course written with a certain unction, and is really intelligible and something more, to the man who has previously mastered "Although a good many of the Dean's amusing stories have appeared in the journals, we do not remember to have met with a more amusing specimen of the cool dry sensuous humour of a Scottish cottager :—"A faithful minister of the gospel, being one day engaged in visiting some members of his flock, came to the door of a house where his gentle tapping could not be heard for the noise and contention within. After waiting a little, he opened the door and walked in, saying, with an authoritative voice, 'I should like to know who is the head of this house.' 'Weel, sir,' said the husband and father, 'if ye will come this way, we'll speak to that by-and-by; for ye've just tryin' to settle that point.'" The spirit in which the question of "Universal Suffrage in Savoy and Nice" is treated may be gathered from this statement:—"Accustomed, as the ignorant population of Nice were, to show implicit obedience to the authorities, their condition very much resembled that of the French regiment who, under the liberal institutions of the country, were called upon to give a vote by yes or no. The Colonel, having formed his regiment, thus addressed them :—'Soldiers ! Opinions are free—those among you in favour of 'yes' will present arms ! Attention ! the word of command ! Carry arms ! Present arms !—Recile-sarrié unanimously !" In an article on home politics, entitled "The Balance of Party," we are informed that the balance between the two great parties in the State has been so completely restored within the last few weeks that it is difficult to realise the fact of its having been lost, and to sit apparently comfortably, at an earlier period of the Session. The very latest movement in Parliament cause us to be inclined to indorse that opinion; and we are equally ready to admit the felicity of phrase which, in reference to Mr. Bright's position in Parliament this year, compares it emphatically to that sport which has recently taken a place among our institutions under the designation of "Aunt Sally." The whole of the paper is graphically written, and closes well a very good number.

Fraser has a large collection of articles, implying, of course, proportionate variety. Mr. Spedding's "Suggestions for the Improvement of the Reading Department in the British Museum" would, if adopted, remedy almost the only defect in that grand national study—namely, the delay and difficulty necessary and inseparable from the present system in obtaining books as they are wanted by readers. Without making special reference to the graver articles, it may be mentioned that the gossip which is collected under the heading of "The Literary Suburb of the Eighteenth Century" is pleasant this month, the talk being of Pope, Lady Mary Wortley Montague, and Fielding : and though, perhaps, there is nothing very striking, or even very new, in the strictest sense of the term, in what is given, yet we confess to a fondness for lingering over everything connected with these names. We are told, among other things, that "a small window in the back room of Fielding's house admits us to the humble garden of a wooden-fronted house on the estate of Mr. Swanston, and occupied by some persons named Brown. It bears all the traces of an unpretentious quality. Not a wave of that mighty stream of civilisation whose praises deafen us more than its torrent has intruded to change the aspect or destroy the characteristic of the humble old cottage. Here, in a little parlour, with few small windows looking on a trim Dutch garden with old box borders, in silence broken only by the occasional rustling of the leaves and the singing of the birds in the neighbouring orchards, or by the hasty scratch of Fielding as he sketched the humours of Partridge, 'Tom Jones' was written." Again :—"Fielding's first wife, the original of Sophia and Amelia, was buried in 1744; and the story goes that he and her cockmaid, Mary Maclaine, on that occupy themselves into an attachment for each other, which ended in a marriage the next year. As neither he burial nor the marriage is recorded in the register of our parish, we may assume Fielding as a resident in Twickenham till 1746. On the 25th of February, 1747, was baptised, at Twickenham, 'William, S.S. of Henry Fielding and Mary his wife.' It is, on the whole, agreeable to have Nice treated of in some other than a political point of view; and the article called "Life at Nice" is very pleasantly put together, and is rather tantalising to those who in this wintry season are struggling against the combined influences of hard work and awful weather, to read about "the breeze blowing deliciously, a general stillness creeping on space, while the morning here and there a soft purple tinges the shadows deepening rapidly in the valley, a softer colouring marking every outline, and all shimmering in the orange, crimson, and amber of the waning sunlight.

The Cornhill.—Something has been rumoured about unnecessary abridgment in the scenes of Mr. Thackeray's last tale of "Lovel the Widower." We confess we do not agree in that criticism. There was nothing in the scenes of the story at Heidelberg together of the characters which implied any very lengthened narrative, and in the last volume the interest had reached a point which might very well culminate in the denouement, which, as concluded, is perfectly obvious. The dissertation on the fortification of London bears with it internal evidence of the authorship. It can be none other hand or no other than our most experienced engineer officer. The time, as say rightly, does not have reached us in a way which is summed up thus :—"A sum of half a million spent on the construction of a large fleet would, in the next twelve months, establish a firm and adequate basis for all future defence of the metropolis. The fieldworks between the forts might be executed by the garrisons in theme, whilst the smaller earthworks need not be thrown up until there was an absolute threat, or an imminent danger, of invasion. Surely the spirit which has evoked the volunteers will provide the funds to make London impregnable, and invasion, therefore, hopeless." Mr. Trollope may well claim the merit, and a great merit it is, that there is no falling off in the vivacity and interest of his tale of "Framley Parsonage." The old characters are placed in situations which, if not exactly new in the abstract, take the shape of novelty by the mode in which they are treated. But if Mr. Trollope has any influence with editor and publisher let him enter an earnest protest against the illustration which accompanies his chapters this month. If it is intended as a ghastly caricature of the development of crinoline, there is nothing to be said ; but if it is to be taken as a pictorial embellishment the sooner the earth covers it the better. The lessons inculcated in the paper, "The Poor Man's Kitchen," are sufficiently comprehensive to take in a wider circle than that indicated by the title, and the writing is good. "Sir Brook Fossbrooke" is of much matters. Man is like the lower animals in this respect, that with the utmost ingenuity for our means like trouble for existence is a struggle for dinner. We have all somewhat of the Tartar Khan in us, and that sometimes we have been dined, ready to proclaim that the whole world may dine also. But we first. Nobody shall dine with us until we all dine." We are charming. The scene would at the war, murders, and quarrels that have arisen out of this one question of dinner—the question of questions ! How many of the piteous cases that come before Sir Cresswell Cresswell are to be explained by deficiency of food, badness of cooking, and fits of indigestion ! There is no such irritant as hunger and deranged gastronomy. If we could only get at the wisdom which is supposed to lie in ancient fables we should probably find that Pandora's box, the source of every mischief, was an empty oven or larder, or some such receptacle. The poor man especially feels the truth of this doctrine. He conspires against his rich, because he never gets a dinner, and on that point he feels with the Great Cham. He beats his wife, because with his empty stomach he cannot digest the food before him. He drinks beer and drowns himself in gin, because no meat that he can get is half so pleasant. People imagine that by introducing the light wines of France into this country we shall put a stop to drunkenness. It is a great mistake. The French are very people, not because they drink wine, but because they are good cooks. Where you have bad cookery and good liquor, depend upon it the liquor will carry the day. And we shall not stop the rage for liquor in this country by making it still better—by turning the gin into cognac, and by turning the beer into bordeaux. The cure lies rather in restoring the balance between meat and drink. Put the meat more on a par with the drink and then see what the result will be. Before I teach the poor man to cook, or give him his meat well cooked. Let the Temperance Leagues and Alliance look to it. They will not accomplish far more good by improving the working man's edibles than by meddling with his potables—by loosening that natural law which makes a man chiefly dependent on his food, rather than by attempting to place artificial barriers in the way of his getting whatever drink he may require. The best cure for the drunkenness of the lower classes is, not a Maine Liquor Law, but soup and sausages, pudding and pie, a cook to shut the taverns, and to open the poor man's kitchen."

Macmillan.—Sober and sensible, as Moore said of Lord John Russell. No man is better gifted either by sentiment or experience to write on the subject of "The Suffrage, in Reference to the Working Class and the Professional Class," than the Rev. F. D. Maurice, and his dissertation on that subject is sure of attentive consideration. It is probably not generally known—although we happen to be among the exceptions—that Alfred Tennyson has a brother who is a poet. Such, however, undoubtedly is the case with Turner, who is one of the most prolific, as he is one of the most elegant, writers of the day. Mr. Tennyson Turner has not, however, confined his effusions to this class of poetry alone, but has given in several instances that he partakes, with his brother, of the divine afflatus. Here we have four sonnets, and in them we see only say that we have seen better specimens of his powers. There is internal evidence of the authorship. It can be none other hand or no other than our most experienced engineer officer. The time, as say rightly, does not have reached us in a way which is summed up thus :—"A sum of half a million spent on the construction of a large fleet would, in the next twelve months, establish a firm and adequate basis for all future defence of the metropolis. introductory portion is exceedingly pointed, and the groundwork of the general dissertation is to be found in the reproduction of an opinion stated by another critic which is to the effect that "There is a peculiar type of the American mind which is strongly in revolt against American utilities, and which is predisposed, by the very tendency of its surroundings, to hues of contrast and attitudes of antagonism." We have seen the manifestation of this revolt in Edgar Poe, and even in Longfellow and Washington Irving. This impulse imbues them to become vagrants in imagination and reality, tourists in the old world of Europe, dreamers and artificers in the older world of poetry and romance; and the contrast of that to which they attach themselves, as compared with that which they fly from, is more strongly marked by associations with the ideal existences is to us." The writer of the article adds :—"We subscribe to every word of this ; but we would add what, we believe, the writer has omitted for this case only, that the reaction is immediately upon the spot the working influence of the poetic artist life of Rome upon the minds of that class of American whose peculiarities have not escaped the shrewdness of his observation. And what we would thus add is this—that these wandering imaginative Americans are, in increasing numbers, 'dreamers and artificers' elsewhere than in the literary world of 'poetry and romance.' Mr. Hawthorne's book, indeed, might almost save us the trouble of pointing out this busily, and with what promise of excellence, his fellow-countrymen are not only dreaming, but unconsciously dreams in the old world region of art." It is probable that a certain class of readers will welcome the article on "Modern Specimens of French Agriculture," which appears to us, speaking from a technically-uninstructed point of view, to be very able and interesting. The current number of this magazine is well filled, and a glance at the list of contents will show that pains have been taken in the selection of the subject-matter.

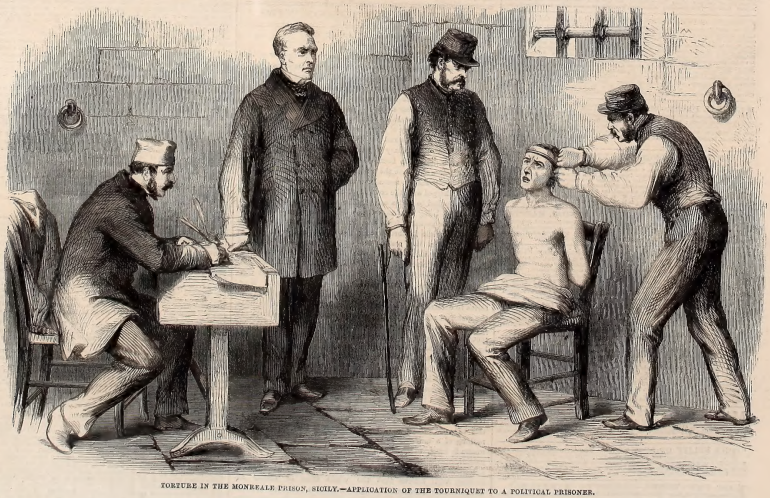
In Colburn's New Monthly the "Chances of Invasion" are treated from a historico-comparative point of view, which gives the discussion a relative value, as it were, to a vein of elaborate review of recently-published books running through the number, which is, to our mind, commendable as a literary feature in a magazine of this class ; there is plenty of fiction ; and the biographical notice on French Generals, which commenced with Pelleier, is continued with Canrobert, and is written with considerable under-the-cards knowledge of the subject of the memoir. In Bentley's Miscellany the "Outre-Mer Miscellaneous Correspondence" retains its piquancy ; and, though there is little novelty in matter of fact, being the production of an Englishman, there is a clever adaptation of French idiosyncrasy in the treatment of the questions which are brought forward, while there is nothing stated which need be beyond the ken of an educated and travelled Frenchman. The articles on Macdal-d'Donnell, and on "Naples and the Neapolitans," have a fitness to the moment.—The Eclectic is on a par this month with its respectabilities as an excellent serial. The sketch of "Claremont," by the author of "Mary Powell," is done in the pleasant, easy style of that writer, even though the anecdotes of the Princess Charlotte are none of them novel.—The Parliamentary sketch in the National for the month is Mr. Sidney Herbert, and it is so well done, and so true in most points, that we wish it had not concluded with a sort of abruptness.—Art-Journal has a superb engraving, by Annadoune, of a picture by Vandyck of that famous beauty Lady Dyer who is supposed to have fallen a victim to the quackery of her husband, in his anxiety to preserve her beauty by the use of cosmetics. Wilkie's "Penny Wedding," engraved by Cousbach, is the other selection from the Royal gallery of pictures from which the Vandyck has been taken. A third steel engraving, by Goodall, of Turner's "Dido Building Carthage," is in the National Gallery, a gem in the current number, and exquisitely executed it must seem, even to the least practised eye.—Mr. Lever's serial story, One of Them, continues to run its course to the term this month, and the introduction of new characters tends to deepen the interest in a plot which every reader will appreciate, in reading the story, while certain points, hitherto unfashionable, are beginning to be cleared up.

MR BOWYER, M.P., AS A KNIGHT OF MALTA.

SOME little time since the journals informed the public that Mr. Bowyer, M.P. for Dundalk, had been invested with the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, and was created a Knight of the Religious Order of Malta. It was probably not much known that this ancient order, so celebrated in former times, its contests with the Turks, was still in existence, although the condition of the brotherhood is only necessary since it was driven out of seignorial possessions in Malta. Its head-quarters are now at Rome, where the order has a palace, in which are the offices of the sub-branches existing the sacred council, resids. It is to be noted that the order still pays interest on the money borrowed by one of its Grand Masters, De Rohan, which was employed in the construction of the fortifications of Malta. This order, as is well known, formerly held large possessions in England ; and the picturesque suburb of Clerkenwell stands on ground which formed part of their estates. It once held the Temple in the City, and what was the owner of the estate in Clerkenwell, where the gate of their priory is still in existence. The order was abolished in the country by Henry VIII., restored by Mary, and finally dissolved by Queen Elizabeth. The Prince Consort is one of its honorary Grand Crosses.

PROCIDA.

THIS island (the ancient Prochyta) is situated at the north-west extremity of the Bay of Naples, and is separated from the mainland by a channel of about half a mile across. Procida is hilly, with numerous bays and coves, which give it a picturesque outline. Its length is about three miles, and its breadth a mile and a half. The northern extremity of Procida is lofty and more precipitous than the south. On the south spur of the bold promontory of Procida a castle is built. The castle, now in ruins, was a Royal palace. A very fine, commanding from its terrace the Bay of Naples on the one side, and the Bay of Gaeta on the other. Up the south side of the hill from the seashore stretches the town of Procida, in the form of an amphitheatre, backed and interspersed with vineyards, orange-groves, and fruit-gardens. The houses, with their flat-terraced roofs and their out-door staircases, remind the traveller of many towns in modern Greece. On the east the coast is broken into two creeks formed by the Punta Pizzasa and Punta Socciaro. On the north-west point, called the Punta di Chiapate, at the entrance of the channel, is a lighthouse with a fixed light. The island is richly cultivated with vineyards and fruit-gardens, which supply the markets of the capital and constitute the chief source of the prosperity of the inhabitants. These, according to "Murray's Handbook," number 13,000. In the thirteenth century this island was the property of John of Procida, the principal actor in the "Sicilian Vespers."



Our Engraving of Procida is from a Sketch by the Hon. Major Fitzmaurice.

TORTURE IN SICILY.

SOME detailed and circumstantial accounts of the dreadful cruelties of the King of Naples towards the Sicilians are stated in the pamphlet of M. Charles De la Varenne, "La Torture en Sicile." Many of the cases in this narrative are too horrible for publication. Maniscalco, the Director of Police, an old gendarme, and a son of a waiter in a Naples hotel, has been for some time the real ruler of Sicily, and under his auspices a system of torture has been perfected which is the consummation of diabolical cruelty. "Every commissary," says M. de la Varenne, "has his own method of applying tortures. It is revolting to come to details, but they are unhappily exact, and confirmed by official authority. The famous Pontillo owes his reputation to the species of torture which he applies in his own commissariat, making the victim sit down in a rolled armchair set with razor-blades, under which is placed a pan of burning coals. The Inspector, Louis Maniscalco, the namesake of the General Director, applies to the accused little iron hands provided with a closing screw. This is called, in the language of the police, 'the angelic instrument.' The gaoler, Bruno, belonging to the police commissariat of the odious Curreas (there is a prison in each commissariat), tortures by stripping the victim of his clothes and binding his head between his legs. Others employ the torture of the tourniquet, drawing a cord with a stick inserted in it tight round the head of the accused till the skin cracks and the eyes start from their sockets. Some have recourse to starvation, to blows, to the deprivation of light and breathable air. But the satellite of the Director-General who outstrips all others is the notorious Captain Chenicci, born a peasant in the village of Belmonte, a robber by profession, and now an officer of police and a rich proprietor." It is from a yoke like this that Garibaldi strives to deliver the people of Sicily. Who will not wish him God speed! It is against a Government composed of such monsters of cruelty that the Sicilians are so bravely and so successfully fighting. What man or woman can refuse to pray for their success! The accompanying Engraving represents the application of the tourniquet in the Monreale prisons to a person suspected of some political offence, and who had just been bastinadoed, in order to wring from him, if possible, a confession, or something that might be construed into a confession, of his guilt. The torture is inflicted by direction, and in the presence, of Maniscalco, who stands at the table, witnessing with unblanched cheeks and unfaltering gaze—nay, gloating over—the prisoner's agony. In the prisons annexed to every police station in Palermo, up to the moment of its being taken by Garibaldi, as well as in the large prisons of Monreale, in the vicinity of the chief town, the torture was incessantly inflicted upon unhappy wretches for the purpose of wresting from them accusations against themselves or others.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 9, 1860.

The position into which the Reform Bill has been driven would be ludicrous if the question involved was not so important as to prevent its being looked at from any but the most serious point of view. The statement of Lord J. Russell on Monday evening was very naturally taken as a tentative proceeding. It was sufficiently obvious that his object was what is called in sporting language, to save his stakes. The period of the Session which has been reached, the policy of delay and obstruction which has been adopted by avowed foes and covert enemies, as evidenced in a long list of motions preliminary to going into Committee, and in whole pages of amendments in Committee, all combined to make some course which would save the credit of the Government, even by the narrowest shave, necessary, and therefore the Minister especially charged with the conduct of the measure was, in a certain sense, compelled to hint a compromise and indicate concession in the hope of being able to carry a bill of any kind this year. What may be gathered from Lord J. Russell's observations seems to be that, while he throws over the Scotch and Irish bills as impedimenta in the nature of overweight, he is prepared to accept modifications of the franchise, either in the shape of fancy franchises, or a rating instead of a rental franchise, or even in an increase on the £6 and £10 which at present constitute the proposed suffrage in the measure for England. Now, we confess that this course is not one which we can take on ourselves to declare to be satisfactory. It does not seem to us, upon the maturest reflection, that the mere personal credit, not to say the mere personal vanity, of a Minister should be made paramount to a principle which has not only been laid down by the Government but accepted by the House of Commons by the act of passing the second reading of the bill without an amendment being moved or the opinion of that assembly being tested by a division. It is not to be disguised that the attitude of the Government, as a body, has invited the difficulty in which they now find themselves placed. The lukewarmness of Lord Palmerston is overt, or, at least, scarcely concealed, looking to the systematic silence which he has observed in the discussions on this bill, and still more to his demeanour in the House, to say nothing of a tendency to be absent when the Reform Bill is the matter in hand, which is at least unusual with one of the most patient, long-sitting, and enduring leaders of the House of Commons on record. It is hardly to be expected that the country will believe that the whole force of official influence and Ministerial weight has been directed towards the pressing on of the Reform Bill, or to the exercising of that gentle violence on doubtful or recalcitrant members which is so well understood, and which is rarely found ineffectual when the heart of the Government is in the business which is in hand. The complication caused by Mr. Mackinnon's motion to postpone the consideration of the question of Reform until that indefinite period when the result of the Census has been ascertained, and by Sir James Fergusson's irregular proceeding in seeking a technical adjournment of the debate on going into Committee, might have yielded to such a pressure as was put on the Government in the earlier stages of Mr. Gladstone's Budget. When the financial measures were brought forward they bore the stamp of reality and completeness upon them, so far as the decided opinion of the Government was concerned; and the earnestness with which they were handled imbued them all with the elements of success, and in the result the House was morally coerced into regular and active dealing with them. No one will deny that, if the Reform Bill had borne on the face of it an expression which indicated a similar spirit in reference to its inception and to the mode in which it was manipulated in its passage through Parliament, long ere this it might have been in Committee, and in a fair way to become an accomplished fact. It is quite certain that all this not only will be, but has already been, felt in the country; and if, as seems imminent, this Session passes without the enactment of a measure at least largely increasing the area of the franchise, the vacillating, half-hearted conduct of the Government will be remembered, and they will be rendered accountable not only for the more or less legitimate obstructions which this bill has met with from the Opposition proper, but for the caprices, not to say fantastic tricks, which have characterised the proceedings of some gentlemen who call themselves Liberal members of Parliament and advocates of the fair and just representation of the people.

THE COURT.

The Queen received the Sovereign Prince of Lichtenstein and the Princes Louis and Henry of Hesse at a Court held at Buckingham Palace yesterday (Friday) se'nnight. On the same day the King of the Belgians, accompanied by the Count de Flandre, arrived on a visit to her Majesty. Early in the afternoon the Prince Consort went to Maybury, in order to lay the foundation-stone of the central hall of the Royal Dramatic College. In the evening the Queen gave a concert in the ball and concert room, when the Yorkshire Choral Union—comprising the Leeds Festival Choral Society, the Halifax Choral Society, and the Huddersfield Choral Society—had the honour of performing before the Court. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort, accompanied by Princess Alice, the King of the Belgians, the Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary, the Count de Flandre, the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Louis and Prince Henry of Hesse, passed from the white drawing-room through the picture gallery and promenade gallery into the new ball and concert room, when the performance commenced with "Strike, strike the lyre, let music toll," a choral glee by T. Cooke. A distinguished circle of the aristocracy had the honour of receiving invitations.

On Saturday the Prince Consort presided at a meeting of the Council of the Duchy of Cornwall, at the Duchy Office, Buckingham-gate, St. James's Park. In the evening the Queen had a dinner party. The company included the King of the Belgians, the Princess Alice, the Count de Flandre, the Duke of Cambridge, the Prince of Lichtenstein, the Duchess of Sutherland, the Belgian Minister and Madame van de Weyer, the Austrian Minister and Countess Apponyi, the Earl of St. Germans, Lord and Lady John Russell, and the Right Hon. W. E. and Mrs. Gladstone.

On Sunday the Queen and Prince Consort, the King of the Belgians, Princess Alice, Prince Arthur, Princesses Helena and Louise, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court, and the domestic household attended Divine service in the private chapel, Buckingham Palace. The Hon. and Very Rev. the Dean of Windsor officiated and administered the Holy Sacrament.

On Monday the Queen and Prince Consort, accompanied by Princess Alice, rode on horseback. In the afternoon her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Arthur, drove out in a carriage and four. In the evening the Queen and Prince Consort, accompanied by the King of the Belgians and Princesses Alice and Helena, honoured the concert of the Philharmonic Society at the Hanover-square Rooms with their presence.

On Tuesday Mr. George G. Adams, sculptor, had the honour of submitting for the inspection of the Prince Consort his models for the prize medal to be distributed by the National Rifle Association. At a Court held to-day the Queen gave audiences to their Serene Highnesses the Prince Jules and Prince John of Schleswig-Holstein-Glucksburg, who were introduced by Count Bernstorff. At half-past three o'clock the Queen and Prince Consort left Buckingham Palace for Windsor Castle. Her Majesty and his Royal Highness were accompanied by the King of the Belgians, Princess Alice, Prince Arthur, the Princesses Helena, Louise, and Beatrice, and the Count de Flandre. The Royal party left the Palace in seven carriages, and was escorted by a detachment of light dragoons to the terminus of the Great Western Railway at Paddington, and, travelling thence by special train, arrived at Windsor Castle at half-past four o'clock. In the evening the Queen, accompanied by the King of the Belgians and the Count de Flandre, visited the Duchess of Kent at Frogmore.

On Wednesday the Prince of Wales arrived, on a visit to his Royal parents, from Oxford University. The following visitors also arrived at the castle:—Their Grand Ducal Highnesses Prince Louis and Prince Henry of Hesse, Duchess of Atholl (Acting Mistress of the Robes), Earl of St. Germans (Lord Steward), Viscount Sydney (Lord Chamberlain), Viscount Palmerston, Marquis of Ailesbury (Master of the Horse), and Earl Spencer (Groom of the Stole to the Prince Consort).

On Thursday the Queen and the Prince Consort, accompanied by the Prince of Wales and all the visitors at the Castle (except the King of the Belgians), attended the races at Ascot, where her Majesty was received with universal expressions of loyal attachment.

The Court returned to Buckingham Palace yesterday (Friday).

Major-General Seymour and Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. D. De Ros have relieved Lord Charles Fitzroy and Lieutenant-Colonel Ponsonby in their duties as Equerries in Waiting to the Queen and Prince Consort.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

Sir C. Barry: The will of Sir Charles Barry, R.A., F.R.S., late of the Elms, Clapham-common, and of No. 1, Old Palace-yard, Westminster, architect, was proved in the principal registry on the 4th of June, by the executors and trustees, Charles Barry and Edward Middleton Barry, his sons, who are both architects; William Henry Barry, his nephew; and Thomas Gueber, solicitor. The personalty was sworn under £80,000. To his wife he has left all his furniture, plate, linen, china, and carriages for her own absolute use; also an immediate legacy of £500 and a life interest in the whole of his property, real and personal, with power of appointment and disposal by his will to their children in such manner as she may direct; and in default thereof he bequeaths the same to his children equally. The trustees are invested with power to carry out and complete building contracts in hand and on land near his residence, Clapham-common. The will is concise, and is contained on three sheets of brief, and bears date December 12, 1857, and was witnessed by John Lewis Wolfe, of Kennington, and Ann Parker, servant to Sir Charles.

Sir C. Ogle: The will of Sir Chaloner Ogle, Bart., formerly of Wilton-crescent, and afterwards of Eaton-place, Belgrave-square, but late of the city of Brussels, where he died on the 3rd of February, last year, has just been administered to in London. The executors appointed were Arthur Ogle, Esq., who renounced the grant of probate, and Henry Denton, Esq., since deceased. Lady Ogle, the relict, also renounced the grant, and administration, with the will annexed, was granted to the Rev. Robert Chewell Vaughan, M.A., who has an interest in the estate. By a deed of conveyance and settlement, made in 1843 on his marriage, he was empowered to charge the family estate at Roehampton and other property with an annuity of £400 for the life of his wife, whom he has appointed universal legatee. The will is dated 14th of June, 1843. The deceased, who was in his 56th year, was the son of Admiral Sir Charles Ogle, Bart., who died in June, 1858.

Colonel Harington: The will of Thomas Lowth Harington, Esq., Colonel of the 5th Bengal Light Cavalry, formerly residing at Peshawur, in the East Indies, and late of Kingston-on-Thames, who died on the 5th of April, has been proved in London by Emily Octavia Harington, his relict, a power being reserved to Daniel Ball, Esq., who were the executors appointed by the will, which was made and executed when he was in India, and was witnessed by Lieut. Prendergast and Lieut. Beanfill, of the 5th Bengal Light Cavalry. To his wife he has left all his furniture and plate, as well as all her paraphernalia and jewellery absolutely, and the interest and dividends arising from his money in the English funds and in the Bengal Government Securities; and at her decease he leaves the property to be divided equally amongst his children. To his son Henry Ball Harington he leaves his medals and clasps, and to each of his sons he leaves some article of jewellery which he had in wear as mementos.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is announced to preach the anniversary sermon of the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, Brompton, on Sunday morning next, on which occasion the beautiful little chapel attached to the hospital will be thrown open to the public.

THE SATURDAY HALF-HOLIDAY.—A meeting was held at St. James's Hall, on Wednesday, to promote the early-closing movement on Saturdays, with a view to enable the employés relieved from their business occupations on that day to join the rifle corps. Lord Elcho presided, and Lord Shaftesbury and others delivered speeches in favour of the movement.

OPENING OF THE NEW FOOTWAY AT WESTMINSTER-BRIDGE.—On Thursday morning the temporary wooden bridge or footway over the central arches of Westminster bridge, to enable the entire removal of those arches and facilitate the works of the new bridge, was opened for general traffic, but solely confined to foot-passengers.

At a meeting of the Society of Antiquaries to be held on Thursday evening, June 21, the ancient plate and other objects of interest belonging to the Ironmongers', Carpenters', Armourers', and other Companies of the city of London will be exhibited by permission of the masters and wardens. Mr. Octavius Morgan, M.P., F.S.A., will offer some remarks on the ancient plate then exhibited.

Tuesday was the seventh and last day of the present sitting of the full Court in Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. During the sittings their Lordships have disposed of 46 petitions, of which 24 were presented by husbands, and 22 by wives. In 42 cases decrees have been granted; in one the petition has been dismissed, and in three judgment has not yet been pronounced.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—Last week the births of 766 boys and 751 girls—in all 1517 children—were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1850-59 the average number was 1509.——The London returns of deaths for last week exhibit a considerable decrease. The weekly number, which was about 1200 at the beginning of May, was at the end of the month 1004. For the ten years 1850-59 the average number of deaths, in the weeks corresponding with last week, is, with a correction for increase of population, found to be 1088. The mortality of last week was therefore less by 84 deaths than the average rate as obtained for the end of May would have produced.

THE CHARITY CHILDREN'S ANNUAL MEETING.—The annual fête of the metropolitan charity schools, which this year has been held at the Crystal Palace instead of at St. Paul's, took place on Wednesday last. The children, who mustered 4000 strong, were taken down by vans specially engaged, and by early trains, so as not to interfere with the traffic of the visitors. At three o'clock the schools assembled on the Handel Orchestra for the great musical performance, which commenced with the Old Hundredth, and concluded with the National Anthem.——We are requested to state that a grand concert will be given at the Palace on Saturday, the 16th inst., by the Metropolitan Schools Choral Society, at which about 4000 children and 1000 tenors and basses will be present.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—The annual examination of the pupils of this ancient school, which usually occupies six days, was concluded on Wednesday by a public examination before the Bishop of Chichester, the Dean of Ripon (an old Pauline), Archdeacon Hale, the Master, and a large number of the Court of the Mercers' Company, Mr. Carver, the Master of Dulwich, the examiners in all the branches of education, and a numerous and fashionable company. Dr. Herbert Kynaston, the Head Master of the School, superintended the whole of the arrangements, which were of a most gratifying character, and witnessed the rewards of merit being presented to his pupils with evident satisfaction. The first prize was awarded to Mr. Taverner, the Captain of the School, for the "Commemoration of the Founder," which was recited by him to the assembly. At the conclusion of the speeches, the Bishop of Chichester asked for and obtained from Dr. Kynaston a holiday of a fortnight for the boys, in compliment to the new Dean of Ripon.

THE PULLINGER FRAUDS.—The Stock Exchange Committee on Wednesday issued their report relative to their investigation into Pullinger's transactions with members of that establishment. The principal results of their inquiry have already transpired, including the suspension of seven of the members, and the inability of the committee to trace any larger sum than £53,285 as having been actually paid by Pullinger into the house, leaving £200,000 yet to be accounted for. The committee comment on the laxity of the system of check upon their servants which had existed in the Union Bank, and accuse the directors of the bank of keeping back from the knowledge of the committee of the Stock Exchange the fact, though known to them, that the Messrs. Scrimgeour, the brokers of the bank, had had speculative transactions with Pullinger, whilst giving up the names of the other brokers who were known to have had such transactions with him.

NORTH LONDON OR UNIVERSITY COLLEGE HOSPITAL.—The annual festival in aid of the funds of this institution was held on Wednesday evening at the London Tavern—Lord Brougham, President, in the chair. There were present Lord Belper, Hon. G. Denman, M.P., Sir Francis Goldsmid, M.P., W. Ewart, Esq., M.P., Professor Erichson, and other influential friends of the hospital. The customary loyal and patriotic toasts having been given, the Chairman, in proposing the toast of the evening, called on all present to aid in the endeavour to supply an existing deficiency, and to imitate the noble examples set by the several gentlemen whose names he could not forbear mentioning. Mr. Pemberton Heywood had forwarded a sum of £500 as his subscription. The Messrs. Jaffray, who had on former occasions displayed great munificence, had also sent the same amount. Mr. Mason, a clerk in Messrs. Coutts's bank, had subscribed the sum of £200. The treasurer read a list of donations, which in the course of the evening was augmented to nearly £3000.

PRESERVATION OF LIFE FROM SHIPWRECK.—A meeting of the Royal National Life-boat Institution was held on Thursday at its house, John-street, Adelphi—Mr. Thomas Chapman in the chair. The Lowestoft life-boat, which is in connection with the institution, was, during the late hurricane, instrumental in rescuing the crews of two wrecks—eight men from the brig Rapid, of Portsmouth; and five persons, consisting of the master, his wife, daughter, son, and an infant eleven months old, from the sloop Three Brothers, of Goole. The Pakefield and Kessingland life-boat had also been instrumental in rescuing, during the same fearful gale, many a one from a watery grave. A reward of £6 10s. was voted to the institution's new life-boat at Whitburn, near Sunderland, for putting off and saving the crew of four men and the master's wife of the sloop Charlotte, of Woodbridge, which, during a heavy gale of wind, was wrecked on the rocks near Whitburn on Monday week. Rewards were also voted to the crews of the life-boats of the institution stationed at Brighton, Cahore, and Arklow, and to the crews of shore-boats, for their laudable services in saving life from various wrecks. An interesting communication was read from the clerks and workmen in the employ of Messrs. Ransomes and Sims, of Ipswich, stating that they had forwarded £21 to the National Life-boat Institution, and expressing a hope that other large establishments would follow their example in contributing to so valuable a society. Colonel Talbot Clifton, of Lytham Hall, was elected a vice-president of the institution. Payments amounting to £309 having been made to various life-boat establishments, the proceedings closed.

THE "GREAT EASTERN."—In consequence of the late tempestuous weather having much retarded the completion of the upper-deck fittings and rigging of this vessel, her departure for New York has been postponed. The start now is not likely to take place before the 20th inst. Prior to the voyage it is intended, we believe, to give a brief though most thorough trial of the engines by a run down Channel and back to Southampton.

The bust of Sir John Pakington, executed by Marochetti, and subscribed for by the medical officers of the Navy, was placed in Haslar Museum on Tuesday last, in acknowledgment of the great service rendered to the medical department of the service during the administration of the right hon. Baronet as First Lord of the Admiralty. There were nearly 100 persons present.

CAUTION TO THE PUBLIC.—A large number of forged notes, bearing date the 15th of February, 1860, are in circulation. They are admirably executed, and bear so close a resemblance in every respect to genuine ones that the most experienced persons are likely to be deceived by them. The vignette at the head of the notes defies detection, so closely is it copied from the Bank of England note. The paper is of a deeper colour than a good bank-note, and the water-mark is not only a perfect imitation in every respect of the paper manufactured for the Bank, but it cannot be removed or obliterated by damping—a test hitherto supposed to be infallible for discovering the genuineness of bank-notes.

MAILS FOR AUSTRALIA AND NEW ZEALAND.—The mails for the Australian colonies and New Zealand, intended to be forwarded viâ Southampton, will, in future, be made up in London on the morning of the 20th of each month, instead of on the 12th, and the mails to be forwarded viâ Marseilles will be made up on the evening of the 26th instead of the 18th of the month. On those occasions when the 20th of the month falls on Sunday, the mails for Australia, &c., will be made up on the previous evening; and when the 26th of the month falls on Sunday the mails will be made up on the following evening. In consequence of this alteration, mails for Ceylon will no longer be dispatched on the 12th and 18th of the month. The Australian mail-packets will, in future, proceed no further than Melbourne, and, after leaving Point de Galle, will touch, to land and embark mails, at King George's Sound only. The mails for South Australia, New South Wales, and New Zealand will be landed at Melbourne, and will be forwarded thence to their destination by such means as may be provided by the colonial Governments. Commencing with the month of July, the homeward mails will thenceforward be dispatched from Melbourne on the 26th of each month, and ought to arrive in London, with the mails from Calcutta and China due (viâ Marseilles) on the 12th and (viâ Southampton) on the 18th of every month.—General Post Office, June 5, 1860.

THE FARM.

DEATH has robbed us of another eminent agriculturist and valuer in Mr. A. Biddell, of Playford, Suffolk, who died last week at the age of seventy-eight. Among those who attended his funeral were his nephew, Mr. Biddell Airy (the Astronomer Royal), Mr. Allen Ransome, and fifty of the leading Suffolk farmers. His education was merely derived from the village school of Ringham, but his natural talent supplied the want of higher training, and it is to his self-matured taste for mechanics that agriculture owes some very important implements. He occupied the Hill House Farm at Playford for nearly half a century, and was said to be one of the very last wearers of the primitive knee-breeches costume.

The annual report of the Irish Agricultural Society, which holds its meeting at Cork this summer, has just been published. The new members amount to one hundred and sixty. Lord Clonbrock has been appointed president, and Lord Talbot de Malahide has announced that he will give a silver cup to the landlord who builds the most approved farmhouses, with farm buildings, for tillage farms, valued, under the tenement valuation of Ireland, at from £50 to £150 per annum. Captain Ball, the well-known prizeshorthorn breeder, brought the subject of the Turkish bath for cattle before the meeting, and at this, his third effort, succeeded in getting a committee of four to go to Blarney and other places to collect evidence, and make a short report to the council, with the view of enabling those interested to bring the matter forward in the showyard at Cork, where Dr. Barter intends to put up a booth, and show the working of the system. In the course of his speech he observed: "It was the great bugbear that stood in the way of investing capital in dairy stock; even the enormous price of butter last year had failed to make men invest in dairy property; and why? Because they or their friends a few years back had been nearly ruined by the distemper. It was stated to him that a frieze-coated farmer in the south of Ireland—he did not know his name, but that did not matter for the purpose—who had up to last November a dairy of thirty cows, had lost every one of them. He was set on 'his legs' again, and two of his cows fell sick. Dr. Barter went over to him and showed him how, for the sum of £6, he could put up a rude Turkish bath, and in that bath he treated the remainder of his stock, and since then he has not lost a single cow, although they had been all attacked with distemper and it was stated that the result in every case with regard to milch cows was the same—that after such treatment they were again in milk in the course of ten days."

The East Surrey Agricultural Society has held a good meeting at Croydon. Mr. Hales took first prizes with his shorthorn bulls, Priam and Young Cardinal; while that for the best shorthorn cow of any age went to Mr. Noakes's Seraphine the Second, which was purchased for 70gs. at the Cobham sale. Mr. E. Stenning, of Godstone, was very successful with his Down sheep.

The Ayr Advertiser has the following respecting the Ayrshire milking trial which we mentioned last week:—"The cow belonging to Mr. Robert Wallace, Kirklandholm, St. Quivox, which gave the largest quantity of milk at the Duke of Atholl's competition, improved wonderfully in amount of produce after she was put on the grass. She lately gave the astonishing quantity of 75 imperial pounds, or 7½ imperial gallons, of milk per day for several days in succession. The largest quantity at one milking was 39lb. We understand this valuable animal has been purchased for the noble Duke and sent to Dunkeld."

Mr. Sydney has followed up his recent speech at the annual meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society with a letter in the Mark Lane Express, on the subject of "The House List" and the doings of the society in general, which he considers to be pretty nearly confined to "holding a show and publishing a journal." Speaking of the composition of the council he says, "We went to see earnest intelligent men, followers of Lord Leicester and Arthur Young, of Henry Handley and Philip Pusey; men of the same stamp as the small minority of Hudson, Jonas Webb, Torr, Druce, Hobbs, Pope, and not idle gentlemen with no other claim, as the Irish song says, than or of being amongst the oldest and most useless, if not most mischievous, members of the society.

General Sir David Leighton, K.C.B., the senior officer on the Bombay establishment, expired at his residence, Bafford House, near Cheltenham, on the 1st inst., in his 88th year.——Field Marshal the Earl of Strafford died in Lower Grosvenor-street, on Sunday evening, after a very short illness, at a very advanced age. The deceased had the gold and silver medals, with one clasp each, for his Peninsular services.——Vice-Admiral Fowler died last week. He was one of the few remaining survivors who took part (he being a passenger at the time) in Sir Nathaniel Dance's action, when a fleet of Indiamen beat off Linois's squadron.——We have to record also the death of Lieutenant-General Sir William Chalmers, C.B., K.C.H., Colonel of the 78th Highlanders.

A CAREER OF CRIME.—At the Dudley Police Court last week Solomon Price was charged with brutally assaulting Sarah Justice. In sentencing him Captain Bennitt read the following account of the defendant's career:—"November 6, 1838, committed for one month's hard labour; April 30, 1840, seven days; June 24, 1850, two months; July 12, 1852, six weeks; May 23, 1853, two months; 1854, Worcester Winter Assizes, 18 months' hard labour, for highway robbery." He was then committed to hard labour for six months. A brother of Price is undergoing a sentence of fourteen years' penal servitude.

A FATAL ACCIDENT occurred on Monday to Miss Kate Marshall, aged seventeen, the daughter of Mr. R. W. Marshall, of Owlerton paper-mill. The young lady (says the Sheffield Telegraph) was watching the machinery in the mill at work, when her dress—caused by her crinoline—came in contact therewith, and she was whirled round and killed instantaneously. The shaft was not revolving very swiftly, and was not boxed off. The inquest was held on Tuesday, when the jury returned a verdict of "Accidental death," adding a strong opinion as to the extreme impropriety of girls wearing crinoline when working in the mills. They also censured Mr. Marshall for not having the shaft in question protected. He promised to have a guard at once put up.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

WHEN on Monday evening last the order of the day for going into Committee on the bill for the Amendment of the Representation of the People was called on, there were probably between thirty and forty members on the floor of the House, exactly three spectators in the Speaker's Gallery, and about a dozen in the Strangers' Gallery proper—interest, of course, therefore most intense. As usual, too, on the occasions of dalliance with this measure, the Treasury bench was left in the undisputed possession of Lord John Russell, and, of course, Lord Palmerston was not there, and did not come in until a considerable time after—between seven and eight o'clock, as we think. A glance at the notice paper showed a long list of "instructions to the Committee," and motions on the question that the House do go into Committee, which, if duly debated, would, as a moderate computation, occupy the hours of the House until, say, the 18th of August, at which time the Speaker would be at liberty to leave the chair. However, that right honourable gentleman, having made a sort of encore pas celuici prospect before him, with that Mr. Toots-like and apologetic manner in which he always performs the duties of his office, proceeded to call down and expunge all the "instructions," with two exceptions. This was not done, however, without a cough, and something very like a sneeze. Mr. Bentinck, whose demeanour and mode of address are generally distinguished by a certain Spanish sauciness, tempered by jokes, very quietly, but with a thirsty-faced man's recollection to him, proceeded to move one of the "instruction" into discussion by a side-wind, firstly by proposing to do what is called "speaking to order," and when stimulated by the interruption of Sir Cresswell Cresswell, Mr. Bouverie, both of whom have acquired a kind of premissive right to put themselves to give authoritative opinions on points of Parliamentary practice, the Speaker endeavoured to stop him, he went on, unconcerned, no doubt, by the laughter and a steady tremulous decision from the chair. Just at this instant there entered into the House a man who was not unknown to fame, and who is known as Mr. Shaw Lefevre, who was the very Agamemnon o Speakers, or, still better, the mighty Vindex of Parliamentary orders; and one was usually startled by the sight of him, and when unaccordance voice, booming through the most frish of rows, stilled in a moment. The most tumultuous House in the world, the moment there passed over his countenance an expression of indignant surprise; the Speaker's eye fell upon him, and he rose from a stand directed a gesture of half reproof, half encouragement, from the ex functionary to the official on one side. But as it may, a change came over Mr. Evelyn Denison which was at once felt to be seen the effect of the presence of Lord Eversley, and he turned on Mr. Bentinck with much vigour that latter gentleman, who, with his unfeigned surprise, and, probably, he too saw the well-known features of the writer of nom and pseudonym, and with an expression of command requiring its ancient fixity, and, influenced by that feeling which induced a Prime Minister to rise from his seat when in the presence of Dr. Somebody who had been head master when he was at Eton, he yielded, and leaped into legitimary and order. It is unadvisedly asserted that both these gentlemen were the actual and immediate consequences of the presence of Lord Eversley, but at least they were coincident, and the sudden extension of risen might have produced the effect. At any rate the progress of the Reform Bill was only delayed by the usual "previous notice of" instruction to the Committee" by forty minutesinstead of possibly a fortnight.

It was eminently characteristic of the whole of this Reform Bill business, which profane persons do not hesitate to call a farce, that Lord John, after a recess of half-past three hours, should expect the House to move that the House do go into Committee, and to state the course which the Government meant to take. Now, for this, Mr. Disraeli had been kept away from dinner, a reflection to which he is quite unused with ordinary people, and was compelled to wait out of his way to pay an elaborate compliment to the leader of the Opposition. This action extended him considerable pain, it showed a latent sense of weakness, and implied a petition for forbearance. But the workings of his mind were not to be stayed by it, for Mr. Disraeli to allow him to lose an opportunity when he had his "enemy on the hip" of "feeling fat the ancient grudge he bore him." Accordingly he delivered a speech which, if it was an impromptu one, would have ranked with the most powerful and, in many respects, the most happy of his impromptus. It was too much to suppose that so watchful and experienced a Parliamentarian should not have been aware that Lord John Russell's statement would probably make some statement at this stage of the bill, and so the speech here referred to was of preparation, more or less elaborate. In comprehensiveness, in sarcasm, and in that peculiarity of mind with a sense of this being the moment of direct and retributive revenge on Lord John for having crushed, by his defection, the Reform Bill last year, this address may bear comparison with any of his former orations against Lord John. It was one of the bitter irony which he poured straight into Lord John's face was without a parallel, and there were long and elaborate pauses, though principally the argument was ad hominem, which were exceedingly powerful and very well put. Curiously enough, this remarkable speech was addressed to the empty benches of the House; no intimation of what was going on, which, of course, was as much unknown to all the world outside as to the world inside, resulting in bringing in the audience. The attack of Mr. Disraeli, though indirectly on Lord John, was not personal, and it included the whole Ministry, and yet not a man on the Treasury bench (for two or three had been there during the short absentees being Mr. Gladstone) stirred. Lord Palmerston had arrived when Mr. Disraeli rose, and had heard it all, but he gave no sign, and, after a moment's pausing next to nothing spoken by Lord John and Mr. Mackinnon, and the Speaker took the opportunity of slipping away to his long-deferred vacation, and to get rid of the cares of warm coffee, as his custom is, about half-past nine.

By the time Mr. Mackinnon rose to speak he had got about that a serious danger to the Government lurked in his, on the face of it unpretending, motion, that it was inexpedient to proceed with any measure for the amendment of the representation of the people until after the result of the Census of next year was ascertained. Oddly enough, Hume, very excellent, amiable, and, in many things, able gentleman, but singularly ineffective, not to say wishy-washy talker, Lord Mr. Disraeli had spoken for a large audience, which listened to his speech not only with intense interest and attention, but with much cheered and applause, and this was not in a manner which at first seemed to bewilder poor, quiet, shrinking Mr. Mackinnon, which, nevertheless, must have stimulated him eventually into making so long and decidedly able a speech. A rumour was now prevalent that there was every chance that the Government would be beaten on Mackinnon's motion, that it discovered, went direct to stop any further progress of Reform in Parliament for that session, at least, and to the House filled with the noisy and excited, and little men found themselves the centre and the unconscious cause of a tumult and a uproging to and fro of that assembly which, in the early part of the evening, was so still as to seem formed in its tone and aspect. Preparations were made for a division, and it was ascertained that the Government were not sufficiently forewarned, and that they had not mustered in sufficiently large enough to put Mackinnon in a minority, or something akin to it, and so it was determined to adjourn the debate over. Mr. Disraeli sent Sir William Jolliffe to Mr. Bovill, who was speaking, telling him to be as long as possible—a task which his Westminster Hall experience rendered the easiest in the world to that honourable and learned gentleman, who, nevertheless, must have thought that they had not mustered in sufficiently large enough to put Mackinnon in a minority, or something akin to it, and so it was determined to adjourn the debate over. Mr. Disraeli sent Sir William Jolliffe to Mr. Bovill, who was speaking, telling him to be as long as possible—a task which his Westminster Hall experience rendered the easiest in the world to that honourable and learned gentleman, being so he is an eminent member of that fraternity, any one of which is always ready at the shortest notice to talk until the rounding of the last trump. Then, when some indiscreet youths among the Conservatives grew rash to their cheers, and listening to the purring of Mr. Baines, they were sternly rebuked by their leader, and ordered to allow him to have his will. An hour, however, that honourable gentleman had soon exhausted his budget, up was put Sir Minto Farquhar, who, as the representative of one of the boroughs from which the Reform Bill proposes to excise a member, and being himself decidedly the member who would be amputated, may be supposed to have a right to a voice for delay; and that gentleman, being blessed with capital lungs, an elastic larynx, and lacking nobody's modest assurance, went on to signalise himself by an oration, testing his address merely by the length of time which it occupied in the delivery. This alone would have been sufficient to reveal the tactics of the Opposition, which was all more developed in the fact of the motion for the adjournment being moved by one of the members for Ireland, and the fate of the Reform Bill, which for the first time formally and regularly began, was then sealed and passed, at least until the following Thursday, of the events of which day there may be in these columns a few words to say.

For many years there has not been so decided a tendency to "count out" the House as has manifested itself this session, and there was absolutely an attempt to "count" when the House was in Committee on the Army Estimates, an unusual course, and one which is not very likely to be successful, unless the determination to effect that object is general and persistent; for the Chairman has first to ascertain that less than forty members are present, and when it is necessary to send for the Speaker, who repeats the operation; and, as all this would occupy a quarter of an hour, it is a simple time for enthusiastic members to come in and save the sitting from extinction. However, the naughty boys who have to play truant had their way on Tuesday, and added one more to the numerous dead lights of the session. As to the failures in this respect, they have been legion.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

THE HOUSE resembled on Monday after the Whitsun holidays.
The Royal Assent was given to the Bill now read a second time.
The Public Improvements Bill was read a third time and passed.
The Tewkesbury Fisheries Bill was read a second time and passed.
The report of amendments on the Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Bill was received.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The Speaker took the chair at twelve o'clock.

On the order of the day for going into Committee on the measure, Mr. Hunt and Mr. Bentinck moved that the Speaker leave the chair, the Committee which the Speaker declined to be informed. Mr. Bentinck, however, ultimately explained that his motion was not to be taken as in any instruction to the Committee that they have power to make provision for a better representation of the agricultural interest.

Lord J. Russell, in moving that the Speaker leave the chair, stated that he would be content with the discussion on the first clause going over the Session, but that the Government saw no reason for postponing the measure until another Session, as had been suggested by Mr. Hunt. The business placed no difficulties in the way of proceeding with the bill, and would upon the first clause be open to discussion. He hoped, therefore, and not to endeavour, by frivolous and "hollow" protests, to defeat the great object they had in view—namely, to give a further extension to the bill, and contended that the House had pledged itself to an extension of the franchise.

Mr. DISRAELI admitted that the Conservative party had given a pledge in favour of the principle of extension of the franchise, and that in acceding to the second reading of the bill they had admitted its principle, but they had not pledged themselves to the principle of the details of the bill the details of which they had to condemned the proposal to abandon the Scotch and Irish bills while the English bill was left to be dealt with, as the measure which he regarded as quite unprecedented and as quite uncalled for.

Mr. MACKINNON moved that the House resolve itself forthwith into the consideration of the Reform Bill until it was placed in possession of the results of the Census.

Sir G. C. Lewis strongly opposed this amendment, pointing out that it would involve a delay of at least two years.

After some further discussion the debate was adjourned until Thursday.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

SELLING AND HYPOTHECATING SHIPS ABROAD.—On the motion for the third reading of this bill, the Earl of St. GERMANS strongly objected to the principle of the measure, which he believed to be one of the most dangerous that day six months.—After some discussion the House divided, the numbers being—Contents, 19; Non-contents, 7.

WINE LICENSES AND REFRESHMENT HOUSES BILL.—Earl GRANVILLE moved the second reading of this bill, which, he said, was intended to remedy the shortness of the notice of the second reading which had been given.—Earl of CARNARVON and Lord MONTEAGLE of BRANDON opposed the measure going into Committee, which he would fix for Friday next.—The bill was then read a second time.

Several bills were advanced a stage,

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

COMMISSIONERS OF CHARITABLE DONATIONS.—Mr. Cogwell, Mr. S. Herbert said he was not aware that since the reduction in the price of commissions in the Charitable Donations Office any additional charge had accrued. He was not prepared to say that the Government could enforce the Act of Parliament which reduced the charge.

CLERK TO THE PRIVY COUNCIL.—In answer to Mr. Griffith, Lord Alexander Russell said that the Government had long since filled the office of Clerk of the Council, at the modified rate of £1200 a year.

THE ROYAL ASSENT.—On the motion of Mr. Wyld, Lord PALMERSTON said that a ship of war would be furnished by the Admiralty to convey gold to Australia for the Royal assent, for the purpose of testing the practicability of laying a telegraphic cable from England to America by way of Australia.—The House then went into Committee of Supply.

CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.—Mr. B. COCHRANE moved that in future the Civil Service Commissioners should be required to append a report of the examination papers submitted to candidates, specifying the proportion in which the marks obtained by successful candidates in each subject were divided among the questions contained in each paper. He pointed out the irresponsible position which the Commissioners at present occupied, and which arose in which persons who had been for years in the public service, in being transferred from one department to another by the open competitive examinations, in which they were excelled by younger men who had been examined for the purpose, were compelled to abandon the path of the service and rendered destitute. The hon. gentleman quoted some amusing cases of failure in examination, which had been brought before the Civil Service, a specimen of which was this:—How many entire days have elapsed between the 1st day of May and the 1st day of August? He read a series of questions which had been submitted to candidates in the arithmetical class in the public service. In reference to the questions which had been proposed to candidates for the Indian service, he considered them ridiculous, in them, and they were well calculated to test the general knowledge of candidates. He contended that the only test of merit for the interference of the House in a sense which would amount to a censure on the Government. He would not do that, but he would suggest that a report be made at the moment that a Committee had inquired into, and was about to report on, the subject-matter of examination. He would move that a Select Committee be appointed to inquire into the system of examination for the Civil Service, with a view to the more effectual attainment of the objects contemplated by the Act of Parliament.—Mr. BOUVERIE considered that the proceedings in this case were of a most unsatisfactory character. He read a series of questions which went far to prove his argument.—Lord STANLEY said that the fact of the motion being withdrawn in that House was a proof that the civil service examiners were not an irresponsible body. In one respect the examinations had been successful, and that was in the case of a young man who had obtained a clerkship, and who, by his own merits alone, and without any interest, had risen to the position of a clerk of the first class. He would take one or two remarkable questions in the examination papers as specimens of the whole. The first was, Why is a cat's tail like a pendulum? The subject was adopted, in order to ascertain the extent of knowledge likely to belong to candidates, arising from all sorts of sources of instruction. After some further discussion the motion was negatived.

FELONY AND MISDEMEANOURS.—Mr. DUNKIN obtained leave to bring in a bill for the amendment of the proceedings in trials for felony and misdemeanour.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

THE ECCLESIASTICAL COMMISSION BILL.

On the motion for the second reading of this bill,

Mr. BERNAL OSBORNE moved that the House resolve itself into the consideration of the Commission, and to various changes proposed by the bill and, in conclusion, moved as an amendment that the bill should be read a second time that day six months.

Mr. Alderman COPELAND seconded the motion, and recommended that the bill should be withdrawn, and an invitation on the subject postponed until there had been an inquiry by a Select Committee.

Mr. FORSLAND supported the bill, which he regarded as a step in the right direction, although not a definitive settlement of the question.

Sir G. C. LEWIS remarked that the bill had originated in a Committee presided over by Lord J. Russell, and that it had been assented to by that House, although in the case of the Ecclesiastical Courts Bill, the House of Lords, and had subsequently been passed by the Upper House at too late a period to come down to the Commons. The Government were not responsible for the bill. Nevertheless, he denied that it was, as had been stated, a retrograde measure. Its tendency, on the contrary, was to lead to the adoption of a measure to be satisfactorily dealt with in Committee.

Mr. HADFIELD opposed the bill, which, he contended, was calculated to accomplish that desirable improvements should be introduced in Committee.

Lord J. HAY was doubtful whether the bill could pass this Session, but he should be sorry by any vote of his to prevent the House from the way of legislation. He had watched with much interest the conduct of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners was such as to entitle them to the confidence.

Lord J. RUSSELL opposed the bill on the ground that it proposed to give extended powers to the Commissioners, and thereby to render their existence perpetual. It would originally the whole management of Church property to an all but irresponsible Commission sitting in London.

Mr. BIGHAM supported the bill.

Mr. HOWARD gave notice that in Committee he should propose clauses compelling the Commissioners to report to parliament annually.

Mr. NEWDEGATE opposed the bill, and censured the conduct of the Commissioners.

After some remarks from Mr. Liddell and Mr. Deedes, the debate, on the motion of Lord Hotham, was adjourned for a fortnight.

The Masters and Operatives Bill passed through Committee, and the other orders were disposed of.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

The Trustees, Mortgagees, &c., Bill was read a third time and passed.

Mr. JOHN BRIGHT'S Bankruptcy Bill was read a second time.

The Sale of Gas Act Amendment Bill passed through Committee.

The Bankruptcy Bill was read a third time.

Lord TENTERDEN, having presented several petitions in favour of Parliamentary Reform, moved the resolutions of which he had given notice, as follows:—"That this House, greatly doubting the sufficiency of the present state of Parliamentary Reform, to represent the various interests, and to secure the rights of the peace of the country, and that the best and most effectual mode of proceeding with a view to remedy the evil, and to give its most complete operation to the prayer of the petitions which have been presented to it in favour of an enlightened suffrage and the vote by ballot, is to abolish the present defective franchise which has been presented to it by petition. That the vote by ballot is the only effectual check upon those who, for want of right to be allowed a vote, and to point out the means whereby improper persons may be prevented from voting, and that it is hereby presented, so that, on the one hand, no man shall be left without the franchise against whom no just reason for disfranchisement can be assigned; and, on the other hand, no man shall be put on the list of voters, or continued thereon, against whom any reasonable objection of disfranchisement can be alleged or proved. That this House is therefore prepared to recommend a measure which shall provide for a fair register, and Poor rate payment necessary to cut off from the register of voters all improper persons. In the way the House is prepared to give effect to the vote by ballot in cases of manhood suffrage and vote by ballot, not only without detriment to the peace of the country, but with advantage to the same."

Earl GRANVILLE, in a long speech, opposed the resolution of the noble Lord, which was rejected on a division by 181 to 36.

The House then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE REFORM BILL.

Lord J. RUSSELL, in reply to questions from Mr. Blake and Mr. Mitchell, said that it was his intention that the bill should pass as a matter of the present Session it would be for the Crown to decide whether a dissolution of Parliament should take place or not. He did not think that it was exercise of her prerogative, should determine up on directing Parliament, such a course would be a violation of the provisions of Scotland and Ireland as well as England, although the Reform Bills for the two former proposed of the United Kingdom would be withdrawn, and the measure confined to the English Reform Bill.—Mr. DILLON, in reply to Mr. C. Buller, said that the Government proposed to introduce a measure for the registration of voters in Ireland.

Mr. GRANVILLE, in a long speech, opposed the resolution of the noble Lord, which was rejected on a division by 181 to 36.

The House then adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

THE REFORM BILL.

Lord J. RUSSELL, in reply to questions from Mr. Blake and Mr. Mitchell, said that it was his intention that the bill should pass as a matter of the present Session it would be for the Crown to decide whether a dissolution of Parliament should take place or not. He did not think that it was exercise of her prerogative, should determine up on directing Parliament, such a course would be a violation of the provisions of Scotland and Ireland as well as England, although the Reform Bills for the two former proposed of the United Kingdom would be withdrawn, and the measure confined to the English Reform Bill.—Mr. DILLON, in reply to Mr. C. Buller, said that the Government proposed to introduce a measure for the registration of voters in Ireland.

On the order of the day for going into Committee on the Representation of the People Bill, Lord J. RUSSELL, in moving that the House resolve itself into the consideration of which was to postpone the measure until the results of the Census of next year should be ascertained.

Sir JAMES FERGUSSON, who gave notice that he would move the postponement of the third reading of the bill, said that he was not prepared to vote for the amendment of the Irish and Scotch Reform Bills should have been disposed of. The hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Hunt) had stated that the progress of reform in the case of the House, it would be necessary for him to alter that motion; and he should, therefore, move that the House go into Committee that day.

Mr. BERNAL, however, proceeded to argue in favour of his original proposal, contending that the bill, under the existing circumstances and latitudes would be produced by their dealing with the great question of Parliamentary Reform piecemeal, instead of dealing with the whole portion of the United Kingdom should necessarily be followed by a dissolution of Parliament, and that the Government, constituted by comparatively small minorities could not be allowed to legislate for the empire while the newly-reformed constituencies remained unrepresented. The principle of the first Reform Bill the consideration of the interests of Ireland and of Scotland had been represented until after the English measure had been passed; and he would now, he believed, that in the division of the representation Ireland would be treated with justice.

Colonel DUNNE supported the amendment. As an Irish representative he claimed for Ireland a fair share of reform. He had asserted that a measure for England alone the House was willing to bestow upon the case of England.

Mr. J. GRAY said he did not see how the question of the census could promote the avowed object of its proposer—namely, the progress of measures of reform. It was impossible to legislate in any case but upon the data it gave. It would be impossible to legislate in one and the same bill for the three divisions of the United Kingdom, and to wait for the publication of the returns if a Reform Bill were passed in the course of the present Session the new constituencies would not be completed their rights to vote until the register until the close of next year. He believed that the best course the House could pursue was to go into Committee on the present Session, but to pass an English Reform Bill in one year, and to reserve the discussion of the Irish and Scotch measures for another. He considered all motions being framed for the mere purpose of throwing obstacles in the way of the measure, and contended that the bill was the fairest of the opportunity of pronouncing any opinion upon the main question brought before the Committee.

Lord J. MANNERS contended that if the Government wished to pass a Reform Bill this Session they ought to have introduced it earlier in the year, as an earlier period; and they ought not to have postponed its consideration until the Committee stage of the bill, one of the most complicated financial measures that had ever been submitted to the notice of Parliament.

Mr. HUNT supported the amendment.

Mr. BRIGHT said that the House had already pronounced an opinion on the subject to England, Ireland, and Scotland was to proceed pari passu with England, and that opinion ought to be adhered to.

Mr. H. BERKELEY warmly supported the bill. He thought that a rents franchise was much preferable to a rates franchise. The latter he objected to his own constituents, that under a rental franchise there would be 10,000 voters, but that under a rates franchise the number of voting franchise there would be only 97. He sincerely hoped that the Government would stand firmly by the bill. He should have been introduced at earlier their proposed £6 franchise for a £7 or £8 franchise. If, however, they should be defeated on the present occasion, he apologies and the good sense of the country as to assent to any such alteration, he for one would rather see the bill withdrawn than any such alteration should be made.

Mr. WATKINSON urged the Government to withdraw the bill.

Mr. HORSFALL, in a somewhat excited speech, warned the Government of the just indignation of the people in case they should abandon their measure.

Mr. C. BUSH denied that the people cared anything about Reform, particularly the working classes, and that the bill of the Government. He pointed out the anomalies which existed in the representative system of England, and which ought to be removed. He hoped the House would legislate for the whole people, and not for a section.

Mr. HENLEY observed that the present Session was the proper time for the consideration, and said that it would be a lamentable if it were to go forth to the world that the House of Commons was not in a position to undertake the great work of Parliamentary Reform, and had ultimately abandoned it from an apprehension that the Census would not be completed in time.

Mr. STIRLING defended the Opposition, and denied that they were interposing obstacles merely for the purpose of delay.

The Lord ADVOCATE said that the effect of Sir James Fergusson's motion would be, if successful, to defeat the bill altogether.

Mr. WHITBREAD said that the Scotch members on both sides of the House believed that their respective countries were most unjustly treated by the Government in respect to this question of Parliamentary Reform. They should recollect that it would be impossible to obtain a remedy for the evils complained of if the present bill alone passed into a law. If the Government persisted in withdrawing the bill for England, Ireland, and Scotland, they must be wrong in proceeding with only one of them and with no other measure whatever.

Mr. BRIGHT said the real question was whether the House would grant any measure of reform. Were he to hold the opinion that reform was not necessary he would belie the entire tenor of his life in Parliament, and out of it, if he had not the manliness to make that declaration to the House and the country. He reminded the House that five times the Queen of England had expressed her desire for reform, and that five Cabinets had solemnly promised that a measure should be brought in on the subject. Let them remember that further delay might prevent the wishes of the Sovereign and the people from being realised; and let them not forget that there would come on perilous times if the House of Lords were to become omnipotent, and the House of Commons contemptible. The bill now proposed was but a small measure, for it would only admit one in every twenty of the adult male population now excluded from the franchise.

Sir HUGH CAIRNS qualified the course which was now taken by the Opposition, on the ground that the Government had suddenly changed the issue raised, which, instead of being whether there should be an amendment of the law relating to the representation of the people of the United Kingdom, was now a very different one—namely, whether there should be an amendment of the law relating to the representation of the people of England only, the two other measures relating to Ireland and Scotland being withdrawn. The hon. and learned gentleman, in a very lengthened speech, contended that it was utterly impossible to discuss this question, limited, as it was, to only a portion of the United Kingdom, without considering its necessary bearing upon Ireland and Scotland, the principles of enfranchisement and disfranchisement being mixed up together and applying to every part of the kingdom.

Lord PALMERSTON submitted that if a comparatively late period of the Session had been arrived at without greater progress being made in many of the measures promised in the Queen's speech, and particularly in the question of Parliamentary Reform, that circumstance was occasioned by the proceedings taken by the members of the Opposition for the purposes of delay. There was no reason why Parliament should be dissolved immediately after the passing of this bill. The members of the Opposition side of the House could not, without adopting a step unworthy of a great party, find any justification for not going on with the bill after they had assented to the second reading, and having introduced during their short tenure of office a measure founded upon the general principle of extending the Parliamentary franchise.

Mr. DISRAELI congratulated the noble Lord upon the first speech he had delivered upon the new Reform Bill. The speech, however, contained some serious errors. He denied that the members with whom he acted had unfairly obstructed the progress of the measure. It was only on Monday last that the Committee on the bill had been proposed by the Government themselves. Neither had the motion for the second reading been met in any hostile spirit on the Opposition side of the House. The debate upon the motion had not, he believed, been unduly prolonged, and in the course of the debate it was from the Ministerial side of the House that many of the weightiest objections against the measure came. The right hon. gentleman concluded by characterising the measure as unjust and incomplete, and challenged the Government to a division of the House upon its merits.

Lord J. RUSSELL briefly replied.

The House then divided upon Sir James Fergusson's motion for the adjournment of the debate—

COUNTRY NEWS.

Lord Brougham has consented to become president of the Leeds Young Men's Anti-Slavery Society.

During the month of May the exodus from the Mersey to the United States in passenger-ships was about [illegible]000 steerage passengers; and the numbers exhibit no apparent signs [illegible] decrease.

Last week the Cheviots were completely covered with snow three feet deep, and the Framlington Hills, lying twenty miles south, were also covered several inches deep.

On Tuesday morning a collier brig, whilst proceeding down the river, came in contact with an anchor, the sharp end of which pierced her keel, and she rapidly filled with water. The vessel is now remaining off Charlton, her masts only being visible at high tide.

An enormous body of whales appeared off the coast of Belfast on Monday evening. They were so numerous that several boats at the hook herring fishing had to leave the ground, the crews being afraid of their boats being capsized.

A soldier at Gosport, named Hughes, stabbed a Mrs. Shein in March last. The woman died last week, and Hughes, who had been in custody ever since to await the result, has been committed to Winchester Gaol, on the coroner's warrant, for wilful murder.

On Monday evening the establishment of a Branch Free Library and Newsroom in Livesey-street, Manchester, for the Rochdale Road district, was inaugurated by a public meeting, under the presidency of Mr. Harry Rawson, chairman of the Free Library Committee of the Council.

A murder has been committed at a small village named Washington, in Sussex. The murderer, whose name is Dudeney, had a quarrel with his victim arising out of some family differences, and then shot him. Dudeney afterwards endeavoured to kill himself, but failed.

An Architectural Congress was held in Cambridge and the neighbourhood last week, commencing with a visit to Waltham Abbey Church, and concluding with a trip to Bury St. Edmund's. The congress was attended by Mr. Beresford Hope, the Rev. Lord Alwyne Compton, Sir Watkin Williams Wynn, the Rev. Canon James, Mr. G. Gilbert Scott, and other gentlemen of eminence in the architectural world.

THE FILEY FISHERMEN.—Dr. Cortis makes an appeal on behalf of the fishermen of Filey whose boats and nets were lost in the late storm. The boats alone, says Dr. Cortis, could not be replaced for £5000. The Rev. T. N. Jackson, Vicar of Filey, and the doctor will be glad to receive subscriptions towards a fund it is proposed to raise for the purpose of relieving the unfortunate men.

THE FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY AT LIVERPOOL.—At a meeting of the Liverpool Town Council, on Wednesday, a resolution (rescinding a former one refusing an allowance of money from the corporate funds towards the opening of the Free Public Library, the gift of W. Brown, Esq.) was passed unanimously granting a sum not exceeding £10,000 for the purpose of opening the Brown Library and Museum in October next. It is stated that the Queen will be invited to attend on the occasion.

THE PROSECUTION FOR BRIBERY AT WAKEFIELD.—Last Saturday criminal informations were filed against the under-mentioned parties, and on Tuesday writs were served upon them to appear and answer the charges that will be preferred against them:—Mr. W. H. Leatham and Mr. J. C. D. Charlesworth (the two candidates), Mr. J. B. Charlesworth, Mr. Marsland (Black Swan Inn), Mr. John Jubb (Thornes), Mr. A. Crowther (spirit-merchant), Mr. E. Hinchcliffe (plumber and glazier), and Godfrey Noble, of Huddersfield.

LAYING THE CORNER-STONE OF A WESLEYAN CHAPEL.—Yesterday week the corner-stone of a new chapel was laid at Heywood, Lancashire, by Edmund Wrigley, Esq., of Manchester, and an address was delivered by the Rev. J. Bedford. A teaparty was afterwards held in the Wesleyan School room, where there was a full attendance; and a public meeting followed, at which James Barlow, Esq., of Bolton, presided. The building will be in the Gothic style of architecture, and is expected to cost about £2500, towards which about £1600 has already been contributed.

DEATH OF A LADY FROM AN OVERDOSE OF CHLOROFORM.—An inquest was held last Monday on the body of Mrs. F. E. N. Mansell, at Doncaster. It appears that Mrs. Mansell was in the habit of using chloroform, in opposition to the wishes of her husband and her medical attendants. The druggists of the town, or at least some of them, were enjoined not to supply her with the dangerous drug; but last Saturday night she obtained five ounces, a quantity of which she applied as usual. Death resulted. The coroner's jury severely censured the druggist who furnished Mrs. Mansell with the chloroform, and added a recommendation, that this useful—though, in inexperienced hands, very dangerous—agent should be included in any future bill which may be devised for regulating the sale of poisons.

ETON COLLEGE SPEECH DAY.—The annual public delivery of speeches at Eton College took place on Monday. At the usual hour the company, consisting of the friends and relatives of the boys, old Etonians, and the nobility, clergy, and gentry from all parts of the kingdom, assembled in the upper school, when the speeches were delivered, eliciting, as they deserved, the applause from all present. After the delivery of the speeches the distinguished company repaired to the shooting-fields, and at half-past one o'clock the juvenile volunteers, numbering upwards of 300, in their new uniform, marched on the ground from the college, headed by the drums and fifes of the Coldstream Guards, and were inspected by Colonel Wood, of the same regiment. The following evolutions were performed with admirable precision:—Wheeled into line, marched past in quick time, formed square, reformed company, column advanced in line, formed square, reformed company, and marched off four deep. The ground was kept by the Windsor Volunteer Corps. At seven o'clock, notwithstanding the wetness of the ground, the Brocas was crowded to witness the departure of the boats to "Old Surley," which left under a heavy shower of rain. On the arrival of the crews they partook of an elegant al fresco repast, prepared by the Royal confectioners, Messrs. Layton Brothers, to which they did ample justice. When they had drunk the usual loyal and collegiate toasts, the boats were again manned, and the crews returned to Windsor. The usual brilliant display of fireworks took place from the eyot near Windsor-bridge, at dusk, in the presence of some thousand spectators who lined the banks of the Thames. The drums and fifes of the Coldstream Guards were stationed in a boat below Windsor-bridge, and played a variety of airs during the evening.

LITERATURE AND ART.

"MIRIAM cures wounds and Pharaoh is sold for balsam," writes the old learned knight-doctor of Norwich, satirising the mania which in his time prevailed for using pulverised mummy as a medicament. What would Sir Thomas Browne have said on reading a modern advertisement which sets forth that such usually impalpable things as "poetical aspirations" could be sold by auction? Yet such is the fact. On the 3rd of July proximo the Honourable Judge Longfield will sell in the landed Estates Court, Dublin, all that "celebrated locality known as the Meeting of the Waters," with "a full mile of frontage to the best part of the Vale of Avoca." The sale of Shenstone's Leasowes, or Byron's Newstead, or Cowley's famous "barn," does not call up impressions half so incongruous as those awakened by a judicial auctioneer "knocking down" "The Meeting of the Waters" to the highest bidder. We may soon expect to hear the ominous cries of "Going, going—gone" uttered over "Moyle," and the "roar of its waters," and the "Harp that once through Tara's halls;" while "The Last Rose of Summer" and "Love's Young Dream" are perhaps "bought in" by some ancient admirer of the melodious poet who—another incongruity—faded away in a retreat with so undignified a name as "Sloperton Cottage." It is true that there is a good deal of solid prose connected with the sale of "The Meeting of the Waters." There are "thriving plantations," "mineral royalties," and the "fee simple of the lands of Knockanode and Raheenavine."

There is, besides, a world of philosophy in the auctioneering columns of the literary journals; and the latest casual glance at the microcosm of the sale-room shows, among other curiosities that are to be sold within the present or the coming month, the Garrick vase, made from Shakspeare's mulberry-tree; a cup from the same; a collection of letters "from Louis XI. to Louis Napoleon" ("the times of," we presume, sub intelligitur), and the key of the front gate of the Bastille, "certified by J. S. Bailly, Mayor of Paris;" the "tu trembles, Bailly," of the Champs de Mars. Is this the Bastille key which, Mr. Carlyle says, was wont to lie on the hall-table of George Washington? Then there are twenty-nine lines written by the man with the iron mask on the leaf of a book found on the floor of his cell; portraits of 256 Sovereign Pontiffs, of and from the Apostle St. Peter (?)—we suspect about as genuine likenesses as the portraits of the ancient Kings of Scotland in Holyrood. Most of these rarities form a portion of the well-known Napoleon Museum; and we are only surprised to see absent from the catalogue such items as Oliver Cromwell's skull, the first tooth of the Victor of Marengo (formerly the property of Cardinal Fesch), and the "fifth brick on the right-hand side of the back door" of Jack Cade's house.

A worthy, but somewhat too technically-minded, sapper and miner, being asked by his commanding officer what he should do if a comrade were shot down by his side, made answer, "Stuff him in a gabion or make a fascine of him." Some few years since, if a Minister of State was asked, "What should be done with a deserving literary man?" the tacit reply was, "Snub him, starve him; and when he is dead put one of his children into a charity school." We rejoice to say that the official form of reply has recently undergone a very favourable alteration. The Foreign and Colonial Offices have shown from time to time that they know how to reward literary merit. The British Consul-General at St. Petersburg was a well-known London journalist; the Consul at Venice is Mr. G. P. R. James, our most fertile novelist; the late esteemed Consul at Belgrade was of a family whose name is illustrious in political literature; and now the governing classes have shown their appreciation of talent by the appointment of Mr. Joseph A. Crowe, one of the most brilliant "specials" of the modern guerilla department of journalism, to the honourable and lucrative post of Consul-General at Leipsic. We believe that a consulate-general renders its holder eligible for the strictly diplomatic service, from which Consuls-simple are excluded. We had even a literary Ambassador to Paris in Queen Anne's time—Matthew Prior. Sir Charles Hanbury Williams, too, went Plenipo to Dresden during the Georgian era. We are content to resign that gross Sybarite as a literary man, and to think of him merely as a "Bart.;" but perhaps the most skilful diplomatist of our own time, Sir Henry Bulwer, is not only brother to the renowned author of "Pelham" and "The Caxtons," but has been himself a writer in belles lettres of no mean rank.

Goldsmith, as the writer of his epitaph nobly tells us, touched nothing that he did not ornament. It is a peculiarity in the universality of exaggerated crinoline that it is not seen anywhere without becoming to some extent a nuisance. In theatres and in churches, in railway-carriages, and on the benches of the House of Peers on a Royal "speech day," at dinner-tables, and in ballrooms crinoline becomes manifest, only to the annoyance and discomfort of society. Crinoline began by ignoring and outraging the principles of beauty and symmetry, and we now find it almost every day in active collision with the fine arts. Exaggerated crinoline has rendered ridiculous Mr. Millais' otherwise beautiful drawing illustrating Mr. Trollope's "Framley Parsonage," in the June number of the Cornhill. In this instance the damage done is but æsthetical; but this same exaggerated crinoline, with its abundant abominations of steel and whalebone, bids fair to ruin half the pictures hung below the line at the exhibition of the Royal Academy. It is positively exasperating to see the adamantine draperies of the ladies scraping, sweeping, and scrubbing against valuable pictures on the low level. In many instances we have seen streaks of colour removed from the canvas as though by the application of a finger-nail; but the ladies' hoops are the real offenders. The evil was bad enough last year; but the exhibition of 1860 has been an unusually thronged one. About such pictures as "The Black Brunswickers" and "The Inundation," the glorious works of Mr. Hook, and Mr. Dyce's inimitable "Pegwell Bay," there is always a tremendous crush; and the steel bars with which ladies fence their skirts come in dangerous proximity with the neighbouring paintings. When some irreparable damage has been done to a costly work of art the authorities of the Royal Academy will perhaps bethink themselves of putting railing at a moderate distance from the walls before the entire line of pictures. They successfully adopted this plan with Mr. Frith's "Derby Day;" and there is not the slightest reason why they should not adopt as a rule the system followed in the Louvre, the Luxembourg, and the national collections at the South Kensington Museum.

We perceive that the horrible inclemency of the weather has compelled a hospitable and intellectual lady dwelling at Little Holland House, Kensington, to issue a communiqué in the Times to her friends intimating the postponement of an intended "garden party." Bearing in mind the name of a famous poet, who would not improbably have been among the guests of a fête champêtre at "Little Holland House," we can't help thinking that the advertisement would have gained much in force and point had it been worded thus:—"Maud. Don't come into the garden. It rains."

The Brahminical classes in Parliament have been grumbling sorely at the puzzling questions put to candidates for Government appointments by the Civil Service Commissioners. Messrs. Bentinck and Baillie Cochrane make it a great grievance that the neophyte should be expected to know who such men as Euler and De Saussure were. Too much attention to such biographical minutiæ might certainly be productive of considerable annoyance. How would the Civil Service Commissioners themselves like to be asked what were the real Christian and sur names of Salmasius, Linnæus, Bamboccio, Correggio, and Kackermannus? And, pray, who was Smeetymnus, oh learned Commissioners? We are the more irritated at a needless biographical examination because we don't happen ourselves to know who De Saussure was—unless, indeed, one of the people who ascended Mont Blanc.

The great Fair of Leipsic has been held as usual; but it has degenerated, so far as literature is concerned, into a mere "Börsenhalle" for the settlement of accounts between retail booksellers and publishers. Railways have done almost everything that is necessary towards the dissemination of books. What little remains to be done must be accomplished by the removal of taxes on knowledge and by free trade in rags. A book fair is but a remnant of the middle ages, and fitter for Nishni Novgorod than for Central Germany.

MUSIC.

The performances of Grisi and Mario are at present the great attraction of the ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA. On Saturday and Tuesday last the "Favorita" and the "Huguenots" drew the greatest houses of the season. During Grisi's limited engagement of twelve nights her unrivalled powers have shone with such lustre, she has been acting with such energy and singing so beautifully, that every one of her appearances has been a triumph; and the consequence, we have no doubt, will be that her engagement will be prolonged to the end of the season—for the theatre cannot afford to lose one who, notwithstanding the competition of younger rivals, is still the queen of the lyric stage.

At HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE the "Huguenots" has likewise been performed, the characters of Raoul and Valentine having been sustained with great power and beauty by Giuglini and Titiens—the only two performers we have who in this opera approach the effect produced by Mario and Grisi.

The principal concert of the week has been that of the Philharmonic Society on Monday evening, which was honoured with the presence of the Queen and the Prince Consort, with Princesses Alice and Helena, and the King of the Belgians, now on a visit to her Majesty. The programme was as follows:—

PART I.

Sinfonia in A (Italian)	Mendelssohn.
Aria, "Ah, mon fils," Mdlle. Artôt ("Le Prophète")	Meyerbeer.
Overture, "Ruler of the Spirits"	Weber.

PART II.

Sinfonia, "Eroica"	Beethoven.
Recit., "Giunse alfin," Aria, "Deh vieni, non tardar," Mdlle. Artôt ("Le Nozze di Figaro")	Mozart.
Overture, "Ruy Blas"	Mendelssohn.

Conductor—Professor Sterndale Bennett, Mus. D.

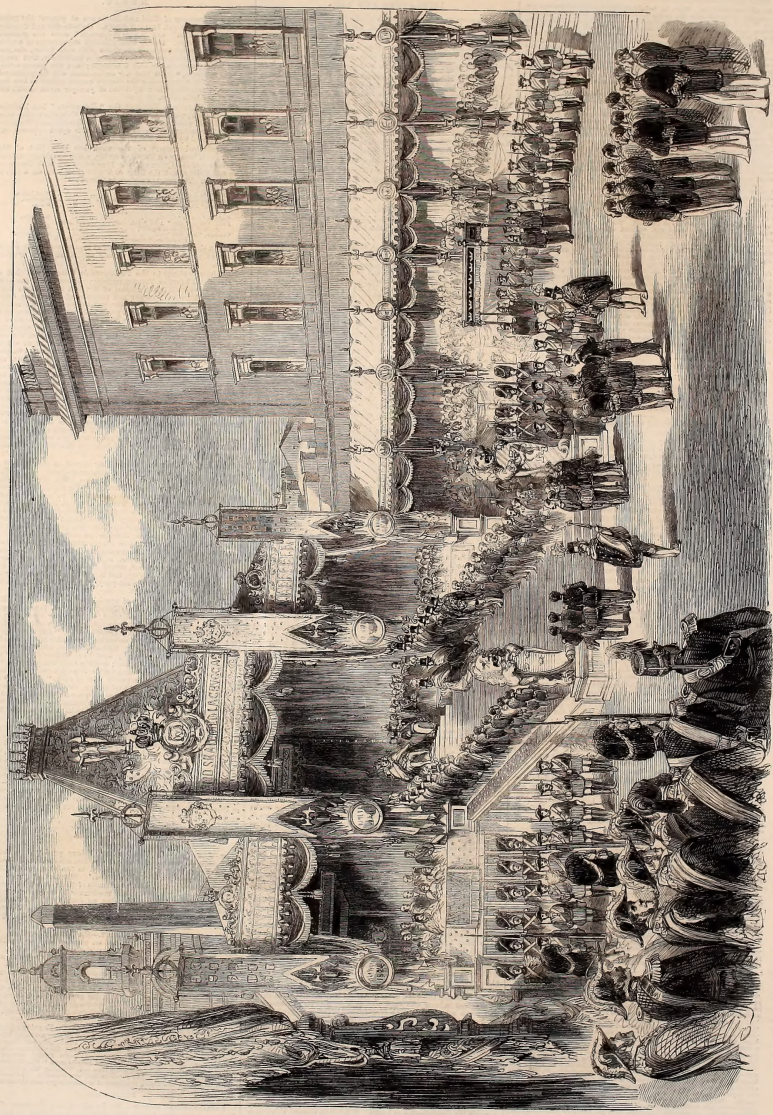
This was a short concert, but composed of the choicest music, magnificently performed, and most warmly applauded by a crowded audience.

Next in importance to the Philharmonic Concert was that of the MUSICAL UNION, on Tuesday morning. It was one of the extra matinées, at which it is the custom of Mr. Ella to introduce vocal music. On this occasion a new and very beautiful part-song, called "Daybreak," by Mr. W. G. Cusins, was sung by the Orpheus Glee Union, and warmly applauded. A young violinist, Herr Strauss, made his first appearance in England with great éclat. He is a native of Hungary; and, though only four-and-twenty, is already celebrated throughout Germany, and holds the eminent position of Concert-master at Frankfort. He possesses all the qualities of an accomplished performer—complete command of the instrument, a finished style, and great expression. A new trio for the piano, violin, and violoncello, by M. Lalo, a young Parisian composer, hitherto unknown in this country, was played by Lubeck, Strauss, and Piatti, and had great and deserved success, being a work of extraordinary merit. Herr Strauss showed the grace and purity of his style by his performance in Mozart's quintet in D, one of the very finest of that master's chamber pieces. And Herr Lubeck even heightened the admiration excited by his previous appearances at the Musical Union and Philharmonic Concert by his exquisite performance of three short solo pieces of his own composition—pieces full of grace, expression, and poetical fancy. Altogether, this was one of the most interesting concerts ever given by the able and judicious director of the Musical Union.

Mr. HAROLD THOMAS gave a morning concert on Monday last, at Collard's new concert-rooms, in Grosvenor-street—an excellent locale, by the way, for musical performances. Mr. Harold Thomas is a young musician of great talent and rising reputation both as a composer and a pianist, and his concert was an entertainment of great and varied excellence. The pieces which made the greatest impression—as shown by the warmth of the applause bestowed on them—were a short solo, composed and played by Mr. Thomas, called "Across Country," and full of the fire and animation of the chase; Mendelssohn's trio in D minor, performed by Mr. Thomas, with Mr. H. Blagrove and Signor Pezze; and the Moonlight Scene from Gounod's opera "La Nonne Sanglante," arranged for the piano and violoncello by Mr. Thomas, and played by him and Signor Pezze. There were, moreover, several fine vocal pieces sung by Miss Augusta Thomson, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Wilbye Cooper. The room was crowded with fashionable company, who seemed much gratified by this elegant entertainment.

Another concert worthy of special notice was that of Miss LEFFLER, at St. James's Hall, on Tuesday evening. It was an excellent selection of music, chiefly vocal, sung by our most favourite performers. Among the most remarkable pieces were Mercadante's "Se m'abbandoni," and Henry Leslie's ballad, "The Flower-girl," sung with much taste and expression by Miss Leffler; the "Shadow Song" in "Dinorah," sung by Mdme. Lemmens-Sherrington with marvellous brilliancy, and loudly encored; Wallace's song, "The Bellringer," sung by Mr. Santley; and the same composer's ballad, "Let me like a soldier fall," sung by Mr. Sims Reeves. Both were encored, as were likewise a pretty French song, "Chantez, O ma fauvette," sung very nicely by a débutante, Miss Rose Hersée; and a new ballad by L. Williams, sung, in her pure English style, by Miss Poole. Miss Arabella Goddard played a fantasia of Thalberg, Miss Humler a solo on the violin, and Mr. Clarke a solo on the harmonium.

MRS. ANDERSON has announced her annual morning concert to take place at Her Majesty's Theatre on Wednesday next. This lady's concerts are always pre-eminently distinguished by the magnificent scale on which they are planned, the host of talent employed, and the ample yet recherché character of the entertainment. On this occasion all the great stars of Her Majesty's Theatre—Titiens, Giuglini, Borghi-Mamo, Alboni, &c.; together with Miss Parepa, Miss Louisa Pyne, Mdlle. Artôt, and Miss Augusta Thomson—will appear. The principal instrumentalists will be Mrs. Anderson herself, and the great violinist Herr Becker; and the orchestra and chorus of Her Majesty's Theatre will contribute to the completeness of the concert.



THE THEATRES.

ST. JAMES'S.—On Tuesday Mr. Talexy produced probably the most important piece of the brief season devoted to the French drama at this theatre. It is a comedy, in five acts, by M. Octave Feuillet, and entitled "La Tentation." Whether husbands and wives will learn from it a better estimate of their mutual relations—the latter to be less romantic, and the former to be more attentive and constant—may be doubted; but we cannot withhold our admiration of the excellent acting of M. Brindeau and Mdlle. Duverger. The drama is well placed on the stage, and does M. Talexy great credit.

REAPPEARANCE OF MR. PARRY.—On Monday evening the Gallery of Illustration was crowded on occasion of the benefit of Mr. and Mrs. German Reed. After the usual performance, the bénéficiaires introduced Mr. Parry, in his old character of a humorous pianist, which he maintained with all his old spirit. As a patter-singer he has not been, and cannot be, excelled; and in many particulars it is clear that his taste and execution have ripened with time. It was intimated that he had a purpose to return to the stage as an exhibitionist; and, now that his great rival is no more, Mr. Parry has certainly a fair chance of success as a drawing-room entertainer, and will do wisely, we think, to improve the opportunity.

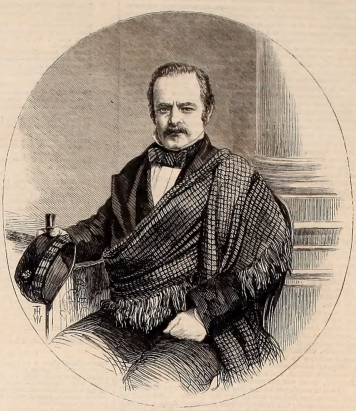
MISS GLYN'S SHAKSPEAREAN READINGS.—On Tuesday se'nnight a large and fashionable audience was present at the Assembly Rooms, Boston, to hear Miss Glyn read "Macbeth." The impassioned lament of Macduff over the murder of his wife and little ones, the sublimest effort of the reading, was most heartily applauded.—On Friday evening H. Ingram, Esq., M.P., engaged the talented lady to read "The Merchant of Venice" to the members of the Athenæum and Working Men's College at the Corn Exchange, when the spacious hall was crowded. The reading, which lasted over two hours, was listened to with the greatest attention.

PARLIAMENTARY NOTICE.—Mr. Punch, to take the sense of the House on the question, whether there would be any precedent for any proceeding whatever, unless some precedent had been originally created at some time or other, and what constitutional objection there can possibly be to the creation of a rational precedent now?—Punch.

CORONATION OF THE KING OF SWEDEN.—THE FOUR ESTATES OF THE KINGDOM TAKING THE OATH OF ALLEGIANCE.—FROM A SKETCH BY OUR SPECIAL ARTIST.—SEE DESCRIPTION, PAGE 562.

CUP PRESENTED TO MR. G. F. WATTS BY THE HONOURABLE SOCIETY OF LINCOLN'S INN.

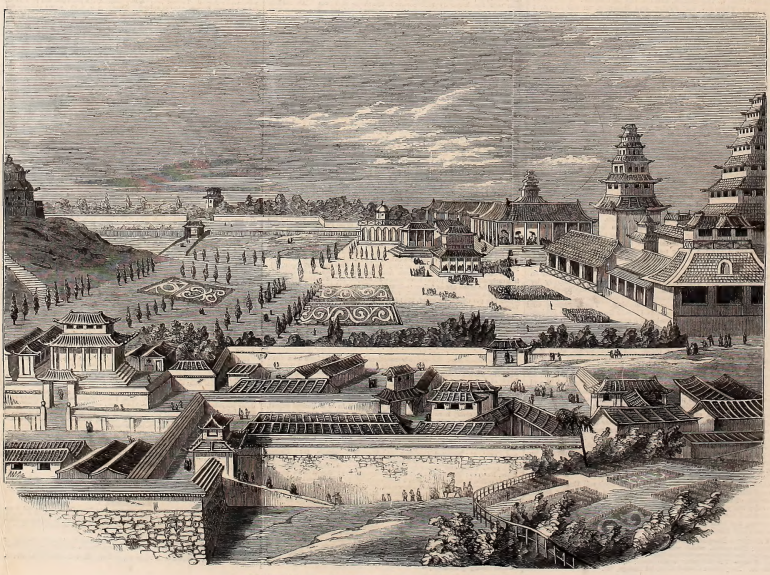
IN the Number of this Journal of February 4 we noticed at considerable length the great fresco-painting, by Mr. Watts, in the hall of the Honourable Society of Lincoln's Inn. We are now gratified to announce that a week or two ago Mr. Watts, after having partaken of the hospitality of the inn, was, amidst the loud applause of nearly four hundred members, presented with a superb silver-gilt cup, of the value of £150, and a purse containing £500. The fresco was, it will be remembered, the gratuitous production of Mr. Watts; and the testimonial was, "therefore, not in the character of compensation, but as a testimony of the friendly feeling of the society for the man who had selected it, as the recipient of so valued a gift, and of its appreciation of his genius as an artist." The cup is from the well-known establishment of Messrs. Lambert and Rawling, Coventry-street.



DR. MACGOWAN.

THIS gentleman, whose lectures on Japan under the auspices of several noble and scientific gentlemen of the metropolis have secured the encomium of the daily press, is a native of New York. After pursuing a course of study in the hospitals of Paris, he went to China as a medical missionary, in which country he spent seventeen years in the exercise of his profession, conducting an hospital, publishing a newspaper, and travelling extensively over the empire. Last year he extended his travels to Japan, where he was enabled, from his knowledge of the language and literature of China, to make original and valuable observations. From the scientific treatises that he had published in China, on the electric telegraph, and on cyclones, having been republished in Japan, the latter by the Prince of Satsuma, he found on his arrival that he was not unknown in that country. His Chinese newspaper had also preceded him, and, as he had filled the office of American Consul in China, he was permitted to hold intercourse with officials of the highest rank.

Dr. Macgowan's accounts of the Japanese are, on the whole, highly favourable, although he considers them as having been described by recent writers in too glowing colours. He thinks there are philological and other evidences indicative of the Japanese race being of the same stock as the aborigines of North America. They are less profound than the Chinese, having produced no original thinker, nor any system of philosophy or religion. They are braver than their continental neighbours, and will be found more prompt in resenting injuries; a tithe of the wrongs inflicted daily on the Chinese by foreigners would it perpetrated in Japan infuriate the entire race.



In his accounts of the sciences in Japan the lecturer states that the only scientific instrument that he was able to show to the Governor of Nagasaki that was new was the gyroscope. The instrument was immediately sent to the savans at Jeddo for examination, the more readily because the ingenious and inquisitive functionaries were informed that Western physicists were not agreed in their explanations of its mode of action. It was believed that the academicians of this capital would be able to settle the question.

As a field for Western commercial and manufacturing enterprise Japan, in Dr. Macgowan's opinion, is full of promise, if considered apart from the obstacle which the Government, chiefly on account of not unfounded fears of mischiefs likely to accrue from foreign intercourse, casts in the way of trade. He lays much stress on the injury to foreign not less than to Japanese interests which is sure to follow the introduction of opium into those fair islands. In religious matters he regards them as highly tolerant, and not opposed to Christianity as a religion—they detest it only as inimical to their nationality. Proselytism is utterly impracticable, owing to the omniscience of the Government through the system of espionage, which renders Japan what Dr. Macgowan styles a "model despotism." Yet missionaries, he says, ought to be sent to impart instruction on secular subjects, to dispel prejudice and counteract the evil influences exerted by unscrupulous foreigners—influences wholly incompatible with healthful commerce. The lectures are illustrated by an extensive collection of curiosities.

D. S. MACGOWAN, ESQ., M.D.

Dr. Macgowan is not unknown to the British public. A small volume of his on "Medical Missions," originally published in New York, was republished many years ago in Edinburgh. A pamphlet of his on Chinese and Foreign Relations, published at Shanghai in 1857, contained much information of value to the negotiators of the treaties of Tien-Tsin, as the question was discussed from a Chinese point of view. He counseled the adoption of a system of passports as a protection to the Chinese against lawless foreigners. It was acted upon, and regarded as a concession, averting, it is believed, protracted hostilities after the capture of Tien-Tsin.

The Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India has found in Dr. Macgowan an active coadjutor in its researches into Chinese botany and agriculture, and in its attempts at introducing Chinese plants into India. He was the first to describe the singular showers of sand to which the north of China is subject, and the first to call attention to the recent change of the bed of the Yellow River, and the discoverer of the magnificent eyre, or hare, of the Tsien-Tang. Papers on those subjects, and various others—as on table-turning and spirit-rapping in China, on Chinese and Aztec plumagery, on the production of artificial pearls, on insect wax and vegetable tallow, &c., &c.—have been translated and published throughout Europe. Sir R. Murchison, on taking the chair at one of the lectures at Willis's Rooms, stated that, "having presided over meetings of the Royal Geographical Society, and over sections of the British Association, when Dr. Macgowan gave the result of his observations on China and Japan, he could safely commend the lectures of his learned friend."

Dr. Macgowan had the honour of being recently presented to her Majesty by Mr. Dallas, the American Minister. Our Portrait of the Lecturer is from a photograph by Armstrong, Princess-street, Edinburgh.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

IN spite of the rain, which fell in torrents at intervals, the Ascot Tuesday was quite a triumph, as regards both fields and attendance. For the Trial Stakes twenty-three started, and the American stable cut them all down with Cock-a-Hoop; Gaspard and Zodiac being pretty well up, fifth and sixth. Lord Strathmore's £300 purchase of Mouravieff, from Mr. Bowes, turned out a very lucky one, as he swept the Three-year-old Biennial and the Stakes as well, making five races he has won out of six since his Lordship bought him. The Gold Vase was won with some difficulty by Horror, who received 1lb. from Avalanche, and beat her by half a length, while Rupee bolted among the gorse. Magnum was only a head behind Avalanche, which rather spoils the performance. In the Ascot Biennial, Lord Stamford's Diophantus rather more than brought back the 400 gs. his Lordship paid for him at the Royal sale last year, and in the most hollow style; while Wizard, with 5lb. extra and nothing to beat, did what he liked with the Ascot Derby pair. Beyond the defeat of Seclusion and Contadina by Allington for the Coronation Stakes, and that of Big Ben by a King Tom filly in the Fernhill, there was not much to note in the racing of Wednesday. The rain continued on the Cup Day with but very little cessation till just as her Majesty was leaving the course. The racing on the whole was good; but Brown Duchess made very light of the field for the New Stakes, which was below the average in point of quality. Horror gave his half-sister Avalanche 5lb., and just beat her in a very punishing race for the Royal Stand Plate. The Promised Land, Butterfly, Rupee, Gamester, Magnum, Newcastle, and Weatherbound were the only starters for the Cup. They merely cantered, so to speak, for the first half mile, and then Promised Land led them along at a good pace, Butterfly and Rupee well up, and Gamester, who ran in bandages, and went very short, lying some lengths away with Newcastle. The latter got on to rather better terms with his horses at the last turn, and up to the half distance. Promised Land seemed to have the race in hand, but, true to his Derby and St. Leger antecedents, this 2600-guinea purchase shut up when he was collared, and left Rupee to beat her Oaks conqueror, Butterfly, after a very close and severe finish. The trainer of Butterfly objected to the decision, on the ground that Rupee—who was stated to have been purchased by the Earl of Stamford before the race—swerved on to his mare close at the finish.

Underhand, 9st. 10lb., heads the weights for the Goodwood Cup, and gives 24lb. to Thormanby, and 3st. 3lb. to Umpire. Newton on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, and Hampton on the two first of those days, are the racing fixtures for next week.

The average of the Royal sale yearlings, which once towered as high as 441 gs. in Yellow Jack's year, sank from 219 gs. in 1858 to 183 gs. last June. This time the average for the 20 rose to 221½ gs., in spite of such a drenching afternoon that Mr. Tattersall was obliged to do business in a phaeton. The premier in price was a capital chestnut colt, by Stockwell, from Stamp, and the very image of his sire, which went for 810 gs. to Lord Coventry's nod, after a smart contest between Lord Stamford, Sir Joseph Hawley, and Mr. Merry. Sir Joseph bid more than 700, and Mr. Merry stopped at 800. This 810 purchase was the highest of the sale, and an increase of 100 gs. over Imaus, the premier of last year. Lord Stamford secured the next in price, a chestnut colt by West Australian, from Rosaline, for 520 gs.; and Sir Joseph Hawley a bay colt by Orlando, from Tarella, for 400 gs. The highest-priced filly, a sister to Imperieuse (for whom Colonel Towneley bid 500 gs. before she was sold to M. Lupin), became the Colonel's for 400 gs. Mr. Greville's last year's average of 308 gs. fell on this occasion to 249½ gs. Lord Stamford's purchases numbered six out of the fourteen, and included the brown colt by Orlando, from Vivandière, 670 gs.; and the bay colt by Orlando, from Vesuvienne, 510 gs., the two highest-priced lots. Sister to Fravola went to one of Woolcot's masters for 450 gs.; and the Torment filly, whose sire cost Lord Stamford 1100 gs. last year, joined his Lordship's lot at 900 gs. less. Colonel Towneley was also a purchaser of a filly by Orlando from Raillery for 200 gs. Lord Spencer's five yearlings averaged 115 gs. at Tattersall's; and 190 gs. for the Annette colt was the top price. Chapelier, a four-year-old son of Flying Dutchman and Blue Bonnet, behaved so savagely in the yard after he had been sold for 37 gs. that it is to be hoped that Mr. Rarey, who is making a successful country tour, and comes to the Alhambra again next week, may try his hand on him. The Grimston sale, which includes Stockwell, West Australian, Warlock, and a large number of yearlings, brood mares, and foals, takes place at the paddocks near Tadcaster on Tuesday; and on Saturday thirty-two yearlings of Mr. Blenkiron, principally by Kingston, will be sold at Eltham. Rumour speaks highly of a trio of Kingstons, from Dinah, Defenceless, and a Heron mare; and the stock of Marsyas is also large and promising. The average of the Kingstons has steadily increased in 1856-59 from 99½ gs. to 163½ gs.

The great pigeon-shooting Derby of 5 sovs. each, 1 sov. forfeit, at the Red House, was decided last Thursday week in favour of Mr. Stirling Craufurd, who shot his six birds. Captain Bateson, the Hon. C. Molyneux, and Mr. A. Walsh shot five birds each, and finished in the above order for the second, third, and fourth prizes, when they shot it out. Captain Bateson lost a bird, which fell dead just over the fence, or he would have tyed with Mr. Craufurd. Twenty-five other subscribers made up the field, and fifteen paid forfeit. Mr. F. Heathcote was the handicapper, and placed Mr. Craufurd at 31 and Captain Bateson at 30½ yards each, and Mr. F. Milbanke and Mr. F. Craven at 31. The head prize was £100, and the others £25, £20, and £10; and the conditions were—guns 10 bore to 14, half a yard extra for every ⅛ oz. of shot over 1⅛ oz., and six birds each.

The Surrey and Sussex match was drawn after several vicissitudes from weather. In the first innings Caffyn made seventy-three before he was run out, and against an infinity of bowlers. On Monday Sixteen of Kent play England at Lord's; and on the same day the Eleven of Nottingham and Sixteen of Sheffield is the issue to be tried at Sheffield; while on Thursday the M. C. C. and Ground meet the Kent County Club at Lord's, and Surrey engages Nottinghamshire at the Oval.

On Wednesday the Royal London Yacht Club sail their first and second class yachts from Erith to the Nore and back. The sailing matches of the Royal Thames Yacht Club on Thursday are open for schooner yachts of any tonnage belonging to a Royal club, from Gravesend, round the Mouse Light, and back to Greenhithe; and on Saturday the Irish Model Yacht Club have matches for yachts of the first and third classes.

CRICKET.—Marylebone Cricket Club and Ground v. County of Sussex: This match, which was commenced on Monday, was finished on Tuesday, the Marylebone Cricket Club and Ground winning in 1 innings and 15 runs. The following is the score:—Sussex, 1st innings, 73; 2nd ditto, 39. Marylebone Cricket Club, 1st innings, 127.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

THE unaltered state of political affairs on the Continent has continued to exercise some influence in the Stock Exchange. In Home Securities the dealings this week, both for Money and Time, have not increased, and prices have experienced numerous, though not important fluctuations. On the whole, however, they have been well supported. The Unfunded Debt has shown more firmness than for some time past, and it has touched 11s. to 12s. premium.

The demand for accommodation at the Bank of England has been far from active; but in Lombard street, and at the large discount-houses, the inquiry has ruled steady, as follows:—First-class short bills, 3¾ to 3⅞; three months', 3⅞; four months', 4 to 4¼; and six months', 4¼ to 4½ per cent. The supply of commercial paper is certainly increasing; nevertheless, bankers, almost generally, are discounting freely. In the Stock Exchange money is worth from 3½ to 4 per cent on the security of Consols. The transfer books of the India Five per Cents, of Consols, and India Stock are now closed for the dividends.

The imports of the precious metals have been on a very moderate scale; but the demand for gold on Continental account is still heavy. A few parcels have been sold to the Bank; but £20,000 of fine gold has been withdrawn for transmission in Bombay by the next packet. Silver is in slightly-improved request, at 5s. 2d. for Mexican dollars, and 5s. 1⅝d. per ounce for bars. Under £200,000 will, it is expected, be forwarded to India by the above packet. The latest exchange at Hong-Kong was 4s. 9½d., or 1½ per cent against this country; and at Shanghai, 6s. 8d., being about previous quotations.

The Stock Exchange Committee have issued their report in reference to the Pullinger frauds. They have, we may observe, suspended the firm of Messrs. Scrimgeour until March next for having entered into time bargains for Pullinger; and their lengthy report states that the sum of £53,285 was paid into the house by that person in the shape of losses. An outside speculator, however, appears to have received £57,000. The committee somewhat condemn the conduct of the directors of the Union Bank of London for having withheld the name of Messrs. Scrimgeour in the list forwarded; but that is a matter which will, possibly, be more fully discussed at the next half-yearly meeting.

The dealings in the shares of the newly-formed companies have been far from numerous. Prices, however, may be considered steady. Ocean Marine Insurance have been done at 2 to 2¼ prem.; Universal Marine, ⅛ to ⅜ prem.; London and Provincial Marine, ¼ dis. to par; and London and South African Bank, ½ to ¼ dis.

The usual dividend of 8½ per cent for the half year has been declared by the directors of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Company. The dividend of the Bank of British North America is 6, of the African Steam Company 7, per cent per annum. The directors of the Atlantic Royal Mail Steam Company are about to borrow £500,000 to increase the efficiency of their fleet.

On Monday Home Stocks were steady in price, but the dealings in them were far from numerous:—Bank Stock marked 228½ to 229; Reduced Three per Cents, 93½ ⅝; Consols, for Money, 94⅞ 95⅛; Ditto, for Time, 95⅛; New Three per Cents, 93⅝ ½ ¼; India, Stock, 222½ to 224½; Ditto, Five per Cents, 106⅝ ¾; Ditto, Five per Cent Rupee Paper, 98; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cents, 102½ ⅞; Ditto, Debentures, 96½ ¾; Ditto, Bonds, 4s. dis.; Exchequer Bills, 7s. to 10s. prem. Prices were a shade higher on the following day, with a steady market. Bank Stock closed at 229½; Reduced Three per Cents, 93½ ⅝; Consols, 95 to 95⅛; New Three per Cents, 93⅝ ⅝; New Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 79¼; Long Annuities, 1885, 17 5-16; India Stock, 222; Ditto, Five per Cents, 106⅝; Ditto, Five per Cent Enfaced Paper, 97⅝; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cents, 102½; Ditto, Debentures, 96¼; Ditto, Bonds, 8s. dis; Exchequer Bills, 10s. to 11s. prem. Money dealings were rather more numerous on Wednesday:—Bank Stock touched 229½; Reduced Three per Cents, 93½; Consols, 95⅛; New Three per Cents, 93⅝; New Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 79; New Three-and-a-Half per Cents, 100; Long Annuities, 1885, 17 5-16; India Stock, 224½; Ditto Five per Cent, 106⅞; Ditto, Five per Cent Paper, 97¾; Ditto, Debentures, 96¾; Ditto, Bonds, 7s. dis.; Exchequer Bills, 11s. prem. Prices were rather drooping on Thursday, and the market was very inactive:—Consols for Money were 94⅞ 95; for the Account, 95¼ ⅜; the New Three per Cents and the Reduced sold at 93¾ ⅝; the New India Five per Cents, 106¾ ⅞; Exchequer Bills, 9s. to 12s. prem.; Bank Stock was quoted at 229½; and India Five per Cent paper, 97½.

The dealings in the Foreign House have been to a moderate extent, and in nearly all instances prices have been well supported. The leading quotations for the week are as follow:—Brazilian Five per Cents, 100¼; Brazilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 1852, 88¼; Ditto, 1860, 87¾ ex div.; Buenos Ayres Six per Cents, Deferred, 25½; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 66⅛ ¼; Dutch Four per Cents, 101¼; Belgian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 95¼; Mexican Three per Cents, 21⅝; Peruvian Four-and-a-Half per Cents (Uribarren), 83½; Portuguese Three per Cents, 45; Russian Five per Cents, 108½; Russian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 97¾; Russian Three per Cents, 64⅛; Sardinian Five per Cents, 82½ ex div.; Spanish Three per Cents, 48; Ditto, Committee's Certificates of Coupon, not Funded, 4⅝; Turkish Six per Cents, 75¾; Ditto, New, 59¼; Turkish Four per Cents, 102; Venezuela Three per Cents, 25.

In Joint-stock Bank Shares the transactions have been far from numerous. Prices, however, exhibit very little change when compared with last week:—Agra and United States have realised 78; Australia, 66; Bank of Egypt, 21¾; Bank of London 53½; Commercial of London, 20¼; Commercial of Canada, 21½; London Chartered of Australia, 23½; London Joint-Stock, 33¼; London and Westminster, 61¼; Oriental, 42⅝; Ottoman, 18; Provincial of Ireland, 87; and Union of London, 24.

Colonial Government Securities have been dealt in to a limited extent, yet prices generally have ruled firm:—New Brunswick Six per Cents have sold at 108½; New South Wales Six per Cents, 1871 to 1876, 100¼; Ditto 1888 and upwards, 100¼; Nova Scotia Six per Cents, 108½; and Victoria Six per Cents, 107½.

The Miscellaneous Market has been quiet, as follows:—Anglo-Mexican Mint, 14 ex div.; Canada Land, 122; Crystal Palace, 32¼; Madras Irrigation and Canal, 4⅛; National Discount, 4⅛; Electric Telegraph, 107; General Steam, 25½; London General Omnibus, 1⅝; North British Australasian, ⅞; Peel River Land and Mineral, 46; Peninsular and Oriental Steam, 77; Ditto, New, 34; Red Sea and Indian Telegraph, 17½; Royal Mail Steam, 50¾; London Docks, 66⅝; Grand Junction Canal, 59; Leeds and Liverpool, 500; Regent's, 21; Chelsea Waterworks, 17½; Ditto, New Guaranteed, 23¾; West Middlesex, 107½; Waterloo Bridge, 2¾.

European Gas Shares have been done at 10⅛; Great Central 8⅝ ex div.; Imperial New, 32; Imperial Continental, 47½; Alliance Marine Insurance, 68½; Atlas, 16¾; Globe, 101; Guardian, 53½; Indemnity Marine, 155; Phœnix, 175 ex div. and bonus; Royal Exchange, 309; Sun Life, 70.

Although the traffic receipts continue large there has been no particular movement in the Railway Share Market. The last return of the London and North-Western line shows an increase in the receipts of £13,102; the Great Northern, an increase of £2706; the Great Western, an increase of £4640; and the London and South-Western, an increase of £154, when compared with the corresponding period in 1859. Annexed are Thursday's official closing quotations;—

ORDINARY SHARES AND STOCKS.—Bristol and Exeter, 103½; Caledonian, 91⅞; Eastern Counties, 54¼; Eastern Union, B Stock, 26½; Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee, 30½; Great Northern, 115½; Ditto, A Stock, 116; Great Western, 69½; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 105; London and Blackwall, 70¾; London, Chatham, and Dover, 10½; London and North-Western, 101⅝; London and South-Western, 93¾; Midland, 117½; North British, 61⅝; North-Eastern—Berwick, 96½; Ditto—York, 81½; North Staffordshire, 13¾; South-Eastern, 85½.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, June 4.—To-day's market was very scantily supplied with English wheat, for the most part, in good saleable condition. Both red and white qualities sold steadily, at an advance in the quotations compared with Monday last of from 1s. to 2s. per quarter. Foreign wheat commanded more attention, at 2s. per quarter above previous rates. There was a steady business doing both in English and foreign barley, at extreme rates. Malt, too, was in fair request, at full currencies. The oat trade was very firm, but no quotable change took place in prices. Beans, owing to limited arrivals, advanced 1s. per quarter, and the value of peas was well supported. Country flour was 1s. per 280 lb. dearer.

June 6.—The supplies of most kinds of produce on offer in to-day's market were only moderate, and the trade generally, ruled steady at fully Monday's quotations.

English.—Wheat: Essex and Kent, red, 48s. to 58s.; ditto, white, 50s. to 61s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 48s. to 58s.; rye, 30s. to 31s.; grinding barley, 27s. to 30s.; distilling ditto, 28s. to 31s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 49s. to 69s.; brown ditto, 48s. to 49s.; Kingston and Ware, 60s. to 69s.; Chevalier, 71s. to 72s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 22s. to 27s.; potato ditto, 28s. to 31s.; Youghal and Cork, black, 22s. to 27s.; ditto, white, 23s. to 28s.; tick beans, 37s. to 39s.; grey peas, 36s. to 38s.; maple, 38s. to 41s.; white, 36s. to 38s.; boilers, 39s. to 41s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 46s. to 50s.; town households, 31s. to 43s.; country marks, 28s. to 39s. per 280 lb.; American, 26s. to 32s. per barrel; French, 44s. to 42s. per sack.

Seeds.—Clover seed moves off slowly, and the quotations are almost nominal. Canary seed is firm, at very full prices. Most other seeds are inactive.

Linseed, English, crushing, 54s. to 58s.; Calcutta, 48s. to 49s. 0d.; hempseed, 38s. to 40s. per quarter; coriander, 14s. to 16s. per cwt.; tares, 7s. to 8s. 0d. per bushel; English rapeseed, 62s. to 66s. per quarter. Linseed cakes, English, £9 10s. to £10 10s.; ditto, foreign, £9 10s. to £11 0s.; rape cakes, £5 0s. to £6 0s. per ton. Canary, 46s. to 52s. per quarter. White clover, 84s. to 96s. per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 8d. to 8½d.; of household ditto, 6d. to 7½d. per 4 lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 53s. 4d.; barley, 35s. 10d.; oats, 26s. 8d.; rye, 30s. 3d.; beans, 44s. 1d.; peas, 41s. 0d.

The Six Weeks' Averages.—Wheat, 52s. 4d.; barley, 36s. 11d.; oats, 25s. 8d.; rye, 35s. 5d.; beans, 42s. 5d.; peas, 39s. 1d.

English Grain Sold Last Week.—Wheat, 119,989; barley, 2594; oats, 6290; rye, 50; beans, 1953; peas, 344 quarters.

Tea.—There is a moderate business doing in nearly all kinds of tea, at full quotations. The shipments from China show an increase, compared with last year, of nearly 12,000,000 lbs.

Sugar.—Nearly all raw qualities have met a dull inquiry this week, at a reduction in value of 6d. per cwt. Refined goods—the show of which is moderate—are a dull inquiry, at 51s. 6d. to 52s. per cwt. for common lumps.

Coffee.—The market remains steady, and, compared with last week, prices show rather more firmness.

Rice.—Several rather large parcels have found buyers at very full prices. Bengal, 10s. 3d. to 14s. 6d.; and low Moulmein, 8s. 9d. per cwt.

Provisions.—Fine parcels of butter continue in steady request, at full quotations; but inferior parcels rule heavy. Bacon is held for more money, and there is a steady business doing in hams and lard.

Tallow.—The demand is tolerably firm, and P.Y.C., on the spot, is selling at 52s. to 52s. 3d. per cwt. The quotations for delivery during the last three months, are 52s. 9d. to 53s.

Oils.—Linseed oil is in moderate request, at 28s. 3d. per cwt. Rape is selling at 40s. 6d. to 43s.; fine palm, 45s.; olive, Gallipoli, £62 10s. to £63; sperm, £92 to £93; pale seal, £36. Spirits of turpentine, 35s. 6d. to 36s.; rough, 9s. per cwt.

Spirits.—Rum is in fair request, at 1s. 8d. to 1s. 9d. per gallon for proof Leewards, and 1s. 7d. to 1s. 8d. for proof East India. A Government contract is out for 100,000 gallons. We have no change to notice in the value of brandy. Grain spirit supports previous rates.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 0s. to £4 15s. 0d.; clover ditto, £4 0s. to £5 15s.; and straw, £1 6s. to £1 14s. per load. Trade steady.

Coals.—Best house coals, 17s. 6d. to 18s. 0d.; seconds, 15s. 6d. to 16s. 6d.; Hartley's, 15s. 3d. to 16s. 0d.; and manufacturers', 13s. 3d. to 16s. 3d. per ton.

Hops.—The business doing in our market is only moderate; nevertheless prices are supported. The duty has been done at £180,000.

Wool.—Since the close of the public sales, at which about 70,000 bales were disposed of, very little business has been passing in wool, at previous rates.

Potatoes.—The supplies are moderately extensive, and the trade is heavy, at from 85s. to 155s. per ton.

Metropolitan Cattle Market.—(Thursday, June 7.)—A very limited supply of beasts, chiefly in middling condition, was on sale in to-day's market. All breeds moved off readily, at fully Monday's quotations, and the primest Scots would have realised 5s. 8d. per 8lbs. Although the show of sheep was by no means extensive, the mutton trade was heavy, at 2d. per 8lbs. less money. We have to report a dull sale for lambs, at a fall in value of from 2d. to 4d. per 8lbs. There was very little business doing either in pigs or milch cows, and the quotations were barely supported. The veal trade was very inactive, and prices gave way 2d. per 8lbs. Per 8lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 4s. to 4s. 2d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 6d. to 4s. 10d.; prime large oxen, 5s. to 5s. 4d.; prime Scots, &c., 5s. 4d. to 5s. 8d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 6d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 8d. to 5s. 2d.; prime coarse-woolled sheep, 5s. 4d. to 5s. 6d.; prime Southdown ditto, 5s. 8d. to 5s. 10d.; large coarse calves, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 0d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 2d. to 5s. 8d.; large hogs, 4s. to 4s. 6d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 8d. to 5s.; lambs, 5s. 8d. to 7s. 4d.; suckling calves, 19s. to 22s.; and quarter-old store pigs, 22s. to 30s. each. Total supply: Beasts, 751; cows, 136; sheep and lambs, 8332; calves, 264; pigs, 200. Foreign: Beasts, 200; sheep, 1859; calves, 180.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—The supplies of meat are moderate. Trade is less active, as follows:—Beef, from 3s. 6d. to 4s. 8d.; mutton, 3s. 10d. to 5s. 6d.; lamb, 5s. 8d. to 6s. 6d.; veal, 4s. to 4s. 10d.; pork, 4s. to 5s. per 8lb. by the carcase. ROBERT HERBERT.

Price 21 guineas, cost 40 guineas only a few months since. To be seen at Brompton House, 29 and 23, Queen's-buildings, Knightsbridge.

FURNITURE.—Gratis: a new and elaborately-ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, containing over 300 designs of Furniture, Iron Bedsteads, Bedding, &c., with prices and estimates for all classes of houses. Country orders carriage free.—LEWIN CRAWCOUR and CO., House Furnishers, 22 and 23, Queen's-buildings, Knightsbridge, London.—N.B. A very elegant and complete WALNUT DRAWING-ROOM SUITE to be SOLD for 33 guineas, recently cost 60 guineas; dining-room ditto, in Spanish mahogany, 28 guineas; and two handsome and complete bedroom suites, in fine mahogany and birch, with winged wardrobes and marble-top wash-stands, 25 guineas. The whole of the above are decided bargains.

FURNITURE for a DRAWING-ROOM, fine walnut, of chaste and elegant design, in rich silk, very superior manufacture, and equal to new—a great bargain—price for the whole suite 48 guineas, nearly half the original cost, consisting of a beautifully-designed cabinet, with richly-carved back and doors and marble top; superior centre table, on handsome pillar and claws, with occasional and fancy tables to match; six solid carved cabriole chairs, and luxurious spring-stuffed settee, easy and Victoria chairs, all covered in rich silk en suite, with extra loose chintz cases; three fancy walnut occasional chairs, an inlaid whatnot, and large-size brilliant plate chimneyglass, in richly-gilt frame; also, a fine-toned 6¾ walnut cottage piano, by a good maker, 20 guineas; and a massive and complete solid Spanish mahogany dining-room suite, in morocco leather, including handsome sideboard, noble telescope-table, &c., 49 guineas. The whole is an opportunity rarely to be met with, and may be seen at 22 and 23, Queen's-buildings, Knightsbridge.

SECONDHAND FURNITURE.—Just received in exchange, in capital condition, nearly equal to new, an OAK DINING-ROOM SUITE, the wood beautifully marked. It consists of a 6 ft. 6-in. sideboard, with plate-glass back, of very elegant design; a set of patent telescope-frame dining-tables, 4 ft. 6 in. by 10 ft.; a three-tier dinner waggon; twelve handsome chairs, with carved frames, covered with figured crimson velvet, and gilt-nailed; and a pair of easy-chairs, covered, to correspond. Price for the whole, only 60 guineas. There is also on view a larger suite in oak, of unusual beauty, for a dining-room. This comprises a 7-ft. massive sideboard, fitted in the most improved style, with carved and shaped front, and large plate glass back, in handsome carved frame; a massive set of dining-tables, working with a patent screw, the wood of the finest description, on richly-carved legs; a three-tier massive dinner waggon, on castors; twelve superb, carved, oval-back chairs, with stuffed backs and seats, covered with rich green velvet, relieved with gilt nails; and a pair of carved oval-backed easy-chairs to correspond. Price for the whole, 97 guineas, little more than half the cost. A magnificent SUITE of LOUIS XVI. GILT FURNITURE will shortly be offered at a price that must ensure an immediate purchaser. Full particulars will be announced when in possession.—BELGRAVE HOUSE, 12, Sloane-street, Belgravia.

NEW FULL-COMPASS PIANOFORTES on HIRE, at moderate charges, at Messrs ROBERT COCKS and Co.'s, No. 6, New Burlington-street, Regent-street, W. Drawings gratis and postage-free.

TOLKIEN'S INDIAN PIANOFORTE.—This Piano, with its resisting power, concave bracings, and perpendicular bolts, is found, after severe trials in the EAST and WEST INDIES, to be the only Pianoforte ever manufactured capable of resisting the heats and damps of these climates. Height 4 feet. In elegant designs, including cases, 40 guineas. Illustrated Catalogues gratis.—27, King William-street, London-bridge, E.C.

TOLKIEN'S PIANOS.—Public Attention is called to a large assortment of the best Pianofortes in England, Rosewood and Walnut-tree Cottages and Piccolos, 6⅞ octaves, with all the latest improvements, some a little used, from 19 to 30 guineas. May be purchased on easy terms, at 27, King William-street London-bridge. Pianofortes for hire. Illustrated Catalogues gratis.

TOLKIEN'S 25-GUINEA PIANOFORTE, with easy terms of purchase, elegant designs, and various woods, 6⅞ octaves, is superior to any English or Foreign Piano at the price. Twenty-five years' test has proved the truth of this. Illustrated Catalogues gratis.—27, King William-street, London-bridge, E.C.

CHAPPELL'S FOREIGN MODEL PIANOFORTE, price Fifty Guineas. This instrument has (unlike the ordinary Cottage Pianoforte) Three Strings and the fullest Grand Compass of Seven Octaves. It is strengthened by every possible means to endure the greatest amount of wear, and to stand perfectly in any climate. The workmanship is of the best description; the tone is round, full, and rich; and the power equal to that of a Bichord Grand. The case is of the most elegant description, in rosewood; the touch elastic, and the repetition very rapid. Every possible precaution has been taken to ensure its standing well in tune. Chappell and Co. especially invite the attention of the public, the profession, and merchants, to the Foreign Model, feeling assured that no Pianoforte, in all respects comparable, has hitherto been made in England at the same price. Every instrument will be warranted, and (if desired) exchanged within twelve months of the purchase.—50, New Bond-street, London.

HARMONIUMS at CHAPPELL'S.—The HARMONIUM by ALEXANDRE is the only instrument of the kind that remains in tune; from the simplicity of its construction is but slightly affected by changes of weather, and is alike calculated for the Church, Chapel, School, or Drawing-room.

No. 1. In oak case, one stop, 5 octaves, 10 guineas.
2. In mahogany case, one stop, 12 guineas.
3. In oak case, 3 stops, 15 guineas; rosewood, 16 guineas.
4. With five stops—oak, 22 guineas; rosewood, 23 guineas.
5. Eight stops—oak, 25 guineas; rosewood, 26 guineas.
6. Twelve stops—oak or rosewood, 35 guineas.
7. One stop, and percussion action, in oak, 16 guineas.

OUR ARTIST IN SICILY.

Messina, May 22.

HERE I am, in Sicily, at least five days earlier than I anticipated, having been told that I should of necessity be compelled to work my way round by Genoa by any means that chance might offer. As luck would have it, I found, on reaching Marseilles, on the 19th, that one of the "Messageries Impériales" steamers was to sail that very day for Constantinople, and call at Messina on her way. We left the harbour of La Joliette exactly at five, and not without difficulty, for there was a heavy sea breaking over the bar, and some two or three transports, having troops on board, were yawing wildly about in the narrow entrance and pitching, bows under. The soldiers that incumbered their decks were some of the last regiments of the army of occupation of Italy returning to France, and each time we rose on a sea, and got a glimpse fore and aft, we could see them huddled together in suffering groups, which was a gratifying sight to at least one passenger on board the Nile, as it suggested to him that should ever the red-breeched gentlemen attempt a trip across Channel their condition for service on landing would not be remarkably "first chop" after encountering the "chops" of our narrow sea. But I need not crow over the misfortunes of others, for a huge wave striking us at the moment interrupted my reflections and sent me staggering to the nearest rope for a hold on. The captain and officers on the bridge, clothed in oilskin from head to foot, sufficiently indicated that we might expect a rough night of it, while the horizon line, strongly defined in white against the leaden sky, brought additional evidence of a storm brewing. Below, dinner was being laid, evidently an unnecessary meal in this instance, if one might judge by the groans coming from the side cabins: more than one gay Frenchman, I warrant, wished himself back on the terra firma of "la Belle France." The table had much the appearance of a monster violin or guitar, corks being passed from one extremity to the other, to prevent bottles and glasses from rolling off. The captain, doctor, a French vice-consul somewhere in Syria, and myself, were the only persons who took our places. My first two or three attempts to take my soup were remarkably unsuccessful, for I either passed it over my shoulder, or tlowed it away in my breast pocket, not being accustomed to the laws of devistion. Probably the little of the soup I did swallow was too rich; it certainly was not the motion of the ship; so, praying the captain to excuse me, I retired to my berth, and was rocked into a sound sleep, which remained undisturbed till morning.

CAPTAIN VINE HALL, COMMANDER OF THE "GREAT EASTERN."—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH BY MAULL AND POLYBLANK. SEE NEXT PAGE.

At midday on the 20th we passed through the Straits of Bonifacio, with a stiff breeze and plenty of sea on. On our left rose the wild and mountainous island of Corsica, with its lofty rugged peaks lost in dense masses of cloud, the remains of the previous night's storm. To our right lay the Island of Sardinia, less lofty but not less wild in appearance. The passage taken by the Nile (there being three) was that between the Maddalena and Caprera Islands and the iron-bound coast of Sardinia. On the larboard bow were the Lavezzi Rocks, with the white breakers surging over and around them; it was on these that the French frigate La Semillante, during the Crimean campaign in 1855, struck, and went to the bottom, carrying with her 800 persons, not one of whom escaped a watery grave. But those who cared to brave the rain commencing to fall, and which the cloud-capped mountains told us we should have more of, were prolonging their stay on deck, as another quarter of an hour would bring us in sight of the Rocher de l'Ours, or Bear Rock. "Le Voilà! Le Voilà!" was shouted by a patient watcher, who for some time past had been perched upon the gangway, anxious to give the first intimation of its appearance to the rest of the passengers. And sure enough there was the famous optical illusion, and so complete an imitation of nature that a little boy cried out "See, mamma, he wags his tail!" The rain-clouds now fairly burst, and there was a universal scrambling down the companion-way to the cabin, to which shelter the heavy rolling of the ship introduced one rather abruptly; in fact, I and a lady whom I had volunteered to assist achieved our purpose in a marvellously rapid and anything but conventional manner. After dinner, the weather having cleared up, most of us found our way on deck, and there I witnessed one of the grandest sights it is possible for the mind to create. Far astern was the now purple Island of Sardinia, sinking gradually into the sea beneath a canopy of superbly-massed clouds, tinted with the gorgeous colours amid which a setting sun in these latitudes vanishes below the horizon.

At two p.m. on the 21st we sighted, first of all, the Island of Alicuri, then Filicuri, then Salina, then the Volcano Stromboli, and the rocks of Panaria; after these, towards six, we came in view of Lipraris, and, last of all, grey against the far distance, loomed the Island of Sicily. As night approached the lightning was seen playing round its lofty summits, and there were not wanting those on board who declar d the flashes to be from Garibaldi's guns. But a famous thunderstorm hung there, and sooner or later we should receive our share of it. Crash, crash, went the artillery of heaven, and the lightning leaped from crag to crag, illuminating for a moment the steep coast before us. But what was that which for an instant advanced spectrelike in the bright mass of fame! I was a Neapolitan cruiser. In another minute we should be on board her. "Down main sail! Stop her! Back the engines!" shouted the captain in one breath, and a huge, indefinite form shaved by us within hailing distance; we were not another Lombardo or Piemonte freighted with Garibaldi's volunteers, and we were allowed to continue our course.

On Sunday morning, the 22nd, I and my campaigning kit were shot into a Messinese dingy, and in ten minutes I found myself treading Sicilian soil in the precincts of the Custom House and the police office of Messina. The first ordeal I passed through in a tolerably rapid manner, but the second, four in number and much more important affair, and took time. My passport was taken from me, and a permit, with the name of one of the hotels of the town on it, given me, pro tem., till my passport was viséed. I was told by the authorities I did not want to stay at Messina, but wished to proceed as rapidly as possible to Palermo, which was some hours distant by sea. This confidential communication was received mysteriously, and I was told to go to the hotel. Long before, however, between Messina and Palermo had been abolished for some days past, that to-wards the latter place was open to the free ingress, and that if I attempted it overland it was extremely probable that my career would be brought to a sudden close. Well, that was the opinion of all Signor Tittoni and his colleagues. Such being the case, I had some private notions of my own as to the course I would adopt, and as soon as I obtained back my passport, I, in addition, was at no one proceeded to mature the project I had in view. This was nothing else than to enter myself as one of the crew of a vessel that I had ascertained would leave the harbour some time on Wednesday for Palermo.

At the time I am writing this letter everything is arranged to my satisfaction, and every moment I am expecting to receive notice to go on board. Should I not immediately after hours elapse, should I get clear bo in the ascendant, I shall be saved the fighting as a peculiarly disposed subject, and the fighting nothing but the sea-sickness I shall reasonably expect to get.

Now for the appearance of Messina. The streets are deserted, the houses closed, and what few of the respectable inhabitants who remain are clearing out hourly, in anticipation of a repetition of the scenes enacted here in 1848, when the town was bombarded from the citadel and the place given up to pillage to the troops. Many of the botter houses have been let to Maltese, Italians, &c., who locate chartered for the purposes, furniture and everything they possessed. At eight o'clock this evening, when I was writing the above despatch, I took a turn through the town. All the shops were shut, and I walked for five minutes together without meeting a single person. As I passed the numerous sentinels posted at the corners of streets, I was challenged with "Alto! chi vive lì?" to which, having been previously schooled, I replied, "Amico e paesano." "Come si chiama nome" Hall! who goes there?"—"A friend and resident." At the third challenge I, to answer it, gave the name of Tittoni.

On the opposite side of the street to where I reside is a house spattered over with bullet marks and the windows generally broken. A little boy who lay ill in one of the rooms was struck by one of the balls and grievously wounded. This happened fifteen days ago, when the troops entered the town. At that time, also, numerous shots were left in every direction and on everybody. The following morning four soldiers were found pounded to death in the street. At present almost there are about five thousand soldiers in the citadel and forts, ready to commence the bombardment at the first order of the Governor so to order it. As for intelligence of what is passing elsewhere on the island we are entirely without it in Messina. I have just heard that Garibaldi has met with the most complete defeat at Catania, where 4000 Royal troops attacked his advanced guard, and only 1000 of the latter got back to Palermo; and there were also wounded, the other 2200 having been put to pieces: the next was an affair in which the Neapolitan cavalry got very roughly treated; and the last was a pitched battle near Palermo between 8000 Garibaldini and 12,000 Royalists, the latter getting very much worsted in the affair: it appears they lost 1200 prisoners, many hundreds dead, and some pieces of cannon. I have seized the opportunity this evening of writing to Malta. I have just received a letter from my friend, and at the same time the intelligence that the insurrection has extended to Catalfa, where the people have risen and driven out the Royalists, and established a Provisional Government. You see that the cause is making rapid strides. F. V.

CAPTAIN VINE HALL.

THE vacancy in the command of the Great Eastern, caused by the untimely death of Captain Harrison on the 13th ultimo, has now been filled by the appointment of Captain John Vine Hall, with respect to whom there has been a universal expression of satisfaction as to his fitness for this important post. For many years he has commanded steam-ships in the Mediterranean, and to the Cape, Australia, South America, India, &c. Previously to this he was the superintendent for two years of the General Screw Steam Company's establishment at Bordeaux, and subsequently to the formation of this in London, he has had full opportunities of becoming thoroughly conversant with the mechanism of steam-engines. He was in command of the Crimea Captain Hall so much distinguished himself as a bold and skilful navigator as to elicit the warm approbation of Mr. Brunel, who was also so much struck with the originality of the contrivance for repairing the ship in the absence of a dock that he has since been appointed as a member of the Civil Engineering Institute—a distinction, however, which Captain Hall declined. In the same vessel he subsequently distinguished himself by the masterly crisis of a ship on fire with troops on board, and managed matters in such a manner as to elicit the thanks of the then Board of Admiralty. In the Golden Fleece, with troops for China, he was the quickest ever known between England and Calcutta; and he was the first British shipmaster who commanded a vessel on the steam examination, in which he took an extra first-class certificate.

THE CATHEDRAL OF PALERMO.

FROM the age of the giants who, according to Greek legends, dwelled thinly previous to the Trojan war, to the last revolt against tyranny, the island has been constantly overrun and conquered under the rule of Greeks, Carthaginians, Romans, Goths, Saracens, Normans, Swabians, and Spaniards. Each invader, or race, has descended from these races, much difference of complexion and appearance has resulted among them. They are mixed, and yet complexions may be seen as fair as any in the north of Italy. The Sicilian has "a spare, muscular, and sinewy form, lively, dark eyes, great stability of limb, and quickness of motion. He is at once wary and quicksighted," and, though inclined to indolence, is more easily roused to action than the Neapolitan, and more capable of perseverance. The Sicilian women are handsome and well versed in "the affairs of the heart."

Palermo, the capital of the island, is one of the most attractive spots in the world in its climate and vegetation—magnificent, nd its situation rivals even that of Naples. Sicilian poets represent it as "the fair as beautiful as a golden shell," and the Saracenic and Norman Princes, in making it their capital, "gave it a splendour of which, rather more than four miles in circumference, and is surrounded by walls with bastions. A great street, named the Cassaro, or Toledo, intersect each other at right angles—(these were formed by Spanish viceroys)—the Cassaro, a corruption of the Arabic word "al Kasr," the palace, to which the street conducts, and Strada Macqueda. At the upper end of the Cassaro, in which are many stately houses and rich churches, is the Cathedral, of which we give a View. On the opposite end of the Cassaro is the Marina, one of the best features of Palermo: it is a drive of considerable length, on one side open to the sea, the other lined with the palaces of the nobility. From this lovely views of the bay, Monte Pellegrino, and the eastern shore are obtained, and here, when the heat of the day is over and the cool breezes blow in from the sea, promenaders amuse themselves far into the night.

The cathedral is a magnificent Gothic structure; it was rebuilt on the site of an older one by Walter Offamilio, an Englishman (afterwards Archbishop of Palermo), in the latter part of the twelfth century, but the only portions of Walter's fabric remaining are the crypt, a part of the south side, and of the east end. The remainder of the cathedral has been rebuilt at different times, so that the aspect of the edifice is varied, though possessing, as a whole, a very fine and picturesque effect. It is, however, disfigured by the Italian cupola, which is due to the bad taste of a Neapolitan architect, one Fuga. The large pointed arches thrown across the street unite the west end of the cathedral to the belfry-tower, which is separated, as is often the case in Italy, from the church, and at one corner of the Archiepiscopal Palace.

The interior of the cathedral has been modernised; its principal ornaments are the statues in the choir, the work of Gagini. Buried in their treasures of the interior are the tombs of the Norman Kings. The nave and aisles are only four in number, and exactly alike—"each is a large sarcophagus on a pedestal under a marble roof, supported by four pillars." Two are composed of white marble and mosaic, the others exhibit the purple porphyry of Egypt. In one of these the Norman, founder of the monarchy, is supported at each end by colossal Saracens, who, "crouching, appear to expand in enormous limes, and the state of the Royal and Imperial remains therein described. The former bows and bears the sceptre, the latter and materials those worn at the Byzantine Courts. The remains of the Emperor Frederick II. were deposited in the one which, in 1211, had been presented to the Emperor Otho IV. by his brother-in-law, Sicily.

The churches in Palermo are very numerous, and those built by the Normans are especially interesting. The Saracenic villas La Zisa, La Cuba, and Mar Dolce, with their Moorish additions, are also most curious and worthy of inspection.

The houses of Palermo are built nearly in the same style as those of Naples, with flat roofs and terrasses; quaint iron balconies also abound, filled with flowers and shaded by striped blinds, adding colour to the street.

Finally, the neighbourhood of Palermo is charming, with its orange groves, its villas, and its glorious scenery of mountain and ocean. Among the choice spots near the city is Monreale—the Royal Hill, famous for its cloisters and its splendid view of the cathedral. The place we intend to illustrate in a future Number.

LA MADDALENA.

OF all spots for picturesque and wild romantic grandeur few exceed the islands of the Straits Bonifacio. Whether we look upon them from the towering battlements of the ancient fortresses perched, like eyries' nests, on the rugged ridges of Corsica with its dark pine forests and the craggy straggle for supremacy, or view their romantic cluster of islets, as we do in La Maddalena, from the sloping ground where the eye can perceive the minutest shell in the furthest depths of these transparent waters, or pass upon the green of Corsica and Sardinia, peering out in all their rugged grandeur in the midst of one of those sweeping tempests which burst down from the Alps with irresistible force upon these shores, there are few spots more calculated to please the eye and charm the imagination than the Isle of Maddalena and the surrounding islets of Maddalena, on the north coast of Sardinia, about ten miles west of Longo Sardi.

At the time of our visit to the island the heat was fully perceptible. Modern Maddalena has, like an adventurous child, hazarded itself at a distance from the parent rock. Granite boulders, huge piles of mountains, and tremblingly approached the shore of the blue waters. Whether the noble cause of Italian freedom be triumphant or not, Garibaldi's name will long remain in Maddalena as one of its chief places of liberty. Within sight of this little nest of freedom, as represented in our Engraving, stands the house of Garibaldi. The inhabitants of the Maddalena group are, like all people who inhabit little favoured spots, primitive in their habits and customs. Garibaldi's house is a plain, unpretending edifice in the Moorish style, without any pretension to ornament, but it looks like its possessor—made of solid and stable materials.

Our two Engravings of the island and the Town of Maddalena are from Sketches by the Hon. Major Fitzmaurice.

CORONATION OF THE KING OF SWEDEN.

THE FOUR HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT TAKING THE OATH OF ALLEGIANCE TO THE KING.

On the 5th of May the coronation ceremonies at Stockholm were concluded by the four Houses of Parliament taking the oath of allegiance to the King. A correspondent in the Times thus gives us the following lively description of the ceremony:—"As was formerly the custom in the days of Gustavus Vasa's reign, this great national act came off in the open air. The scene selected for the ceremony was the Logard Hill, on the north side of the town, by the obelisk. There, under the direction of the well-known architect, Scharberg, the throne of the Monarch had been erected, flanked on each side with covered galleries and stands, partly reserved for the official portion of the spectators, and partly accessible to all capable of contributing the small fee which gave admission to these enclosures, which inclosed a semicircle of imposing magnitude, was covered by flights of colours, and presented a brilliant effect of blue, yellow, and red, faced by colossal figures of the lion of Sweden. Along the frieze of the galleries were the Swedish letters, ran the legend, rising above this, in continuation of the pillars, were the coats of arms of all the twenty-four provinces of the kingdom fixed upon halberds. At the back of the throne, surmounted by the crest of the Royal pavilion and the silver or minor throne, were stretched four standards of the Realm, the national colours, each bearing immense standards with Swedish and provincial arms. The standards, which, when raised, would display the full glory of the palatial Royal residence on the top of the hill, the sea and a cluster of rocky islands in the distance, and Lake Mälar with its amphitheatre of rising ground on the left, the foreground was filled up and rising above the scene, formed a panorama which might have been surpassed by the noble city itself, but which, for the purpose in view, could not have been equalled anywhere for quiet grandeur and a certain air of solemnity which the surroundings imparted to the ceremony. Right of the country barmonised well with the freshness of the air. Nature, it seemed, had done her best to add to the solemnity of the scene, one of the great days of Scandinavia. To be sure, the country did not look warm, nor was there anything of richness observable in the trees with which the hill was covered, but the sun shone, and bright shoots of spring struggling at the foot of the bare and rugged mountain, and the ground was dry and firm. The assembly, which seemed to suggest the old and time-honoured truth that under its solidity and stability lies the true strength and benefits of resource than appears on the surface.

"The galleries and stands were by this time filled by the members of the Swedish Parliament and the deputation from the Norwegian Storthing, together with a brilliant assembly of diplomatists, officials, ladies in full dress, and spectators. The Royal procession, in the midst of a medieval scale of mail, made his appearance, with gorgeous panoply and a lofty crest, on a white charger, followed by his pages, equerries, and carried sceptre and ball in his hand. As with solemn step he ascended the throne, the trumpets and drums of the Royal corps de cortège, in the full blaze of the nineteenth century, looked more like part of an Italian opera than anything real, tangible, and consistently connected with the present. The Monarch seemed to be wrapt in regal cloaks of inferior dignity, but, happily for our risible faculties, the ermine and velvet robes of the Chancellor, the combination of Lord Chancellor, Speaker, and First Gold Stick in Waiting—carried by a gentleman in armour, though the great Minister of State had to walk humbly, longo intervallo, in modern dress-coat and light overcoat—and the gold and silver staff of the empire, together with the regalia, formed part of the procession, as it was conducted in this Scandinavian reproduction of the pomp and circumstance of the old Roman and Byzantine ceremonial.

"The moment the King seated himself on the throne the roar of the cannon and the crash of military music, which had accompanied the defiling of the procession, at once stopped, and were succeeded by the deepest silence. Another instant, however, and the great multitude at the foot of the hill, pressing and thronging upon the barriers, broke out into a simultaneous cheer, which was continued while his Majesty made the following speech from the throne:—

"High-born, noble, and well-descended, venerable, reverend, and worthy, honourably born, reasonable, and highly-respected, honourable and honest good Lords and men of Sweden!—After having in God's house, and before the holy altar, repeated my vow to this people whom, half a century ago, my great ancestor was called upon to rule in honour and glory, and whose prosperity was greatly promoted by my much-lamented father during the whole of his reign, I now, for the second time, appear before you to-day, good Lords and men of Sweden, to receive from you the oath, the fulfilment of which will secure the welfare of the fatherland. The cannon—hushed down to us by our ancestors—of the King and people's blessing—under their future rule, tinies by mutual help and public views is no empty sound—of unceasing form. Its significance, I trust, is deeply impressed upon your hearts, as it is upon mine, and never shall the memory of this solemn moment fade from our memories. We live at a time when the minds of all European nations are swayed by feelings of displeasure, anxiety, and various objects of political import, when a prevailing dissatisfaction with existing things is apparent, and when a striving for change is being about another and better state, too often but dimly delineated in the mind's confused condition. The Scandinavian nationalities, guided by the blessings of Providence, has been happily spared those violent convulsions earlier by an unexampled degree under the mighty power enemies. With quiet discretion and firm confidence in the constitutional rights of the people, which have been upheld by the experience of centuries, without exposing itself to the dangers wrashing those who in every movement, and in every progress—a steady energy, and never alternating course to the prosperity of our country. Such a constitutional condition being duly appreciated by you, I have had no hesitation in accepting the unconditional homage which you have tendered to me. Your confidence in your loyalty; and, with all loyal grace and favour, remain your gracious King.

"After this stately speech, the Riksmarskalk beckoned to the Richsdrotsh, who, on his part, beckoned to the nobility to rise from their seats. The members of the Upper House instantly rose, uncovered their heads, and, with two fingers held aloft, swore the oath of fealty. The Bishop of Upsal, Hon Clergy, the Lords, and the Peasants followed in due succession, after which the Presidents and Vice-Presidents of the Houses of Parliament approached the foot of the throne and kissed the hand of his Majesty. Again the cannon thundered forth, the procession formed round anew, and returned to the palace, or castle, as it is termed here."

THE IMPERIAL PALACE, JEDDO.

IN the blue-book lately published on Japan we find our Minister, Mr. Alcock, communicating the most important details of the Tycoon Palace was put forward by the Government as a plea for delaying the British Legation at Jeddo, which, as we have said, Tycsingh an Engraving of that celebrated palace. It was situated within a fortified enclosure in the immediate suburbs of Jeddo. The plan of it is irregular figure, inclining to circular, and is five Japanese miles in circumference. It is surrounded by "four castles," the innermost and third castle, which is properly the residence of the Emperor, and two other strong, well fortified, but smaller castles, at the sides also some large and fine buildings for the imperial Princes' castles are each surrounded by walls and ditches.

The Imperial Palace is a large building, but of lofty height. It occupied an extensive area, and had numerous long galleries and spacious rooms, which, by means of sliding wooden screens, might be enlarged or brought into a narrower compass, as occasion required. Each room so contrived as to receive convenient and sufficient light. The chief apartments are the audience chamber, where the Princes assemble, the waiting-room, where all persons admitted to an audience, either of the Emperor or the Ministers of State, had to await till they were introduced; the council chamber, where the Ministers of State and Privy Councillors assemble, the hall of the Emperor's household, and others. The structure of all these several apartments was exquisitely uniform according to the ancient regulations of the Empire. The ceilings, beams, and pillars were of cedar or camphor, or gaseous wood, the grain of which was beautiful, flowers and other curious figures, and was therefore in some apartments covered only with a thin transparent varnish. In others japanned, or curiously carved with birds and branched work, neatly gilt. The floor was covered with the finest white mats, bordered with gold fringe or braid, and this was all that was to be seen in the palaces of the Emperor and Princes of the Empire.

NEW PATENT OMNIBUS.

OMNIBUS conveyance is scarcely less important to the locomotion of townspeople than railways are for circulation from one town or metropolis to another. It is to be hoped that certainly attention the attention of those who take an interest in civil improvements and public comforts, to the inconveniences to which omnibuses are exposed in use are so palpable that the Legislature found it necessary to take the matter into consideration, and to endeavour to diminish many of the inconveniences complained of by the prominent offenders of persons of all sexes, ages, and ranks at all hours of day and night, by the passing of the Metropolitan Regulations Act. Without stating the arrangement and size of the seats, making it obligatory to carry lights in the interior, and to have the conductor's box enclosed, tended to lessen the chances of offences being committed against the rules of social morals or individual safety. Still these regulations, though wise under the circumstances, are far from removing many of the evils that are inherent to the present form and system of omnibuses.

Persons who travels in an omnibus must experience the following nuisances:—1st, The frequent trampling upon one another's toes, bumping upon each other's knees, and the inconvenience arising at finding oneself packed into a huge unsightly box or cadaine without any means of communication, twelve other strangers of all sizes and conditions, sitting upon each other's coat-tails, or favoured under large volumes of crinoline; squeezing and poking each other's sides and backs, and treading on each other's feet—2nd, The discordance among the passengers with regard to keeping open or shut the windows in cold weather, the frequent inconvenience of people who, finding themselves in close contact, are apt to mistake their neighbour's pocket-book, purse, handkerchief, &c., for their own. "Beware of pickpockets!" is now to be read in the interior of omnibuses. 3rd, The distress felt on a rainy day at the advent of each fresh passenger, particularly females with their ample garments, advancing, wet through, to the further end of the vehicle; and innumerable other inconveniences.

All these nuisances are removed by dividing the omnibus into separate, well-ventilated compartments, as in the Paris patent omnibus. The compartments are disposed in two rows, back to back, the passengers sitting alone, each in one compartment, facing the pavement on their respective sides. A small window, with a shutter on each side, puts in communication the contiguous compartments, if agreeable to the passengers; the doors may be separate, or divided like first-class railway-carriages. A portion at each end of the vehicle is specially provided to contain the persons, just as a four-wheel cab or a private carriage, and constitutes a second-class carriage. Palmer's patent shield or a ball push each passenger in communication with the conductor. Access to, and egress from, the compartments is obtained by doors (as in private carriages) leading to a kind of landing or railed platform, upon which open the doors of the compartments. This platform runs round the forepart of the carriage, to give to all the passengers on each side the advantage of entering or leaving the carriage always on the near-side pavement. The doors may be kept open or shut by means of well-adapted self-acting springs.

This omnibus runs as lightly as any other on the metropolitan roads. It was weighed at the General Post, and certified to be only twenty-two hundredweight and three-quarters; while twenty-five and even twenty-seven hundredweight is not an unusual weight for omni-

BILHOUETTES OF VOLTAIRE HITHERTO UNENGRAVED.

These portraits of the great Frenchman were cut, as we mentioned last week, from a common card by his friend M. Hubert. Like the admirable drawings of his hand in vol. v. of Foreign Portraits preserved in the Print Room of the British Museum, they were doubtless executed without the cognisance of the illustrious original, and they are traditionally said to represent with singular fidelity his appearance, ci detaillé, at the latter period of his life.

Aux Délices près de Genève 20 Juin, 1759.

Ma mauvaise santé, Monsieur, m'a empêché de vous renercier plutôt, et ma prise même de l'honneur de vous écrire de ce matin. J'ai lû avec un très grand plaisir le mémoire contre les Hollandais. il me paraît aussi bien fait qu'il puisse l'être. Il me semble qu'on s'écrivait point autrefois; les affaires publiques étaient traitées ou avec une sécheresse rebutante, ou avec une emphase ridicule : vous me paraissez aussi bons écrivains que bon marins.

Votre Milice ne dû vient bien préférable puis qu'il vous a separé. Je le conservai comme un monument de votre amitié. J'ai appris par les papiers publics la mort de Mr Fabrice mon ancien ami. J'en suis sensiblement affligé, ce cera une grande consolation pour moi de retrouver en vous le sentiments dont il a vait toujours honoré.

Il me semble qu'on imprima l'année passée des mémoires concernants la Russie par le Lord Wittworth: si vous avies un moment à vous je vous prierais de vouloir bien me dire si ce sont encore que un effot de ce Ministre et s'ils sont estimés. Je dois supposer par tout ce qu'on m en dit quils sont assez curieux. Je n'ose vous supplier de me faire parvenir : il y a souvent de si longues avanies par la poste par la voye de Hollande en feuilles a fin que celà n'eut point l'air d'un livre dont la poste ne se chargerait pas. C'est ouvrage n'est plus intéressant par personne, étant chargé par la cour de Pétersbourg de faire l'histoire de Pierre le Grand. Je commence même à faire imprimer le premier volume ; ainsi il y aurait pas un moment à perdre. Je ne sçais aucune nouvelle de littérature. Il me paraît que la dernière comette n'a pas fait grand bruit, on est si occupé des affaires de terre et mer que les cléates sont oubliées de toutes façons.

J'ai l'honneur d'être bien véritablement et de tout mon cœur, Monsieur, votre très humble et très obéissant serviteur,

A Monsieur, Monsieur Rast.

Aux Délices près de Genève, 20 June, 1759.

My bad health, Sir, has hindered me from thanking you sooner, and even deprives me of the honour of writing to you with my own hand. I have read with very great pleasure the memoire against the Dutch; it appears to me as well done as it could be. It strikes me that they did not write that formerly; public affairs were treated either with tedious acidity or with ridiculous emphasis. You appear to me as good writers as good seamen.

Your "Militon" is very precious to me, since it has belonged to you. I shall preserve it as a monument of your friendship. I have learnt by the public papers the death of my old friend Mr. Fabrice. I am sensibly afflicted at it; it will be a great consolation for me to find again in you the sentiments with which he had always honoured me.

Methinks that last year some memoirs were printed concerning Russia by Lord Whitworth. If you had a moment to yourself I would beg you to tell me whether these memoirs are really by this Minister, and if they are in estimation. I should suppose by all that has been told of them that they are sufficiently curious. I hardly dare beg of you to send them me ; it would only be to send them by way of Holland, in sheets, in order that it should not appear like a book, of which the postage would be very dear. It is a work more necessary to me than to any one, being employed by the Court of Petersburg to write the history of Peter the Great. I have even begun to print the first volume; thus there would not be a moment to lose. I know of nothing new in literature. It appears to me that the comet has not attracted much attention; they are so occupied with the affairs of land and sea, that the celestial ones are forgotten altogether. I have the honour to be truly, and with all my heart, Sir, your very humble and very obedient servant,

The following note is written in English and by Voltaire's hand :—

You see, my dear Sr. like most of y^r countrymen, who forget their friendships contracted in term so soon as they are upon y^r their island. You remember me. I am indeed y^r friend, since you are a man without prejudices, a man of every country. Had I not fixed the seat of my retreat in the free corner of Geneva, I would have chosen it in the free kingdom of England ; for though I do not like the monstrous irregularities of Shakespear, though I admire but some lively and masterly strokes in his performances, yet I am confident so body in the world looks with a greater veneration on y^r good philosophers, on the ground of y^r good authors ; and I am these thirty years the disciple of y^r way of thinking. Y^r nation is at once a people of warriours and of philosophers. You are now at the pitch of glory, in regard to publick affairs ; but I know not whether you have preserv'd the reputation y^r island enjoy'd in point of literature when Addison, Congreve, Pope, Swift, were alive. However, you kan not be so low as wo are. Poor France, at the present time, has neither navy, nor money, nor plate, nor fame, nor wit. We are at the ebb of all.

I have read the life of Mad^e Pompadour, printed at London. Indeed, Sr, 'tis a scurrilous book. I assure you there is not one page of truth.

Pray, in case some good book appears into y^r world, let me be informed of it. Adieu, mon cher jeune philosophe, je compte sur votre souvenir, et je vous aimerai toujours.

Y for ever,

ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

[FOURTH NOTICE.]

MISS E. OSBORNE comes forward with all a woman's earnestness to expose and avenge the wrongs of a numerous class of her sex, "The Governess" (150). The work is remarkable for unflinching, uncompromising purpose, strongly marked character, admirable situation, and spirited drawing. But it is to our mind almost too strong, too bitter in its sarcasm, too downcast and despairing in the war it wages between class and class. The picture is prefaced by an extract from Longfellow's "Evangeline" :—

Fair was she and young; but alas! before her extended
Dreary and vast, and silent, the desert of life, with its pathway
Marked by the graves of those who had sorrowed and suffered before her.

Sorrow and silence are strong, and patient endurance is godlike.

And there she stands, very fair, very dignified, but very sad, in rusty mourning ; of course, very much wronged ; with hands crossed before her, whilst the fat, coarse-faced mistress of the house frowns forth upon her words of insolent rebuke in presence of those vulgar, gaudy children, her hopeful pupils, who enjoy mightily to see "how she is catching it." Everything is in keeping with the picture, upstart character of this unamiable family—staring flower-patterned carpet, vulgar, showy furniture; while the whole atmosphere of the portrait of a peer in robes seen overhead against the wall, show that all this has been the abode of wealth not incumbered with noble blood. Miss Osborne's picture is very clever, but very bitter. In its assertion of the rights of woman, for the human heart of England; and, looking upon it in this sense, we are glad to hear that the Queen has been graciously pleased to purchase it.

Close by this work is a picture by Ansdell—"Buy a Dog, Ma'am !" (397), which we like much better than his "Lost Shepherd" in the large room. It is a scene current in modern life in Regent-street, and the dog-fancier and the dogs themselves are portraits of living people we have often met with.

J. E. Hodgson exhibits a very clever interior—"Our Philharmonic Society in the Olden Time" (566), which we engrave. The village amateur orchestra, which is about to perform in a music on various festive occasions of solemnity or hilarity, is now hard at work practising the overture to "Lodoiska," and we almost hear the old gentleman with the violoncello seems to be so intent upon his own performance that he has a good mind to quarrel with any one others to come in, unmindful of the imploring appeals of the prima violino. The second violin is in the act of scraping when the little household our, with tail between his legs, looks on and listens to it perplexed and amazed. The remaining figures serve capitally to complete the picture. The doorway contains a group apparently carried from its ordinary even tenor for some great and interesting occasion. The girl with the guitar is evidently a professional singer, or musical, wondering how much longer it is to last. The thrifty mother impresses the same conviction upon us as she scolds the young girl who in the confusion of the moment has inked her apron ; and the good, bewildered husband, with the baby in his arms, has opened the cottage door to admit the crowd of his friends who have just assembled to listen to the performance. We have not often met with a picture of the kind which has given us so much pleasure in the inspection, as this "Philharmonic Rehearsal."

F. D. Hardy's picture (579), with a bit of Dutch painting, pervaded by some of the spirit of Wilkie, entitled "A Crush" (210) ; and a very pretty lady in a cane chair, with a pet dog, and a book, bringing granny down stairs to inquire into the matter, are pictures, whilst the young delinquents hide themselves, in sheepish mood, behind the door. Mr. Hardy has a capital composition and much in this little picture. A glimpse of the back parlour, and a peep at the open air through the window, help to make the picture well introduced. Mr. Hardy's other work, "Volunteers" (119), is so much inferior to the one accepted in merit, that it deserves no treatment —that we should hardly have considered both to have come from the same hand.

The taste for homely subjects, more or less of a pensive character, is indulged in by one or two rising artists, and with the usual amount of success in the shape of popularity, which is the general observer. "Faith" (446), by T. Brooks, gives us an oft-repeated subject—that of a beautiful young creature in deep mourning for her father, listening to her sister, whose cheek beams with health, who is reading to her a consoling passage from the Holy Writ. On the wall at the back is a picture of the Saviour bearing Julian's Cross. The motto appended in the catalogue suggests the sentiment intended to be embodied in the picture—"Let your light so shine before men that even our faith." A companion picture of "Charity" (575) is painted in the same subdued tone and delicate manner. The sentiment is evidently explained by the Scripture passage to which it refers : "True religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this : to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction."

Mr. Redgrave, whose pictures might serve to illustrate a new edition of "The Vicar of Wakefield," has contributed a work entitled "The Day is Done" (425), intended to suggest the calm enjoyments of the fireside circle, when the labours of the day are over for the day. The venerable gentleman is seated in his easy-chair, his face warmed by the cheerful blaze, whilst his wife sits at her side sits at the window at work, and his two daughters are singing a duet at the pianoforte. The light from the window, on the village green, are seen the boys of the school at play.

"Never More" (455) is another chapter from the book of the Disappointed Lover, painted by A. Elmore, A.R.A., and engraved by J. A. Young judy is represented looking with dejected and pained feelings through a window at the departing figure of her lover, who is about to look at him she is to see "never more." A bundle of letters and souvenirs on the table before her tell the rest of the story. The painful subject is effectively wrought out.

Mr. J. Clark's picture, "Unemployed" (456) is not equal to some of his former productions—"The Cottage Door," for instance. Indeed, in the way, he has not yet improved upon. There is a good deal of character in the figure of the unemployed, but the attitude in which he apparently has the worst ; whilst his pretty niece, or daughter, who sits at his knee, inquiring into the cause of her gentleman beside her for advice and admiration ; but the subject is too background to be interesting.

Amongst the foreign contributors Mdme. Ronner exhibits her talents attention by the strongly-marked character thrown into her impersonations of the animal life. The figure of a cat in the glass door of a dungeon, the face strongly mingling the agony and shame of the cat with prisoner, is now her forte. Her other subject, "Mother's Delight" (566), representing a bronzed-faced young woman playing with the animal which she has reared on her bed, is cleverly grouped, but a little too much studied and somewhat theatrical.

"The Convent Dole" (432), by R. Lehmann, is a striking and characteristic work, painted in brown and neutral tints. The subject, unfortunately, is one of a class which, in spite of the current gaze for her accustomed portion of bread is marked with all that vestige of the animal left in human form by the perversion of human nature debased by habitual mendicancy. Her two children crouching by her side are conceived very much in the spirit of Murillo ; the youngest, a girl, with her eye seeing, half-inquiring, half-imploring eyes, is a picture in herself. The same artist exhibits a landscape with figures—"Early Morning in the Pontine Marshes" (254), which displays considerable power in the treatment, though too local and occasional in the subject to be generally interesting. A boat in charge of harvest labourers, and laden with maize, meets near Ginestra, one of the herds of buffaloes employed by the Government to clear the banks of rank and choking vegetation. The buffaloes themselves are of a class of animals which cannot be considered either picturesque or pleasing, and, as they wallow in the stagnant canal, with the rank weeds clinging to their snouts and horns, the air seems to be laden with unwholesome vapours. Surely this is in direct violation of the canons of art, which prohibit the elaboration of objects inherently repulsive. The harvest labourers lying indolently amongst the maize parties of the pervading unhealthy aspect, and the flat and pointless landscape presents no features to relieve the unpleasant monotony of the foreground.

It is refreshing to turn from this fetid actuality to the realms of creative fancy, so grandly realised by Mr. F. Danby in his picture of "Phœbus Arising from the Sea, by the nature of his first vivifying rays, through the drifting foam of a rolling wave, calls into worldly existence "the Queen of Beauty" (319). There is no pretence to naturalism in this bright ethereal landscape—on the contrary, it is avowedly conventional and ideal ; and properly so, for in such the event it is supposed to represent itself a fabulous creation. But it is extremely beautiful in its soft cerulean hues, warmed by delicate sunbeams, and peopled with creatures full instead of fantastic. Along the smooth glittering shore rolls in drifting waves the bright joyous sea ; majestic without violence, its foam curling in curving eddies in the rays which dart from the chariot of Phœbus, as he sets out upon his day's journeying, and as they boil and froth there emerges from their midst the light elegant car of the Queen of Beauty surrounded by her graceful Nereids. Connecting this pearly pageantry the sky is dapple l with rosy clouds, as if they were turned in paying homage to their new and lovely sister. In this picture the charming poetry of the subject is eagerly caught, and improved by an informed judgment, a refined taste, and exquisite mastery of hand. Mr. Danby's note so successful in the tumultuous real horrors of a shipwreck (240). The water wants power and weight, the storm wants savagery—the sea, generally, is too diminutive, fritteringaway the wild over-brimming turmoil of the scene in minute details.

THE ROYAL UNITED SERVICE INSTITUTION.

We have great pleasure in presenting to our readers a sketch of the Central Museum of the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall Yard, the interior of which forms one of the most interesting sights in London.

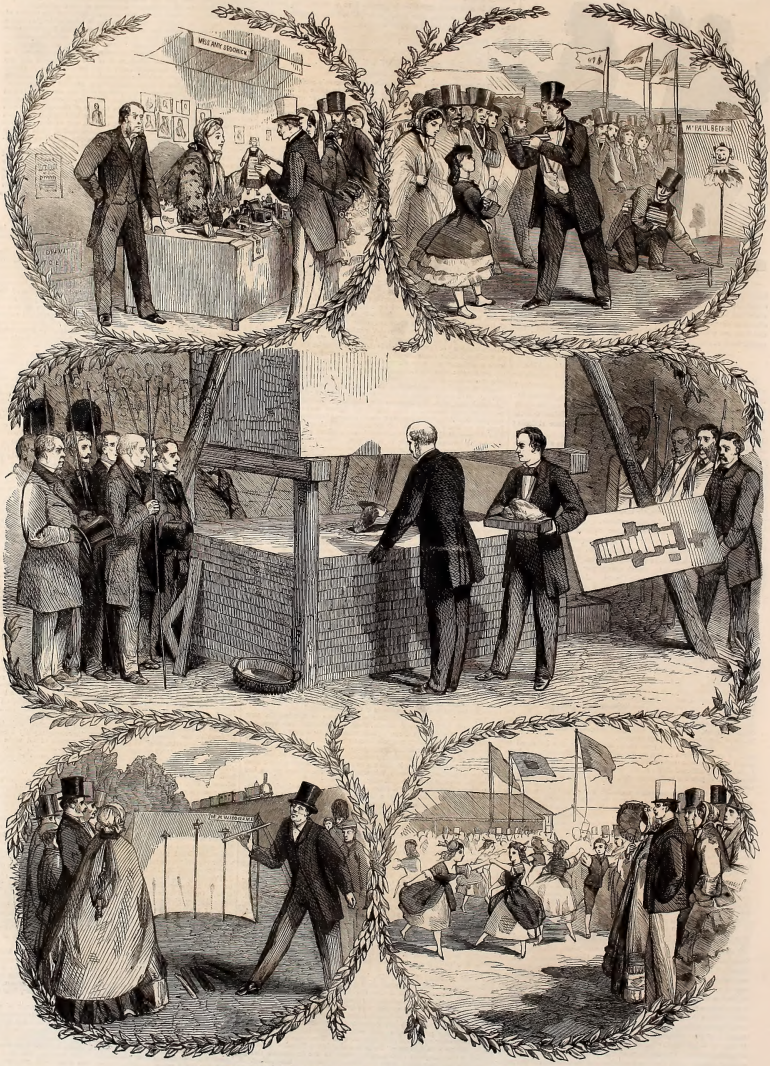
This institution, which was established in the year 1831, under the patronage of his late Majesty King William IV. and the Duke of Wellington, and had for its object at first the formation of what in both services, has lately received from her Majesty a Royal charter of incorporation, and is now in its place amongst the Royal institutions of the kingdom. Before giving our readers any description of the Museum, we may be allowed to point out what are the objects which this institution is designed to carry out. They are the encouragement of naval and military art, science, and literature. The principal means by which these objects are to be attained are, the formation of a library, the delivery of lectures, the exhibition of inventions, and the publication of a collection of such papers as may be read, or of accoutrements, of models, and objects of professional information, of which and improvement connected with distinguished offices or warlike operations—in a word, it is designed that this institution should be represented by this institution in the same way that the other sciences are represented each by its respective society.

On delivering his ticket (which must be signed by a member) the visitor passes into the Museum, containing the naval armour of the Esquimaux, New Zealander, inhabitants of the Polynesian Islands, Australia, and Africa, and then enters the great European armoury. Round this room are displayed firearms from the time of Henry VIII. to Victoria: in the windows are cases containing swords of heroes, arms used in the wars of the Crusades, which he carried at the siege of Dragada, and a small sword of Nelson, and also the Sultan's sword presented to Admiral Napier by the Greek Islands. After passing through a doorway towards the centre of the room a glass case is entered, where are displayed in a series of models of steam-engines from the first appliance of steam to the screw-engine of the present time. Also are some highly interesting models of tests by Major Rhodes and Mr. Fraser, by some of what plans are proposed for ameliorating the tent life of the soldier. The next object of interest is a most beautiful set of the Sultan's gold armour, which has been presented to the institution by the reigning Sovereign of Turkey. This collection, when completed by similar presents from other foreign Sovereigns, will be one of the highest importance, as thus comparison will be facilitated, and many valuable hints gained for the improving of our own services. We must not notice other objects of interest in the Museum.

The visitor, after examining these, finds himself at the foot of the grand staircase, guarded, as it were, by two men-at-arms of the Middle Ages. On the first landing he sees on the walls pikes, spears, helmets, and long two-handed swords, and on the other side shirts of chain-plaged mail of the time of the Crusaders. On a pillar near him is the original halberd, longbow of the time of Henry VIII. ; whilst on another are arrows taken out of the citadel of Alaepp, supposed to be of the time of the Crusaders.

From the European Armoury the Asiatic Armoury is entered, the walls of which are completely covered with spears, swords, shields, matchlocks, and other descriptions of arms and armour from Borneo, Java, and Cochin, China, Punjaub and Afghanistan. In this room are also to be seen the dress worn by Tippoo Sahib at the capture of Seringapatam, and the pistols taken from his body after his fall.

The next room of interest is devoted to the Royal Naval Rifle Room, as in it is exhibited the Enfield rifle in all stages of manufacture, from the commencement of the material to the finished gun.



Time would fail us minutely to describe the various objects of interest in the Museum, but we must pass, therefore, rapidly through the naval departments, where models of vessels of war are to be seen, from the most perfect model of a line-of-battle ship, put together in a most perfect way by a French prisoner of war in Norman Cross Prison, to a large one of the Cornwallis 74, built in 1813, and from the first completed model of Napoleon's fatal steam-of war of 1850 to the beautiful lines of the modern frigate. In these departments may be found models of the Armstrong and Cunighan's plan for reeling tapsails from the deck, Clifford's boat-lowering apparatus, Hall's life-boats, and gun-rafts. In the second room, also, are several curiosities : from Drake's walking stick to the Duke's pocket-level and chronometer ; relics of the Royal Georg and King Henry VIII.'s great ship the Harry Grace de Dieu, whilst in the same room are models of foreign craft, from the celebrated Maltese galley to the Magy prue and Arab dhow, and models of the Arab, Chinese, and the magnificent table made from the wood of the Victory when the Spanish Government presented the ends of the Admiralty table. Other rooms will be exhibited, we understand, a model, most accurately carried out, of the Channel Tunnel Railway.

After returning to naval model-room No. II., and ascending the stairs, we come to a room now occupied by large naval models, but which, we understand, will shortly give place to objects more consistent with the design of the institution. In a recess to the right we find numerous highly-interesting models of various kinds of batteries, of the single and double safe, &c.

The finest room in the Museum is the lofty Waterloo Gallery, so named because it contains the late Captain Siborne's exquisite models of the battle of Waterloo. As a ne plus ultra to these models Colonel Hamilton's model of the South of the Crimea. This room also contains models of fortifications, siege trenches, batteries, and many interesting relics commemorative of the Peninsular, Waterloo, and the late campaigns.

The library contains between 11,000 and 12,000 volumes of works on naval and military history, biography, improvements in arms, and general science. The topographical department, which has not long been set on foot, contains the naval charts, and maps, and plans, supplied by the Admiralty and War Departments ; here on maps are marked out, by pins and coloured cards, warlike operations or peaceful movements over the world. The reading-room is a comfortable, light room, looking out on the river, well supplied with the latest periodicals of the day. During the season lectures on subjects of passing interest, or bearing on the naval or military services, are delivered on Friday afternoons.

LAYING THE FIRST STONE OF THE ROYAL DRAMATIC COLLEGE, AT MAYBURY.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, CIRENCESTER.

ROYAL AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, CIRENCESTER.

THIS college is in a prosperous condition, and seems well adapted to answer the purposes for which it was established. It was incorporated by charter in 1845 for the purpose of affording a practical and scientific agricultural education to students from all parts of the kingdom, and it is under the direct patronage of his Royal Highness the Prince Consort. On the death of the late Principal, the Rev. J. B. Haygarth, to whom the prosperity of the college is greatly due, a memorial subscription was commenced among his friends, the proceeds of which have not only raised to his memory a handsome stone reredos in the college chapel, but also founded an annual prize to be called the "Haygarth Prize." This subscription provoked another for the beautifying of the chapel, which, with its new oak fittings, stone screen, and organ, now presents a handsome appearance. There has lately been introduced as part of the arrangements of the college a suite of private rooms, and this has attracted to it men of a higher grade and more advanced age, and it seems likely materially to increase the efficiency and success of the institution.

AUSTRALIAN SERPENTS.

THE Zoological Society of London have lately added to their collection of reptiles in the Regent's Park Gardens some fine examples of venomous serpents from Australia, the first of the kind ever brought alive to this country. For this valuable addition to their series of ophidians the society is indebted to Mr. Edward Wilson, the same gentleman who is so well known for his efforts in introducing the singing-birds of Europe into Australia. Of two consignments of these animals forwarded from Melbourne by the agents of Mr. Wilson one arrived in perfect safety, all the animals being found alive and in perfect health, and feeding readily soon after being placed in the society's reptile-house. The second consignment, owing to some of the specimens having died during the voyage, and not having been removed, was not so successful. The Australian snakes thus introduced into this country belong to two species. One of them, known as the black viper in Australia, is the Pseudechis porphyriacus of naturalists; the other—a fine, handsome snake, with a yellow belly—has only lately received a scientific name from Dr. A. Günther, of the British Museum, who has called it Hoplocephalus superbus. Its Australian name is unknown to us.

THE DRAMATIC COLLEGE FETE

THE foundation-stone of the Royal Dramatic College was laid yesterday week at Maybury, near Woking, by the Prince Consort, in the presence of a large assemblage, comprising not only a majority of the celebrities of the theatrical profession, but many representatives of the literary and fashionable world. The occasion was celebrated by a fête in the grounds of the intended college, one principal feature of which was a fancy fair, the stalls of which were presided over by a number of the most celebrated London actresses. The stallholders were—Mrs. Billington, Miss Burton, Mrs. Fitzwilliam, Miss Herbert, Miss Katherine Hickson, Miss Kate Kelly, Miss Marston, Mrs. Frank Matthews, Mrs. Alfred Mellon (late Miss Woolgar), Mrs. Leigh Murray, Miss Murray, Miss Neville, Miss Oliver, Miss C. Saunders, Miss Amy Sedgwick, Miss H. Simms, Mrs. Stirling, Miss Swanborough, Miss E. Thorne, Miss Marie Wilton, Miss Wyndham, Mrs. C. Young. Never was fancy fair so well served as by these able and earnest ladies; they played their parts so well, they arranged their stalls with so much taste, and they recommended their wares with so much ability, that the purchasers were rejoiced at their bargains, though they were victimised as greatly as the unfortunate Japanese in the exchange of gold itzeaous for silver dollars. The interest with which these fair bonbrjnrères were regarded was naturally very great, and the majority of visitors who had wept or smiled at the acting of these ladies, and had seen them only on the stage, found abundant employment in criticising the change which, in some cases, a lady presented when seen off as compared with being on the stage. The ladies were thoroughly at home under this scrutiny; they knew they were the observed of all; they did their spiriting gently, and, for the sake of the funds of the charity, we hope successfully. The actress saleswoman were not the only objects of interest. There were laughing shooting crowds gathered round two rival "Aunt Sallies," of which Mr. Buckstone and Mr. Paul Bedford were the proprietors. Then there were pitching-sticks owned by the same parties, patented by Mr. Matthews, Mr. J. L. Toole, Mr. Compton, and Mr. H. Widdicomb. "Now my b-o-o-y-s, come along, throw three for a shilling," cries the attendant at one of Paul Bedford's rival proprietor, Mr. Buckstone, in his familiar tones, invites all to his establishment, the best booth in the fair, and even carves a cocoanut, though his rival subsequently offered the four throws for a shilling.

The Prince himself arrived on the grounds at about four o'clock, and he was at once conducted to the tent where the foundation-stone was prepared for deposition. Mr. Webster then read an address, thanking his Royal Highness for the honour he did the institution. The Prince replied as follows:—I beg to thank you for the address which has just been read. I have accepted with much pleasure your invitation to take the leading part in the ceremony of laying the first stone of the Future Dramatic College—a work, the success of which the Queen has marked her hearty interest. I believe that that institution, if established and conducted (of which I express entertain a moment's doubt) in the spirit in which it has been proposed and commenced, cannot fail to confer a lasting benefit not only on the dramatic profession itself, but on the public, which is so deeply interested in the well-doing and respectability. It is to that profession that we are accustomed to look for amusement in the leisure hours which are properly given to recreation, after the various labours and duties of the day, from which, perhaps, none are more severe. And the importance cannot be overrated of endeavouring to combine with such amusement, such instruction and such elevation of sentiment as every well-regulated mind must derive from following the actor in his attempts to give life and reality to the noble conceptions of the dramatic poet, or to inculcate some high moral lesson, by interesting our best feelings and sympathies in the love of virtue and detestation of vice. The more we can do to elevate the character of the dramatic profession, from which we expect so much, the more confidently may we hope to see our own standard; and the public therefore, have a higher interest even than the actor himself in the success of the plan which we trust is to be carried out. I think the establishment of a central hall, to form a dramatic library as well as museum, and to be open to the profession generally, will act as a common bond of union among its members, the importance of which is well calculated to increase their own feelings of self-respect, and, as a necessary consequence, to raise their position in the social scale. My God's blessing ever attend this work!" The stone was then lowered; and, after an impressive prayer by the Rev. Mr. Sumner, son of and Chaplain to the Bishop of Winchester, the proceedings terminated. His Royal Highness took his departure amid the loud cheers of the company. The children and the rest of the visitors then proceeded to a neighbouring tent, and partook of a handsome collation.

In consequence of the numerous applications made to the members of the committee by persons and friends who were prevented by the weather from attending the grand fête held at Maybury, it is intended to hold a fancy fair shortly in London.

COVENT-GARDEN IMPROVEMENTS.

MESSRS. DEBENHAM, STORR, AND SONS' NEW AUCTION ROOMS.

That long-required new thoroughfare from King-street, Covent-garden, to Leicester-square and Piccadilly, drawing towards completion, a suitable western approach will shortly be afforded to this locality, the centre of the Bedford estate, around which cluster the Royal Italian Opera House and Floral Hall, Drury Lane and the Lyceum Theatres, Covent Market and Theatre Royal, Exeter Hall, the parish church of St. Paul, and other public offices. Various improvements have taken place in this locality of late years, but none have so remarkable a degree contributed to the architectural beauty of the neighbourhood as the erection of the noble pile of buildings in which where recently stood the old-established auction-rooms of Messrs. Debenham, Storr, and Sons, 26, King-street, Covent-garden. The original site has been considerably enlarged by the addition of an adjoining piece of ground, the whole purchased for free from the Metropolitan Board of Works.

Notwithstanding the great advantage whioh an extensive frontage of 120 feet offered in a commercial point of view, the peculiar form of the ground—that of an irregular triangle—presented considerable difficulties to the architect, Mr. Arthur Allom, in the way of obtaining the necessary accommodation and facilities for the numerous purposes, difficulties which he has ably overcome.

The new building is of five stories. The basement, which is 11 feet 6 inches high, covers, with the vaults, about 4800 superficial feet, and consists of spacious warehouses for the reception of property intended for sale. Two fireproof strong-rooms, for the safe keeping of jewels, fitted with Chubb's patent doors, lift for raising heavy goods to the upper stories above, and a well of ample size, with a private entrance on the ground floor is properly made the centre of the building, and leads to a handsomely-proportioned staircase, with parquete, with Maw and Co.'s beautiful encaustic tiles. On each side are polished plate-glass folding doors; those to the left communicate with the public offices, and those on the left with the principal auction-room. This room occupies 1160 superficial feet, is 24 feet in height exclusive of the lantern, and is ventilated by means of the ornamental ironwork in the ceiling, as well as by the front windows and the skylights; makes its last bow to the public when it is commonly called, stands in the north corner, and from its commodious position and ingenious construction enables the rostrum of the auctioneer to reach all parts of the room with ease. The goods entrance is in the opposite corner, and is approached by stairs with stationary hand lift from the basement. The public offices, which are lofty, spacious, and easy of access, have been fitted by Mr. Dyer of Soho-garden, with solid-panelled mahogany counters, desks, and screen, forming an inner office. A spiral iron staircase leads to the first floor. The grand staircase ascends to the first floor, and communicates by a staircase with the waterroom below. The private entrance to the east side of the building adjoining the Westminster Fire Office, and has a staircase to each floor, lighted from a skylight above. Returning to the principal entrance, the public staircase of Portland stone, with its deep moulded treads and elegant iron balusters, attracts our notice. It leads to the first-floor hall, in the same form as the one below, and has a groined ceiling. Passing through the large folding doors, we at once enter a light, charming room, about fifty feet by thirty feet, set apart for the view and sale of bijouterie, silver plate, paintings, and works of art, for the display of which it is specially adapted. The apartment, of Spanish mahogany, forms an important feature. The remainder of the floor is arranged as private offices. The second and third floors are devoted to residential purposes; and we remark that by apparently simple means Mr. Allom has succeeded in constructing suites of handsome and convenient apartments, of various sizes, shapes, an achievement of more than ordinary difficulty when the peculiarities of the site are taken into consideration. The whole together contain twenty-one rooms. There are three outlets to the roof, whence a most extensive view is obtained, the whole being nearly that of the Nelson Column. Gas has been laid on throughout the building by Mr. Strode, of St. Martin's-le-Grand; and the two auction-rooms and the basement are warmed by Perkins's hot-water apparatus.

In viewing the exterior of the building one cannot fail to be struck by the originality with which every part of the work is stamped, and the difficulty in ascribing to it any particular style or period of art, though the leaning is towards the classic or Italian school. Allom has avoided the hackneyed use of the Ionic and Corinthian pilasters, and has treated the front in a flowing, natural way, the ornament being introduced with careful taste and made subordinate to the general purposes of utility, thus obtaining, at no very great expense in enrichments, a dignity and character suited to an important public office. This is seen in the broad projecting cornice to the ground and first floor windows, thereby securing an abundant and equal distribution of light with boldness of effect. The minor details also evince much taste, and the corner adjoining the Westminster Fire Office exhibits the harmonising effect of two buildings of different designs, a matter requiring at all times great judgment on the part of the architect. The material of the façade is generally of Portland cement, and the colour is unusually warm and rich in tone. The keystones, modillions, dentils, acroteria, and terraces are well executed in Sussex architectural stone. The treatment of the ironwork, in point of design, deserves mention. The wrought-iron columns, girders, &c., were manufactured by Mr. Peter Williams, at the Albion Ironworks, Birmingham. The ground-floor windows are secured at night by Barnard, Bishop, and Co.'s rolling-iron shutters.

In justice to the contractors, Messrs. G. Mansfield and Son, of Henry-street, Gray's-inn-lane, we have to notice the generally substantial and finished quality of the work, which has been executed with the greatest possible dispatch, considering the delays entailed by the disastrous "strike" of last autumn. To the architect, Mr. Arthur Allom, of Robert-street, Adelphi, great praise is due for the originality, thought, and skill he has displayed in designing a building which so completely fulfils the requirements of property in view, while contributing so essentially to the architectural beauty of this interesting locality. Mr. Digby Wyatt was appointed as referee in case of disputes, but the contract in that capacity from time to time during the progress of the works.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

S. H. L.—We hear, and are glad to hear it, that Mr. Kling has arrived, and purposes to remain a long stay in this country. He has a sparkling, lively vein of play, which is quite refreshing in these days of dull, plodding chess. We hope to see him at the Simpson's Divan, and also at some foreign "problems." We are afraid next autumn will be too much for us during his services at the forthcoming meeting of the British Chess Association?

H. KING.—Your solution is correct.

A. KWIX.—They shall have immediate attention.

WAYFIN.—The move suggested certainly says on to delay the mate.

J. M. K.—Quite wrong. Read the rules for the Grand Tournament and the King obviously cannot move.

J. H. S.—"B" was bound to play out the game unless both parties agreed to its postponement; by refusing to do so he forfeited it. See the rules in "Chess Praxis."

A NOVEL VARIATION IN THE "SCOTCH GAMBIT" AND THE "CENTRE GAMBIT."—The Manchester Chess Club, which has lately suggested an innovation upon the established line of play in the Scotch Gambit, which merits attention, has, of late, been very active, for, as will be remembered, are:—

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LORD HEYTESBURY.

The Right Hon. Sir William A'Court, G.C.B., Baron Heytesbury, of Heytesbury, in the county of Wilts, and a Baronet, was the eldest son of the late Admiral Sir William A'Court, Colonel in the Army and Knight of the Bath, by his second wife, Letitia, daughter of Henry Tyndale, Esq., of Salisbury. He was born in 1779, on the 30th of July, and commenced early in life his diplomatic career in which he afterwards became so distinguished. He was appointed Secretary of Legation at Naples on the 31st of July, 1801, and on special mission to Vienna, in 1807. He was First Commissioner of the Affairs of Malta in 1811, and Minister Extraordinary to the Barbary States in 1813, at Naples in 1814, and at Madrid in 1822. He was Ambassador at Lisbon in 1824, and was Ambassador at St. Petersburgh from 1825 to 1832, when he obtained his pension. He was made a P.C. in 1828, and in 1835 he was nominated Governor-General of India, but declined it. He succeeded thither the Tory Government with which he acted had retired. He was Lord Lieutenant of Ireland from 1844 to 1846, and succeeded his father as second Baronet on the 23rd of July, 1817, and was raised to the Peerage as Lord Heytesbury on the 28th of Jan., 1828. He was twice married, on the 3rd of October, 1808, Maria Rebecca, second daughter of the Hon. William Henry Fortescue, and granddaughter of William, first Earl of Radnor, by whom (who died on the 6th of October, 1844) he leaves a son and a daughter, Cecilia Mary, the wife of the Rev. Robert Daly, D.D. Son and James, first Lord Dunsandle. Lord Heytesbury died at his seat, Heytesbury House, Wilts, on the 9th inst., and is succeeded by his son, Henry Ashe, now second Lord Heytesbury, who has assumed the additional surname of Holmes. He was born on the 11th of April, 1797, and married, on the 3rd of October, 1833, Elizabeth, eldest daughter and heiress of the late Sir Lennard Thomas Holmes Hylton, Bart., of Westerton, in the Isle of Wight, and has ten sons and four daughters: the eldest of the latter, Elizabeth, was married, in June last year, to Edward William Ward, Esq., junior, of Mannton Hall, Leeds.

SIR A. J. MURRAY, BART.

Sir Archibald John Murray, Bart., the head of the ancient house of Murray of Blackbarony, in the county of Peebles, was the elder son of Sir William Keith Murray, Bart., by his wife, Anne Dogg, of the noble Douglas family. He was born in 1781; and, after being educated at Westminster and Christ Church, Oxford, he entered the British Army in 1810, and served with the Scots Fusilier Guards. He became a Lieutenant-Colonel in 1830, and retired from the service. He married, in 1818, Eliza, daughter of the late Samuel Dwyer, Esq., but had no issue. He died on the 22nd ult., and is succeeded by his only brother, now Sir John Dipvyle Murray, Bart., who married, first, Blanche Cuthbert, and has had by her a son, John Cuthbert. He married, secondly, Frances, daughter of the Rev. Hon. Baptist Noel, Rector of Bold Hall, Lancashire, and by her has three sons and four daughters. The only sister of the late and present Baronets, Anne Maria, is the wife of the Duke Filippo Sante Montalbetti.

SIR WILLIAM DOMVILE, BART.

Sir William Domville, second Baronet, of St. Albans, Herts, was the descendant of an ancient family, the Domvilles of Lymme Hall, Cheshire, and was the only son of Sir William Domville, Lord Mayor of London, by his wife, Sally, daughter of Mr. Archibald Fraser, Banker. He was born on the 22nd of March, 1774, and succeeded as second Baronet at the decease of his father on the 6th of February, 1832. He married, on the 18th of September, 1807, Marie, daughter of the late Edward Esq., of Walthamstow, Essex, and by her, who died on the 15th of May, 1857, has issue one son and two daughters. The latter two are married, the eldest to Sir Henry Ashworth, Bart., of Egerton Hall, Lancashire, and the second to Edward Southfield Lodge, Eastbourne, Sussex, and is the mother of the elder son, Edward Lucas Graham Domville, the third Baronet, who was born on the 23rd of June, 1835, and married, on the 5th of December, 1848, Mary Anne, daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Hulme, Rector of Hulme, and has a son and a daughter. Sir William Domville, the first Baronet, was created on the 27th of August, 1814, Knight of the Royal Guelphic Order, and the allied Sovereigns on the 18th of June, 1814; and was, in consequence, created a Knight of the Bath on the 2nd of July following. Sir William Domville is a senior branch to that of the Irish Baronet, Sir Charles Compton William Domville, of Santry Demesne, and Santry House, both in the county of Dublin, present High Sheriff of that county.

THE memoir and arms of Field-Marshal the Earl of Strafford, just deceased, will appear next week.

THE SPANISH PRETENDER.—DON JUAN de Bourbon, brother of the Count de Montemolin, refuses to abdicate his claims to the crown of Spain, and has therefore followed the example of his brother in Salvidrana. The Queen Mother Charles Louis of his rights to the crown of Spain, consisting of a manifesto, dated in Trieste on the 4th inst., in which he proclaims me to claim the rights of my family, and those which I have personally to the throne of my ancestors, to which I am bound by oath as the principle of legality upon which they are based, I will not permit an appeal to arms to obtain the triumph of those rights to be made in my behalf again be shed in the cause. I place my faith in Divine Providence, in the rectitude and patriotism of the Spanish people, and in favourable circumstances. I desire not to ascend the throne by encountering victories on the eyes to it; I desire to possess it as the inheritance by the principles of legality by legality order will be established, and with it the country will prosper and progress, and the full enjoyment of liberty. I have made known this manifesto to the Curtes in order that the nation may thereby be informed of it.—London, June 1, 1860.

ENGLISH PICKPOCKETS IN PARIS.—Complaints having been made to the police that numerous robberies of the pockets of persons of the middle classes were charged to detect the thieves; and, as the greater part of the robberies were committed in the vicinity of the Bourse, in front of Chevet's shop in that place, as the omnibus station for the Champs Elysées, and in the three-sou seats in the Champs Elysées, it was there that the officers were chiefly on the watch. The other evening a gentleman was observed to enter one of the shops, and to purchase some articles. He then left Chevet's window, and then go away with another man and a woman. The three entered a cab, the two thieves following, followed by the officers, and after stopping there a little while they separated. One of them followed the gentleman to the Palais Royal, where he was observed to take a pocket-book down an opening into a cellar. One of the officers who had followed descended it, produced his card, and took him before the commissary of police of the district; and shortly after the other officer came in with the woman, who had the pocket-book concealed in her dress. It appears that the gentleman had a London policeman was present in the house of the pickpockets, and that he was the first to see the theft. The thieves are known to the police as "Les Anglais," and it has been ascertained that the woman, it appears, named Gordon, is thirty-six years of age, and has been residing in Paris for some time past. The man, Jacques Lasser; on her were found long scissors and implements used by pickpockets. The woman Gordon, it is stated, has been in communication with the persons who in England, shortly after the trial of Rush, were in custody in London, robbed Foulnie, the jeweller, of a quantity of valuable jewellery. The man who threw away the pocket-book, named Jackson, is twenty-eight years of age, and lived in Great Portland-street; the pocket-book turned out years of age, and lived in Great Portland-street; the pocket-book turned out to have been stolen a fortnight since from a person of Vaudrand. In the to have been stolen a fortnight since from a person of Vaudrand. In the man's lodgings some papers were seized which proved that for some time past he had been transmitting about 40*l.* a week to his wife at London. The third prisoner, named Macdonald, is twenty-six years of age, and resided in the Rue Castellane. He lived in good style, and it was stated, among other things, that a new carriage was in his service. The three prisoners were sent to the Prefecture of Police to await their trial.

FIRE-ANNIHILATOR, or VAPOUR FIRE ENGINE.

FIRE AT GRAVESEND.—Copy letter from Mr. Superintendent White to the Secretary of the Fire-Annihilator Company.—"Police-office, Gravesend, March 19, 1860. Sir,—I have the honour to report for your information that a fire happened at 4.15 a.m., 10th inst., at No. 1, Milton-road, in this borough, occupied by Mr. Clunne, victualler. Proceeded there with the Fire-Annihilators. Found the bar one mass of fire, which was then making way through the window and door-shutters, and extending along the passage to the other rooms. Immediately cut an aperture in the door, and discharged a No. 5 machine into the burning building, which immediately subdued the flames. Endeavoured to enter, but was unable, from the intense heat and smoke. Discharged another No. 5 machine, in consequence of a quantity of spirits having then ignited (through, no doubt, the draught of air then admitted) which effectually subdued all fire, and, aided by water supplied from stand-pipe, in a few minutes was enabled to enter, when found all further danger at an end. The whole of bar and contents burned, passages to rooms leading therefrom burned, and serious damage by heat and smoke through the house. I should inform you that the part occupied by Mr. Clunne is about the fourth part of a building known formerly as the 'New Inn,' the whole being under a continuous roof, and had it not been for the Annihilators the fire must have extended to the other portions, which have been recently converted into five distinct dwellings, and occupied as follows:—Next to where fire happened a watchmaker's, then a hardware-man, then a tobacconist, next a milliner's. Neither of them received any damage; the entire building, I should say, is about 93 feet frontage and 39 feet in depth.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant—(Signed)—FREDK. WHITE, Superintendent of Police.—The Secretary, Fire Annihilator Company.—P.S. I beg to add that the fire was entirely got under before the supply of water from the hydrant was obtained, and that it is my opinion that if the fire had not been got under by the fire-annihilators nothing could have saved the entire block of buildings from destruction.—(Signed)—FRED. WHITE."

"The introduction of Fire-Annihilators into this borough a few years ago, through the liberality of J. Toddington, Esq., was a great boon to the inhabitants. There can be no doubt that an immense amount of property has been saved from destruction by the use of these simple and effective machines in the hands of our able and energetic superintendent of fire-engines. The Fire-Annihilator is a terror to the incendiary, and a safeguard to any householder. The continued prompt use of the invention will, we have no doubt, ere long redeem our town from the character which it had for frequency of fires of a disastrous and extensive kind."—Kentish Independent, March 17, 1860.

The practical value of the Fire-Annihilator has now been proved beyond question by upwards of 70 cases of use at casual fires. Prices £2 and upwards.

SICILY—WHAT NEXT?

THE time has arrived when Garibaldi has ceased to be an adventurer even in the eyes of the most legitimate Sovereign in whom cruelty and tyranny are coincident with vested rights. When a Monarch treats with the leader of an insurgent force on the terms which have been entered into between Garibaldi and the King of Naples personal dignity becomes equal, and the rebel disappears in the chief of a people. Of course all honest, thinking men who love liberty, and whose blood fevers with sympathy for the oppressed, have long ago placed Garibaldi in his true position in their estimation, as in their hopes; but he has now reached that crowning point of his career in Sicily which in rendering him master of the situation wrings acknowledgment of his power and his pride of place from the most reluctant of human beings in the person of that scion of the Bourbons who by the assistance of the evil one has hitherto reigned over Naples and its dependencies. There can be but one desire felt by all the well-wishers of freedom and constitutional Government in Italy, and that is, that Garabaldi may be left to himself. There is little doubt that, if he be not interfered with, ere long he will have established order and a Provisional Government over all Sicily; and then, slipping over to the mainland, a march upon Naples would follow, with results which need only to be hinted at. But it is a very great question whether this singular man will be allowed to work out the deliverance of even Sicily. Already we hear murmurs which betoken the stirring of that system which, under the name of diplomacy, seems to be the very chloroform of national energy and free-will. At the moment when popular vitality is at its highest point diplomacy intervenes only too surely; and its anæsthetic effects are too soon visible in the relaxation, and finally in the suspension, of vigour and of action. It is not arrogating any spirit of prophecy if we say that, in a short time, attempts will be made in relation to the settlement of the affairs of Sicily on the basis of that system which has been for a long series paramount as the public law of Europe. In the shrill accents of fear and terror Francis, King of Naples, frantically appeals to every Court in Europe to interfere between him and his revolted subjects; and although it would seem that for a while his supplications have been received with something very much akin to contempt, yet in every country, with, we trust, the exception of England there are dynastic sympathies which it is probable will, in due time, be roused against so gross a violation of established order as is implied in the insolent proceeding of a people which declares, through the medium of physical force, that it will not be reigned over by mere legitimacy. And we do not except even France

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Moniteur of Tuesday contained the decree promulgating the treaty for the annexation of Savoy and Nice, which was sanctioned by the King of Sardinia on Monday. Official possession of these provinces was taken on Thursday; and on the same day the Emperor held a grand military review in Paris to celebrate the anniversary of "Le Jour de Solennité," as sung in the Cathedral of Notre Dame, and the public offices were illuminated. The French laws and constitution will soon be operative there on the 1st of January, 1861.

Count de Persigny, the Neapolitan Ambassador, has had an interview with the Emperor at Fontainebleau.

Admiral Parseval Deschênes has just died after a painful illness.

The Austrian Ambassador and Count Metternich have been invited to pass a week with their imperial Majesties at Fontainebleau.

Prince Jerome has been appointed Governor of the Invalides, and is again in favour.

A letter from the camp of Chalons announces that since the arrival there of Marshal M'Mahon, Duke of Magenta, the camp has assumed quite a new appearance. Fresh regiments arrive every day, which, by the satisfactory exertions of the engineer officers, are commodiously lodged. The distribution of the various quarters in admirable order is arranged. There are four strong field redoubts, those of Isker nan, Palestro, Magenta, and Solferino.

The Constitutionnel of Sunday publishes the exeat which we have noticed in another column, and which we give below.

FRANCE AND GERMANY.

It is stated that the Emperor of the French will leave Paris to-day (Saturday) for Baden, to visit the Grand Duke and Duchess of Prussia. The Prince Regent will, it is said, first visit Dresden, to have an interview with the King of Saxony. The Emperor Napoleon expected at Baden are the King of Saxony and of Wurtemberg and the Grand Duke of Baden and of Hesse-Darmstadt. The initiative of this sort of congress is attributed to the King of Bavaria, whose object is to remove the difficulties which divide the States of the Confederation into two distinct spheres of principles and tendencies.

NAPLES.

Prince Petrulla, the Neapolitan Minister at Vienna, has received, by courier, a telegraphic despatch, dated from Naples, 31st ult., in which his Majesty engages himself solemnly :—1. To call to his Council men enjoying the public confidence. 2. To establish a Government not for guaranteeing the faithful and conscientious execution of the laws as well as the suppression of abuses. 3. To proclaim a general amnesty. 4. To grant, without loss of time, a constitution of these guarantees, European diplomacy will no longer refuse to interfere in his favour against the revolutionists.

Captains Acton and Carsiciolo, of the two Neapolitan frigates which have left Naples for Gaeta with Garibaldi's flag, have been tried by court-martial at Naples and acquitted.

A telegram from Naples, dated June 9, says that the promulgation of a Constitution, framed according to that of France, is expected shortly.

It is officially stated that two steamers, having on board troops and ammunition, have been captured by Neapolitan ships of war. Naples continues tranquil.

AUSTRIA.

The Wiener Zeitung contains a decree ordering that the stubborn Hungarian Protestants who refused to take the oath on the 1st of July next, at which period the five existing departments of the century, Government will be intrusted with the administration of Hungary, will be abolished.

Another decree suspends the district authorities of Moravia and the provincial authorities of Silesia, and entrusts the functions to the stadtholdership of Moravia, but the provincial statute of Silesia, with a separate provincial representation, is to be maintained.

The full sittings of the Enlarged Council of the Empire have been adjourned to the 15th inst., when the Special Committee of the Reichsrath will continue the discussion of general business. The estimates relative to the direct and indirect taxation for 1861 have already been laid before the Reichsrath.

The Council of Ministers has unanimously approved the re-establishment of Commissioners of Circuits and Public Works, as proposed by M. von Plener, successor of Baron von Bruck.

The official Wiener Zeitung of Thursday contains an Imperial decree granting to the Central Lombardo-Venetian Congregation a decisive voice in the deliberative vote upon all matters except, however, upon such administrative measures as are the affair of the Government—viz., the appropriation of the proposed expenditure and the revenue and the salary of Government officials.

The commission appointed for examining the public debt has presented to the Emperor a memorial relative to the fate of the private public debt of the empire. This report will be published shortly.

PRUSSIA.

By order of the Prince Regent of Prussia, prayers for the safe delivery of the Princess are ordered to be offered up in all the churches of the kingdom.

The Prince Regent arrived at Berlin on Wednesday morning, and had an interview of several hours' duration with the Prince Consort. The latter has departed this evening for Baden-Baden.

A railway has just been inaugurated by the Prince Regent of Prussia from Konigsberg to the Russian frontier, twenty-four miles in length. At Eydkuhnen it joins the Russian line from that place to St. Petersburg.

THE UNITED STATES.

In Congress the Senate passed the Indian deficiency Appropriation Bill, and adopted a resolution directing inquiry concerning the Government purchase of the naval depôt at Brunswick.

In the House of Representatives yesterday, Mr. Lamar United States Marshal, Deputy-Marshal, or other Ministerial officer, who shall commit any violation of the laws of the United States, or abuse of power with offences under the laws of the United States, or those of a State, or Territory, in which he may be employed, or otherwise shall be deemed guilty of misdemeanour, and shall be fined and imprisoned according to the aggravation of the offence, not exceeding the minimum of the crime with which the prisoner has been charged. Mr. Winslow, of North Carolina, brought before the House the circumstances that led to the assassination of Governor Sprague, who is a member, had returned to subpœna certain witnesses by whom it was proposed to prove that the Governor provoked the attack upon himself. Carry Congressional elections in Pennsylvania a couple of years ago.

In the Senate, on the 4th inst., Mr. Trumbull, of Illinois, made use of remarks which induced Mr. Houston, of Alabama, to call Mr. Trumbull a liar and a coward. This produced immense excitement and a vast amount of palaver, which seems to consume all time. After all the parties had been pretty well exhausted with the worry over Mr. Houston's unparliamentary language, the matter subsided into conduct, and the House adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 5th inst., the Slidell case, spent four hours in debate on the Mexican treaty, and finally rejected it by a large majority.

The bill providing for the shipment of negroes captured on board slavers to their home in Africa was passed. The President has entered into an arrangement with the Colonization Society for the return of the Africans captured by the Mohawk and Wyandotte. The number of these is 271, and the Society for the receipt.

The Japanese were engaged on the 25th ult. in receiving members of Congress and their wives, in accordance with a previous arrangement. The Ambassadors also dined with the President.

The Republicans of Washington, Philadelphia, St. Louis, and other large towns, had held ratification meetings, and the nomination of Lincoln and Hamlin was enthusiastically accepted.

A tornado passed over Cattaraugus, New York, and the neighbouring towns on the 30th, entirely destroying several dwelling-houses. The damage is estimated at 25,000 dols.

The United States' frigate Wyoming had been ordered to Lima, to sustain the claims of American Citizens against the Peruvian Government on behalf of the injured American citizens.

THE REVOLUTION IN SICILY.

Our account last week left Garibaldi in possession of the city of Palermo. The suspension of hostilities agreed to between Generals Lanza and Garibaldi, at the instance of the former, resulted on the 6th inst. in a capitulation, according to which the Neapolitan troops were to embark with their arms, ammunition, and baggage. The embarkation commenced on the 19th. Garibaldi did not long delay after his occupation of Palermo in establishing a Provisional Government. It is formed as follows :—Baron Pisani, Foreign Affairs; Signor Crispi, Interior and Finances; Signor Orsini (a Sicilian), War and Admiralty; Signor Bixio, Marine.

The following decrees of the new Government indicate the complete organisation which Garibaldi intends, and which he has already commenced :—

ITALY AND VICTOR EMMANUEL.

Joseph Garibaldi, Commander-in-Chief of the national forces in Sicily, in virtue of the powers conferred on him, decrees :—Art. 1. Out of the lands of the crown estates, and of those belonging in conformity with the law among the citizens of the communes, every one, without drawing lots, shall have the allotment to which he shall be entitled by the law in case of the soldier's death the privilege shall pass to his heir. 2. The allotment shall be free from taxes to that which shall be levied on the produce of the land of a poor family. Nevertheless, if the lands of a commune are greater than the population requires, the surplus of the allotments may be taxed as much as great as the other persons sharing. 3. If the communes have no land of the crown, they shall receive the value from the Government. 4. The Secretary of State is charged with the execution of the present decree. Palermo, 2nd June, 1860. (Signed) De Donato, Secretary of State. Francesco Crispi.

Letters from Palermo of the 3rd instant give details of the devastation of Palermo. Numerous houses had been shattered by the bombs, but comparatively few had been killed. The insurgents were furious, and had sought to massacre one hundred spies and several Carabineri. Garibaldi had issued a decree calling all Sicilians to arms between the ages of twenty and forty-five years. Thousands of men were in the roads of Palermo.

The Neapolitan Government has, it is said, decided upon concentrating all its military forces at Syracuse and Messina, because, by preserving these positions, the Neapolitans will have considerable hopes to appear in the eyes of Europe as master of Sicily. It seems to be tacitly admitted that Sicily is recognised as an accomplished fact, should the Neapolitan army abandon Sicily.

A despatch from Paris says :—"The King of Naples has not only abandoned the Western portion of his realm to the inevitable tumultuous intervention of the five great Powers, in order to obtain from their collective wisdom the best terms for the integrity of his States, King Francis II. has more particularly claimed the mediation of the Emperor of the French for the restitution of Sicily and has proposed to proclaim immediately the Constitution of 1812. His Majesty has not requested of the great Powers to employ their authority and their influence to restrain Piedmont from favouring revolutionary movement on the mainland of the kingdom of Naples. As regards the collective action of Europe, Lord John Russell, it was the first to reply that it did not intend to interfere in any other way in the conflict between the Neapolitan troops and Garibaldi's band than by, if possible, the effusion of blood, without siding with other party. After this answer it was thought that the five great Powers likewise, in more or less positive terms, declined any direct intervention. Napoleon III. was at Lyons when M. Thouvenel transmitted to his Majesty by telegraph the proposal of the King of Naples. His Majesty replied immediately that a mediation was impossible. The Emperor, however, added, unless offended, supposing the Sicilian revolution, no Power could place itself as mediator between the crown and the King of Naples. Lord John Russell, however, promised to recommend to Piedmont not to accept any distinction between the Neapolitan provinces in the peninsula. Except Austria, who does not maintain diplomatic relations with Piedmont, the other great Powers will act in a similar manner."

The "Opinion Nationale" of Paris of the 9th says :—"It is asserted that France has, with the consent of Piedmont, accepted the mediation proposed by the King of Naples on the conditions of which are :—A liberal Constitution for Naples ; a separate Government for Sicily, under the sovereignty of the House of Bourbon, and on condition that the Sicilians should be consulted and give their consent," With the Opinion Nationale hopes they will refuse.

By a despatch from Turin, received by turn that M. de Martino, the Neapolitan Envoy, is intrusted with detailed instructions for the brief and complete settlement of the Sicilian affair. The following are the bases on which the King of Naples consents, at least for the present, to treat with the insurgents :—1. Political Concessionists :—Francis II. is ready to engage himself to grant a liberal Constitution to the people of Sicily. He also applied to the whole kingdom. Should the Sicilians desire a distinct administration, each existing Ministry would extend his concessions so far as to place Sicily in a position similar to that of the duchy of Luxemburg. The attitude of Count Cavour leaves, however, little hope of a solution favourable to the King of Naples. As regards the Sicilian patriots, Count Cavour now respects the Cabinet of the Tuileries to adopt, in regard to Sicily, the same line of conduct as that of Prussia, Vienna, Modena, and the Legations. This request has only been conditionally refused. The Count, however, informs Cavour has addressed an official despatch to the Chevalier Nigra, who communicated its contents to M. Thouvenel about four days ago. In this despatch Count Cavour declares that Europe will not in any way interfere in the affairs of Sicily. He reminds the French Cabinet that the principle of non-intervention is the fundamental basis of the celebrated note of Lord John Russell, has been officially accepted by the Five Powers.

An account by our Special Artist and Correspondent at Palermo of the doings in Sicily to the 2nd inst. will be found at page 576. Several sketches have also been received from him, three of which appear in our present Number.

The medical officers of the Royal Navy on Wednesday presented a duplicate of the bust of Sir Jean Pringle, recently placed in the museum of Haslar Hospital to Lady Pringle,as at the family residence in Soho-square.

SOCIETY FOR IMPROVING THE SOCIAL CONDITION OF THE BLIND. This society gave a musical entertainment yesterday evening at the Music Hall, Store-street. The concert chiefly consisted of a selection from a grand romantic opera called "The Last Crusade," composed by Mr. Alexander Mitchell, a blind musician, and first produced in Germany under the title of "Die Tresum Brüder." Several blind vocal and instrumental artists appeared in the course of the evening, among whom Miss Northcote distinguished herself on the pianoforte. The Rev. Joshua Dickinson made an eloquent appeal explanatory of the objects of the society, which, we trust, resulted in adding many subscribers to its funds.

Mrs. Eliza Harriet Mary Feltham had been committed for trial to the Surrey Sessions on the charge of stealing an embroidered tablet and a pair of mittens from the stall of Lady Emily Peel at the fancy fair held at the Crystal Palace, on Saturday last, for the benefit of the schools belonging to the Clacks and Brixton Independent Society. She was admitted to bail in five sureties of £200 each.

ASSOCIATION IN AID OF THE DEAF AND DUMB, BEDFORD-ROW.—A building committee in connection with this association is about being formed, with a view to the erection of a place of worship for the deaf and dumb, as well as a house for the aged and infirm, an object to which Lord Ebury has contributed £50 and Mr. Samuel Gurney, M.P., £25. All those who are interested in the welfare of this unfortunate class will be glad to hear that the Rev. Samuel Smith, Chaplain of the association, ministers to their spiritual wants, and is specially ordained to preach to them in their own language.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegrams were received through Mr. Reuter's office yesterday (Friday):—

Meeting of the Sovereigns.—Dresden, Thursday.—The official Dresden journal of to-day states that the King of Saxony, on the invitation of the Prince Regent of Prussia, leaves this evening for Baden, accompanied by his chief equerry General Engel.

American Mail.—Queenstown, Thursday.—The Liverpool, New York, and Philadelphia Company's steamer Edinburgh, Captain Kennedy, which left New York on the 2nd inst., has arrived. She brings 260 passengers and 320,518 dollars in specie. Her news is anticipated.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

Baron de Sampayo: The will and four codicils of Alexandre Teixeira Sampayo, Baron de Sampayo, an Attaché to the Legation of the King of Portugal, lately residing at Barnes, in Surrey, where he died on the 11th of May last, were proved in London on the 2nd of June. They are drawn up in the English form, and are of considerable length, there being in the will alone no less than sixty-three clauses, each numbered, and disposing of a legacy generally pecuniary. The will and two of the codicils were made in December, 1859, and the other codicils in January and April this year. The executors are the Rev. Frederic Kent, Incumbent of St. Peter's, Ryde, Isle of Wight; Francis Thomas Bircham, Esq., solicitor, Parliament-street; and Robert William Parmeter, Esq., of Aylsham, Norfolk. The personalty in England was sworn under £120,000. Among the bequests is a sum of £5000 to Mrs. Russell, a kind and attentive friend of his late wife; to the Rev. Frederic Kent a legacy of £2000, and a like sum to Mrs. Matilda Kent, his wife; and to them he leaves his house, furniture, and carriages; and to Mrs. Kent the jewellery belonging to his late wife. His numerous relatives are remembered by him, as well as all his servants; to some of the latter he has left £100; to the churchwardens of Barnes an annuity of £10 for ten years, to be expended in clothing for the poor, as well as the surplus of the interest arising from the sum of £600, after keeping in repair his family tomb in the cemetery at Barnes. The interest of £500 to be laid out annually in clothing for the Catholic poor of Mortlake. He leaves £2000 to the Orphan Royal Institution at Lisbon, to which himself and brother were contributors. The Catholic Bishop Morris, the Rev. Dr. Maguire, and other ministers are left bequests for masses and prayers. He bequeaths to his brother Luiz Teixeira Sampayo a sum of £40,000, to his sister Donna Maria £10,000, and to his sister Donna Franciso £5000. To his nephew Luiz, the son of his said brother Luiz Teixeira Sampayo, of Lisbon, he leaves his robes of dignity of office, his stars, crosses, medals, &c.; and, the Baron having no male issue, his will contains an entreaty that his Majesty the King of Portugal would graciously confer the dignity of Baron upon his nephew, in order that this mark of honour may be perpetuated in the family.

Lieut.-General Sir E. H. Bunbury, Bart., K.C.B.: The will and codicil of Lieut.-General Sir Henry Edward Bunbury, Bart., late of Great Barton, Suffolk, were proved in London, on the 5th of June, by Sir Charles James Fox Bunbury, Bart., Edward Herbert Bunbury, Esq., and Colonel Henry William St. Pierre Bunbury, C.B., the sons and joint executors. The personal property was sworn under £90,000. The will is dated the 23rd of August, 1859, and the codicil the 26th of October last. He bequeaths to Lady Bunbury, his relict, a sum of £10,000, with liberty to select any of his carriages and horses; and also leaves her Ladyship a life interest in his Merioneth estates, which at her decease devolves to his son Henry William St. Pierre Bunbury. To his son Edward Herbert Bunbury he leaves a legacy of £20,000; and to his eldest son, who succeeds to the baronetcy, he bequeaths the Barton and Mildenhall estates, and also appoints him residuary legatee. He has left liberal legacies to all his servants.

The Opinione states that the new customs lines on the Savoy side are already organised. The first French line is at Lansburg, and the second at St. Jean de Maurienne. The Sardinian line is to be established at Susa.

It is announced that it is intended to restore to the Rue de la Chaussée d'Antin, Paris, the name of the Rue du Mont Blanc, which it received by a decree, in the year 1792, when Savoy was first annexed to France. This will make the eighth time within less than two hundred years that the name of this street has been changed.

Vera Cruz.—The important intelligence has been received that Zuloaga had issued a decree on the 1st deposing Miramon and assuming the Presidency of Mexico himself. It is stated that this movement had caused great alarm. Uraga, at the head of 6000 Liberal troops, was at Guanaxuato on the 5th, preparing to attack the capital. The French Minister to the city of Mexico was at Jalapa, waiting an opportunity to reach the coast.

New Zealand.—A native war has, we regret to say, broken out in New Zealand. The cause of the war, which is connected with the fatal land question, is not very clearly explained in the reports we have received; but the natives consider themselves aggrieved by the system under which their lands are disposed of to the English Government. The principal skirmish took place at the mouth of the Waireka. Troops have been dispatched from Melbourne, Sydney, and Hobart Town. Her Majesty's ships Pelorus and Victoria have left for New Zealand.

Australia.—An accident which detained the Emeu at Sydney for some days delayed the mails beyond their usual time, but they have now reached this country, and we have news from Melboure to the 24th of April, from Sydney to the 23rd, and from Adelaide to the 25th. Beyond the completion of the discussions on the Land Bill and the passing of the Estimates, little had been done during the Session. The Land Bill had only to pass the third reading, and then to be remitted to the Upper House. Great doubts of its fate were entertained out of doors. Much excitement was felt about the outbreak of natives in New Zealand, dignified, in the papers, by the title of "The New Zealand War." Another rich gold-field has been discovered near Twofold Bay, in New South Wales. 210,000 oz. of gold have been shipped during the month. Large emigrations from Adelaide to Snowy River are taking place.

The Prince of Wales and Canada.—The Montreal Gazette of the 31st ult. publishes the following particulars connected with the approaching visit of the Prince of Wales to Canada:—"The Government intend to receive the Prince at Quebec, to convey him from place to place, and furnish him with lodgings, as the invited guest of the province, there and at the other places where he is likely to stay. To this end the Parliament House is being fitted up for his temporary residence at Quebec. At Ottawa Mr. W. H. Morrell's new large hotel is being fitted up for him. Thence, it is understood, he will make an excursion up the river. It is not yet decided that he will remain over a night at Kingston. At Toronto the old Government House is being made ready for his reception. At Hamilton Mr. Isaac Buchanan, the city member, has placed his mansion at the disposal of the Government for the Prince, and at Niagara Falls Mr. M'Micken's or the late Mr. Zimmerman's house will be his residence, supplemented with the Clifton House for his suite. It is understood that the Prince will make excursions from Toronto, Hamilton, or the Falls to the westernmost districts of the province, visiting London, Sarnia, &c.; and it is also likely he will make excursions into the country surrounding Montreal—to Beloeil, perhaps to Chateaugay, &c. The Council will, we believe, be prepared to receive the Prince, and present an address with all necessary state and solemnity; and a committee appointed to consider the subject have recommended an appropriation of money for the ornamentation of the streets, a torchlight and trade procession, and an illumination of the mountain, the public places, and buildings. The Grand Trunk Railway, it is quite understood, will give no banquet, but will be prepared, we believe, to illuminate the bridge; of course, to decorate it and its approaches on the day the Prince lays the last stone, and give the citizens cordial assistance and co-operation in their welcome of his Royal Highness."

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Crystal Arcade attached to Covent-garden Theatre was filled with flowers for the first time on Tuesday night, and opened to the visitors to the Opera House. The show of flowers was magnificent.

At the Central Criminal Court, on Thursday, Henry Francis Richardson was found guilty of stealing three separate sums, the property of the London Rifle Brigade, of which he was secretary, and sentenced to four years' penal servitude. There is reason to belive that Richardson has embezzled £500 belonging to the corps.

The annual meeting of the society established for the supply of books printed in Moon's raised type, with home teachers or missionaries employed for the instruction of the blind, to enable them to read the Scriptures, was held on Monday at Willis's Rooms—the Right Hon. the Earl of Shaftesbury presiding. Besides a numerous assemblage of benevolent ladies and gentlemen, many of the blind pulpils were present.

The beautiful little chapel attached to the Hospital for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest, Brompton, was thrown open last Sunday to the general public, on the occasion of the anniversary sermon being preached by the Archbishop of Canterbury. After the sermon a collection, which amounted to £16 17s. 6d., was made in aid of the funds.

The Hospital for Sick Children, Great Ormond-street, held its eighth annual festival on Wednesday at Willis's Rooms—Sir John Pakington, M.P., in the chair. There was a large attendance. During the eight years which this hospital has been in existence it has received 2272 in-patients, and it has assisted 58,969 out-patients. Donations to the amount of £1700—Mr. Goshen subscribing £500—and annual subscriptions to the amount of £60, were announced.

Births and Deaths.—Last week the births of 842 boys and 849 girls (in all 1691 children) were registered in London. In the ten corresponding weeks of the years 1850-59 the average number was 1560.—The returns of London for last week show a total number of 969 deaths, and a decrease on that of the previous week, which was 1004. In the ten years 1850-59 the average number of deaths in the weeks corresponding with last week was, after correction for increase of population, 1079.

The "One Tun" Ragged Schools.—The annual meeting of the friends and members of a "ragged school" located in the centre of one of the most squalid quarters of Westminster took place on Tuesday. As the most active labourer in this good enterprise, Miss Adeline Cooper, relies for much of her success upon the abatement of intoxication in the district, it is a circumstance equally cheerful and piquant that the school should be held in a "converted" public-house. The building in question is the "One Tun," which was for nearly two centuries a notorious house of call for thieves. It has since been converted into a ragged school with the best results. The Earl of Shaftesbury presided, and distributed the prizes.

The Builders' Strike.—On Saturday three workmen were charged, at Clerkenwell Police Court, with having endeavoured, by threats, to compel Mr. Anley, a builder, to discharge two men in his employ. These two men were working under "the declaration," and the defendants—at least two of them—had gone up as a deputation and, on behalf of the workmen generally, had threatened to strike unless their obnoxious companions were immediately discharged. Mr. Corrie held these proceedings to be illegal, and, after delivering an elaborate judgment, sentenced two of the defendants to one month's imprisonment with hard labour. Notice of appeal was given in both cases, and the defendants were liberated on bail.

Royal Caledonian Asylum.—The customary festival of the friends of this institution was held last Saturday at the Freemasons' Hall—Sir R. Murchison in the chair. After dinner, the usual loyal and patriotic toasts having been disposed of, the children of the asylum, sixty-six boys and forty-three girls, "all plaided and plumed in their tartan array," marched round the hall, and by their robust, healthy appearance bore favourable testimony to the substantial comforts of their home. Of the whole number sixty-one are the children of soldiers who have died or been disabled in the country's service, and of these thirty-seven are the orphans of brave men who fell in the Crimea. The secretary announced that subscriptions had been received to the amount of £1350.

Merchant Taylors' Company.—The annual dinner of this company came off on Monday at their hall in Threadneedle-street, under the presidency of Lord Stanley. During the morning there was an examination of scholars, with the following results:—Hebrew medal—Mr. Lewin; Gilpin prize, for best conduct—Mr. Baker; Latin verse—Mr. Trail; General Latin—Mr. Baker; General Greek—Mr. Baker; History—Mr. Beale; Chief mathematical—Mr. Lewin; Chief French—Mr. Kitson; Head Master's Hebrew prize—Mr. Denne. A number of smaller prizes in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, mathematics, writing, arithmetic, writing from dictation, and French, were distributed among the younger pupils. Mr. Chatteris, master of the company, the wardens, and a large assemblage of visitors attended, as usual, to witness the distribution, which was made by the Rev. Dr. Hessey, Head Master. Among the guests at the banquet were the President and Senior Fellows of St. John's College Oxford; the Marquis of Salisbury, K.G., hon. member of the company; Lord Chelmsford, hon. member of the company; General Sir George Pollock, hon. member of the company; Duke of Manchester, Marquis of Bath, Marquis of Exeter, K.G.; Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot, C.B.; Earl of Sandwich, Earl of Cardigan, K.C.B.

The Great Jewel Robbery.—At the sittings of the Central Criminal Court, on Monday, the prisoners Emily Lawrence, twenty-one, a very good-looking and well-dressed young woman, stated in the calendar to be married, and James Pearce, twenty-eight, described as a lapidary, were tried for the great jewel robbery. The sufferers, it will be remembered, were Mr. Emmanuel, of Hanover-square, from whom a locket of the value of £1600 was stolen; and Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, of Bond-street, who were plundered of four bracelets of the value of £600. The last case was proceeded with first; and, as the evidence with regard to the woman's identity was not sufficiently clear, she was acquitted, while the male prisoner was found guilty of receiving the property knowing it to be stolen. In the other case both prisoners were found guilty, and the counsel for the prosecution then stated that there was reason to believe they had stolen property to the value of £10,000 from a jeweller's shop in Paris. The male prisoner was sentenced to ten and his female confederate to four years' penal servitude. She was removed from the bar shrieking out that she was guilty, and "dear James" innocent.

Swinfen v. Lord Chelmsford.—In the Court of Exchequer, on Saturday last, Lord Chief Baron Pollock delivered judgment on the application of Mrs. Swinfen for a new trial against Lord Chelmsford. It will be remembered that Lord Chelmsford, then Sir F. Thesiger, was employed as counsel for Mrs. Swinfen in a case involving property to a large amount. In the course of the trial Sir Frederic agreed to a compromise without, it was stated, obtaining her consent. This proceeding, she alleged, entailed upon her considerable expense (from the circumstance that she afterwards brought a second action, in which the compromise was set aside, and she obtained a verdict); and she, therefore, brought an action against the learned counsel. The jury, however, returned a verdict for the defendant; and on Saturday the Court of Exchequer refused an application for a new trial, the Lord Chief Baron stating that in his opinion a barrister, "if he acted with perfect good faith, and as he believed for the best interest of his client, was not responsible for any error of judgment or mistake whatever." Mr. Kennedy, Mrs. Swinfen's indefatigable counsel, applied for leave to appeal, which was granted.

The Proposed Removal of Westminster School.—The adjourned meeting of Old Westminsters to consider this subject was held on Wednesday at the Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster Abbey. The attendance was, however, so numerous that the meeting was at once adjourned to the schoolroom, where the chair was taken by the Dean of Westminster. Among those present were the Archbishop of York, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Marquis of Westminster, Earl Amherst, the Earl of Mayo, the Earl of Albemarle, the Earl of Stradbroke, Lord Llanover, Lord Broughton, Lord Ebury, Lord John Russell, Lord Charles Russell, the Rev. Lord John Thynne (Sub-Dean), the Dean of Christ Church, the Master of Trinity, Sir David Dundas, Sir Walter Stirling, Dr. Cureton, the Bishop of Moray and Ross, and many other personages of distinction. The Dean of Westminster, having repeated the assurance given on the former occasion that the Dean and Chapter, without in the least abdicating their responsibility as guardians of the school, were desirous to express no conclusion of their own on the subject, but solely to elicit a final utterance of opinion on the subject from Old Westminsters, called on the Archbishop designate of York to open the discussion, who, in a speech of great taste and feeling, acknowledging the benefits which he had derived from Westminster, strongly advocated the removal of the school as the only means of restoring it to its pristine vigour. The Archbishop was followed by Sir George Rose, who, in a speech full of classical allusions, deprecated the removal as likely to violate the religio loci. A very long and animated discussion followed, in which Dr. Willson declared that the site of the school was pre-eminently healthy, and that the neighbourhood in this respect had much improved of late years. The Marquis of Lansdowne, though inclining to removal, thought that further information and inquiry was necessary, in order that no step might be taken in the dark. The Marquis of Westminster was against removal; Lord John Russell was for removal, but thought a committee of Old Westminsters should be appointed to consider and report on the subject. Lords Stradbroke and Llanover and Lord Charles Russell followed decidedly for removal, while Sir David Dundas and Sir Walter Stirling were warmly against it. Dr. Cureton, as one of the Canons and as Rector of St. Margaret's, thought that the school could not be removed without injury to the vested rights of the city, created by the statutes of the Royal foundress. Lord Ebury, without venturing to repeat the proposal which was so distasteful to the former meeting, produced statistics which, apparently to his satisfaction, proved his point. The result of the whole discussion was, that an influential committee of Old Westminsters was formed to consider on the best means of improving the school on its present site, and, if that should be found impracticable, to report on the feasibility of its removal. The meeting, which lasted nearly four hours, was concluded with a hearty vote of thanks to the Dean of Westminster for his ability and courtesy in the chair.

COUNTRY NEWS.

At a meeting of the York City Council, held on Tuesday, it was unanimously resolved to memorialise the Secretary of State against the proposed removal of the assizes from that city; and a deputation was appointed to present the memorial.

Mr. Herrick's tenants Monmouthshire have evinced the cordial understanding subsisting between their worthy landlord, his respected sister, and themselves in the presentation of two handsomely-designed and beautifully-wrought pieces of plate.

On Monday William Charles Driver, a clerk employed in the bank of Messrs. Gurneys and Birkbeck, of Norwich, was committed for trial for embezzling two sums of £175 and £200.

Eight churches have just withdrawn from the Lancashire and Cheshire Association of Baptist Churches, partly on the ground of the progress of open communion and partly because the association refused to condemn a discourse by one of the ministers which weakened the doctrine of the Atonement.

The Irish Kidnapping Case.—The Dublin Court of Queen's Bench gave judgment on Tuesday in the case of Miss Aylward, declaring unanimously that she had not purged herself from the contempt of Court, and impounding the document in the matter, with a view of affording ground for ulterior proceedings under the Act making child-stealing felony. Miss Aylward has been bound over in heavy recognisances to appear when the Court is prepared to pass sentence.

British Association for the Advancement of Science.—The thirtieth annual meeting of this association is fixed to take place at Oxford, on Wednesday, the 27th inst., and following days, under the presidency of Lord Wrottesley and the Earl of Derby, the Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford (Dr. Jeune), the Duke of Marlborough, the Earl of Rosse, the Bishop of Oxford, the Dean of Christchurch (Dr. Liddell), Dr. Daubeny, Dr. Acland, and Professor Donkin, as Vice-Presidents.

Fatal Accident through Playing with Firearms.—At Chatham, yesterday week, a loaded gun was deposited in a room where a number of lads were in the habit of assembling at the close of the day. One of them, named Matthews, took it up and pointed it in a playful way to Henry Emery, at the same time saying that he would shoot him. The unfortunate deceased said, "Shoot away!" when Matthews, who was unaware that the gun was loaded, immediately discharged it, the contents entering the face of deceased, who dropped insensible to the ground, and died without uttering a word.

An Impudent Thief walked into the Castle Hotel, Windsor, early on the morning of Wednesday week, and proceeded up the principal staircase to the bedroom of Sir John Thorold, and stole from the dressing-table a gold watch and chain, several valuable rings and pins, nine sovereigns, and some silver, with which he got clear off. Sir John was awake at the time, but thought it was his valet who had entered the room. The rogue quietly left it, and, coolly following the ostler, who at the time was going down stairs, made his escape.

Alleged Roman Catholic Proselytism.—An extraordinary case was partially investigated before the Norwich magistrates on Monday. The prosecutor is Mr. Vansittart, M.P. for Windsor, whose son, a lad of sixteen, is stated to have been decoyed away from school for proselytising purposes. The Rev. Canon Dalton, a Roman Catholic clergyman, stationed at Norwich, and three Norwich tradesmen, were summoned before the Bench in connection with the case, and a warrant has been issued for the apprehension of a second priest, named Giugini, who appears to have played the leading part in the proceedings complained of.

An Original Portrait of Garibaldi.—There is now on view at Messrs. Agnew and Sons' Repository, Exchange-street, Manchester, a portrait of General Garibaldi, whom we may now, we hope, safely style the Liberator of Sicily. The portrait was painted by Signor Alessandro Ossani, a friend of the gallant General; and there is shown a letter from the artist to a well-known English portraitist attesting that the work was done from the life, and that friends generally considered the likeness a very good one. It is evident that there has been no flattery on the part of the painter, and that he knew his sitter sufficiently well to impart to his canvas the expression of the character of the great man whose career now fills Europe with astonishment and millions of men with hope. The high broad forehead, replete with evidences of the most studious thoughtfulness; the firm lines of the nose; the calm, quiet, but very penetrating eyes; the decisive character of the mouth, all combine to depict one whom we can believe capable of the undying patriotism and love of liberty, the sudden and masterly military tactics, and the personal heroic courage which Garibaldi so pre-eminently possesses. The General is painted with his thick beard, of a reddish-brown tint, cut somewhat short; and he wears a green uniform—probably that of his Sardinian rank—with a tri-coloured scarf. The portrait is to be engraved in the same style and of the same size as that of the "great Duke," from Sir T. Lawrence's work; and the original cannot remain in Manchester more than a week or ten days, as it must soon be again in London. There is an additional inducement for all admirers of Garibaldi to see the portrait and subscribe here for the engraving, as Messrs. Agnew propose to give to the Sicilian Aid Fund any sum which may accrue to them in connection with the subscription list.—Manchester Guardian. [We have much pleasure in stating that, by permission of Messrs. N. Graves and Co., the owners of the copyright, we shall be enabled to produce an Engraving of this important and interesting portrait in our columns at an early date.]

Neapolitan Atrocities in Sicily.—The Rev. G. W. Bridges, Incumbent of Blanchly, Gloucestershire, confirms, from personal observation, some statements which have already appeared respecting the atrocities committed by the police of Palermo in 1848, when the Sicilians made their last unsuccessful attempt to free themselves from the tyranny of the Bourbons. Mr. Bridges says:—"On the morning of the 17th of February in that year I was among the foremost, and the only Englishman present, when the rush was made into the disclosed region of death which you refer to. The facts were these:—About forty of the sbirri had been captured by the revolutionists, treated by them with kindness, and placed in security until they could be sent to Naples—a friendly precaution to prevent their being murdered by the indignant mob, which then broke into the police palace, and cast the books and furniture from the windows. A portion of the spacious building appeared, however, to be inaccessible; windows and loopholes there were in it, but no opening to one entire wing of the dark prison-house. Presently, on removing one of the huge bookcases, some fresh-plastered wall appeared concealed behind it; a passage was quickly broken through it, and the senses were almost overpowered by the steaming effluvia which issued from seven dark chambers communicating with each other, where, upon clearing the loopholes, a secreted scene of horror was before us, such as wants the best testimony to be believed. There lay human bodies, and the mutilated remains of such, in every state of death and decay; bundles of rotting rags mingled with bones, and limbs, and filth filled the corners of the smaller rooms; chains hung riveted to the walls above, whence some of the remains had dropped as they died—some still holding in their iron grasp the arms or ankles of their famished victims. Skeletons, almost fleshless, were piled upon others which were quite so, and placed on stone shelves which had served as their beds while living; naked bodies, black and pulpy, were hidden beneath others more recently dead, yet alive with maggots; and, greater horror still, two human bodies in writhing attitudes were hanging crucified upon the wall of the largest chamber, the reeking, bloodstained stones of which held rusty spikes corresponding to the outstretched hands and feet of others which had been so suspended, and still retaining the stringy remains of muscles torn to shreds, from which the heavier portions had dropped and lay in heaps of putridity beneath. Shrieks of indignant horror arose from the infuriated crowd, a portion of which rushed back to the prison where the captured sbirri were secured, brought them out, and shot them on the instant. Others remained, raking and searching among the bones and bodies, examining minutely the putrid remnants of those they fancied might have been their fathers, brothers, or kindred, who had long been missing, but whose fate they knew not. One of the sbirri, whose life I tried in vain to save, endeavoured to persuade me that the suspended bodies were not crucified while alive, but nailed there to augment the tortures of the living prisoners. Further details I could give, from my intimacy with Sicily and its people during those stirring times; this, indeed, was a scene never to be forgotten—enough to sicken the thought that dwells on it, and to attest, were it needed, the usual and very accurate truthfulness of your assertions."

The National Defences Commission.—The Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the present state of the fortifications of the United Kingdom issued their report on Wednesday. The Commissioners fully recognise the value and importance of an efficient Channel fleet; but urge that steam and other causes have led to a state of things which renders it most perilous and unsafe to rely wholly upon our ships of war for protection against an invading foe. They recommend the construction of new or extended fortifications at such "vital" points as Portsmouth, Plymouth, Sheerness, Portland, Chatham, Woolwich, Dover, and Cork—the total estimated cost of their scheme amounting to £11,850,000, the payment of which might be spread over a period of four years. The Commissioners are firmly convinced that the adoption of their report "will place the power of this country for self-defence on a par with its other elements of greatness and strength; will give security to its industry and commerce, afford a guarantee to the maintenance of peace, and add a new glory to her Majesty's reign."

Two families were poisoned last week at Exeter from eating fish and meat in which putrefaction had commenced, and which had been given them by a neighbour. One of the victims, a man named Hookway, has died from the effects of the poison.

LITERATURE.

THE PLAYS OF SHAKESPEARE. Edited by HOWARD STAUNTON. The Illustrations by JOHN GILBERT; engraved by the Brothers DALZIEL. Three vols. Routledge, Warne, and Routledge.

THE editors and commentators who have written upon Shakespeare's plays are far too numerous to be named, but may be divided into three great classes, which will include the majority of readers and students too. These are the philosophical or esthetic, as represented by Coleridge, Goethe, Schlegel, Dr. Quincy Magoin, and others; the verbal critics, like Theobald, Hanmer, Capell, Dyce, and the illustrators, as represented by Johnson, Steevens, like Steevens, Malone, and Halliwell. Many other names will occur to every reader which belong to each of the two latter, and many to all three classes; and nearly every editor and commentator has done something or other in one of these departments for the illustration or perfecting of Shakespeare's text. Frequently, indeed, the philosophical and esthetic critics are most generally esteemed, and their broad and general views are most frequently quoted. Patient editors, careful collators, and verbal critics, are too commonly despised, and the value of their services is not generally well known. Excepting in the case of old classic authors of whose works no authentic manuscripts exist, and whose writings have suffered from all the vicissitudes of ages of neglect, no author, however, more greatly needs the labours of the verbal critic than Shakespeare himself. The literary history of his writings is obscure; the text is uncertain, conflicting, and corrupt; and in many respects his works must be treated rather as those of an ancient classic than those of a poet living in modern times, when the art of printing had long been known and used for the preservation and multiplication of books. The qualifications indispensable in an editor of Shakespeare's works are of the highest kind, and are very rarely combined in one individual. He should be an old and well-read student, a good philologist, an accomplished antiquarian, a reader of all the Elizabethan literature, a patient and careful collator. He must be well acquainted with all his predecessors' labours, and must be generally conservative, but an innovator where changes are required. His researches must be endless, his industry untiring, and he must be content to endure to a few brief notes the results of many years of minute and elaborate research. He must have, too, something of the spirit of a martyr, and must be prepared to find his best readings disputed, his labours disparaged, and his taste and judgment constantly impugned.

The three massive volumes now before us contain nearly three thousand double-column pages of neat close printing, and are profusely illustrated with woodcuts designed by Mr. Gilbert and engraved by the Brothers Dalziel. As the issue has been spread over a period of more than three years, and the work has found its way all through Great Britain and the United States, its form and style must be familiar to many every eye. Its illustrations are excellent, but for educational purposes should have been relieved by others in which points of archæological interest might have been readily explained. The paper, printing, and general effect of the volumes fully redeem the promise of the first part published, and the work will, doubtless, have a large sale in its completed form.

The editor, Mr. Howard Staunton, has embodied in the brief notes and annotations in these volumes the results of the very extensive reading of many years. He has not only minutely studied the plays of Shakespeare, but, with the best of all commentaries, made them illustrate themselves, but he has read and noted very carefully the general and dramatic literature of the poet's days, drawing from these sources many excellent illustrative remarks. If we have to attempt to indicate the general principles on which Mr. Staunton has acted we should say that he rightly adheres to the old readings whenever they can be illustrated by a parallel passage from another play, by a similar phrase in a contemporary author, by an instance of a misprint or of a word, by a reinvolution of phrase, by a change in the punctuation, or by the transposition of neighbouring words or lines. This leading principle may seem not new, but, although it has been nominally recognised by previous editors, it has been only partially applied; and some examples we shall give will show that it ought to be adhered to in new cases where it has apparently failed. Take a case of the retention of an old reading by an illustration from Shakespeare and some of his contemporaries in "Measure for Measure" (v. 1):—"Hark how the villain would close now after his treasonable abuses!" Most other editors—Mr. Collier among them—altered to "close" but, adds Mr. Staunton, "most improperly; for close, and not close, is the genuine word." And, in proof of this, he cites "Julius Cæsar" (iii. 1):—

> It would become me better than to close
> In terms of friendship with thine enemies;

and, also, "Titus Andronicus" (v. 2):—

> This closing with him fits his lunacy;

and, again, Webster's Works (Dyce, p. 281):—

> I will close with this country peasant very lovingly;

and in Warner's "Albion's England":—

> Thus cunningly she closed with him, and he conceives her thought.

As an example of emendations made by an alteration of the prefix, or by the reflection of a word, we have in "Richard II." (i. 3):—

> It boots thee not to be compassionate.
> After our sentence pleasing comes too late;

Mr. Staunton remarking that, this being the only instance of "compassionate" being used as "lamenting," he would propose to read "o passionate"; but he very acutely suggests that a very common typographical blunder may have been made, and that we should read, "It boots thee not to become passionate," for which a phrase in "Titus Andronicus" (ii. 2.) affords some authority. Another example of this kind of emendation is proposed in "Taming of the Shrew" (v. 2), where the original reads:—

> Well, I say, no: and therefore, sir, assurance,
> Let's each one send unto his wife;

and Mr. Staunton proposes:—

> Well, I say no; and therefore, sir, as surance, do; that is, for proof.

Many changes might be given of the improvements effected by slight changes in punctuation—a matter wholly neglected by the earlier editors, and very imperfectly attended to in modern days, except by Mr. Dyce. A few examples will suffice for this class—one in "The Winter's Tale" (iv., Chorus), where Mr. Staunton inserts a comma and a dash, and reads "Leontes leaving,—the effects of his fond jealousies so grieving," &c., i.e., "let us leave Leontes, who, so moved by the effects of his foolish jealousy, excludes himself." Instead of the stupid reading which makes "Leontes leaving the effects of his fond jealousy" (i.e., "departing"), Mr. Dyce, p. 1), "The point,—unvenomed too," is a vast improvement on the prosaic "The point envenomed, too!" of the common readings. In "Henry IV.," Part II. (iii. 2), a slight but admirable change makes "that Holspur-Mars in swathing clothes" into "that Hotspur, Mars in swathing clothes." Passing the examples of the transposition of words, we come to the new readings.

The new readings suggested by Mr. Staunton are very remarkable, not only for their simple changes, but for the great clearness they impart to many passages which have been hitherto obscure. Some of these are already approved and adopted by competent critics, and every ordinary reader of the plays will thank the proposer for his happy emendations.

We will give a few in parallel columns for facility of comparison, leaving, for the present at least, many of the minor changes unnoticed.

Each of these emendations is illustrated and supported by notes, which we need not quote. Every student will refer to the volumes and read it all, and the general reader will see from the examples cited how satisfactory these changes are in elucidating passages previously obscure, and in the third example especially how perspicuous and forcible.

Besides these positive emendations or substitutions of words, Mr. Staunton has made singularly successful in explaining difficult passages, and illustrating phrases now wholly obsolete, or the meanings of which have entirely changed. One of the most remarkable instances occurs in "Timon of Athens" (vol. ii.), where this short drama has puzzled critic and commentator, and has been the subject of some of the most extraordinary disquisitions which even Shakespearean literature has known. The soldier seeking Timon wishes and exclaims:—

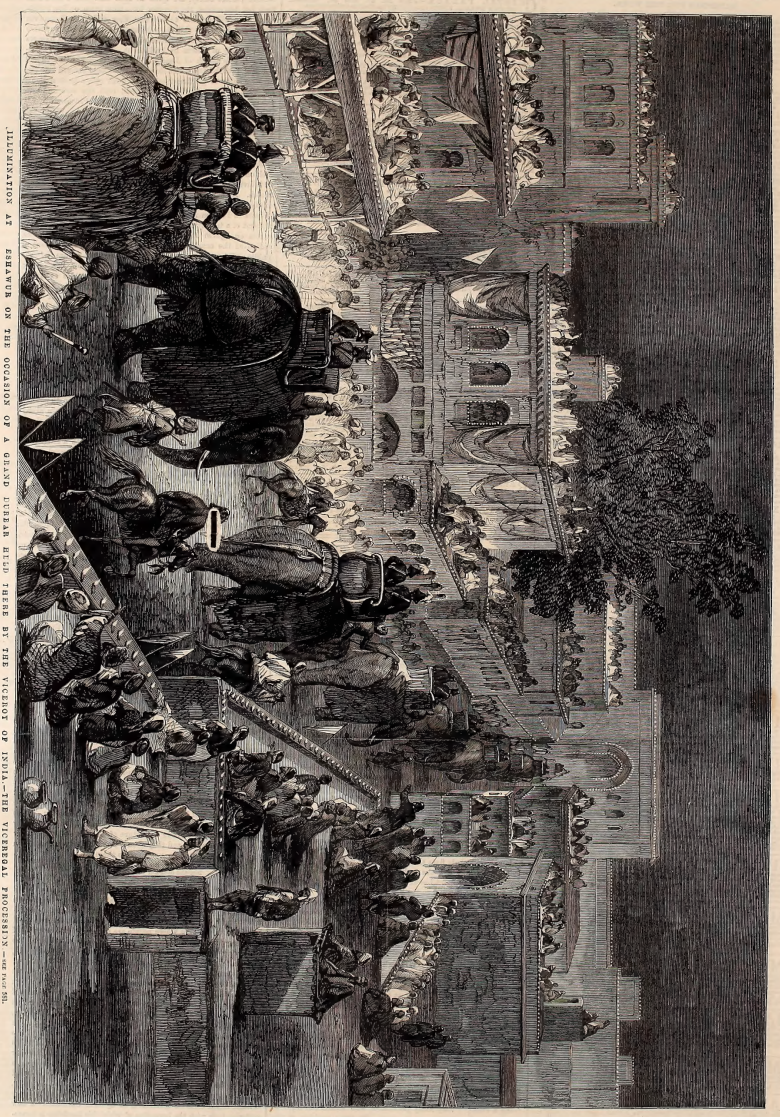
Dead, sure, and this his grave.	Dead, sure, and this his grave: what's
What's on this tomb	on this tomb
I cannot read.	I cannot read.



The third and fourth lines are invariably continued as part of the soldier's speech, although such a reading renders hopeless nonsense of the passage; and not only makes the soldier speak of Timon in misanthropical as Timon himself! The simple suggestion, that they are an inscription that the soldier reads first, and by which he is directed to the epitaph which he "cannot read," seems to us to throw a marvellous light on this much-disputed passage, and to keep it in perfect harmony with the character of Timon and the other incidents of the scene. Again, in "The Winter's Tale" (ii. 1) there is in the speech of Antigonus the famous phrase, "I'll keep my stables where I lodge my wife," upon which endless comments have been wasted without success. Our new editor felicitously remarks that an odd and not uncommon sense of "keep" is to "guard or fasten," and thus explains, we think most perfectly, the reference of the speaker. In "Macbeth," too (iv. 3), "convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty" is proved to need no change, as the word "convey" is used to mean "to manage anything by stealth" in the original "History of 'Maldeth" and in other contemporary works. In the same place he offers an explanation of the well-known passage ending "and catch with his surcease, success," and remarks that the word "success" is evidently employed in the sense of sequel or what follows," and not to mean "prosperity," as generally understood. In some instances Mr. Staunton has been fortunate not only to revive but apparently to discover the meanings of words which previous editors had entirely missed. A few examples may be given, as in "Measure for Measure" (iii. 1), where the odd word "esmose" is explained to be a technical term in falconry, meaning "to paralyse or disable," before the final swoop. In "Henry V." (iii. 6) the curious compound "mock-duchan" is explained by a reference to the phrase a "shotten herring" to be singularly applicable to England, as a country "shotten herring" is not an isle merely "shooting out into nooks and capes." In "Twelfth Night" (iv. 2) he has a clear meaning given to the phrase "I am for all waters" (I can play all characters), was a tavern phrase waiters being a kind of cant name for much stronger drinks. The obscure phrase "carded his state" in "Henry IV." (ii. 4) is also explained by passages from Greene and from Haklayt, where it means to "mix or confound, and sometimes applied, also, to the 'mixture' or 'throw away,'" as Warburton supposed. Similar examples of this very valuable kind the editor has given in abundance, and the difficult words he has encountered, and with what success he has explained and illustrated them, might be given; but we have quoted enough for our purpose, and the reader will find many more as he studies the edition.

Not only have the plays been thoroughly examined, their phrases explained, their allusions traced, and their rhythm corrected, but the singular care has been bestowed on the action of the characters and the arrangement of the scenes. A very extensive knowledge of stage-work, not only in our own but in earlier days, has enabled the editor to perform this part of his work with remarkable success. In "Hamlet," especially, his minute editing appears of great advantage, and is well worth a note or two. In the reading scene (ii. 2) between Hamlet and Polonius the latter makes Hamlet read from his book the words "For if the sun breed maggots in a dead dog, being a god, kissing carrion"—and then, observing Polonius still closing his eyes, turn round and exclaim, "Have you a daughter?"—an innovation which ought to secure general approval. Again, in the play scene, we find the names of Gonzago and Baptista given, instead of the common Duke and Duchess of Vienna, and identified by the "Enter Lucianus" (nephew to the King) in the same play scene. Again, in the closet scene, the stage direction "To Hamlet, dragging out the body of Polonius," affords the editor an opportunity for a very valuable note on the stage customs of Shakespeare's day. He notices that the early quarto reads, "Exit Hamlet with the dead body," and that folio "dragging in Polonius." And Mr. Staunton suggests that the exigencies of the Elizabethan theatres required that the actor should do what is now done by one of the "supers" of the stage. He gives nearly twenty extracts from Shakespeare's plays alone, in which expressions are introduced evidently for the purpose of clearing the stage for the next business to come on. The list is too long for our purpose, but it will interest many readers, and is an instance of the attention given to matters necessary to the right illustrations of Shakespeare's dramas by the stage customs of his time.

A very important and valuable feature of these volumes will be found in the numerous illustrations of the various passages in the text borrowed from other parts of Shakespeare's own works, and those of his contemporaries. Some of these we have already mentioned, but many more might be given showing the extensive use of this class of notes. Most of this heavy task has been performed. For example, the phrase "Thou'rt damned as black," in "King John" (iv. 3), is noted as an allusion in addition to the "damned as coals," whose "faces were blacked," as recorded in the accounts of the old Coventry plays. Many brief phrases such as "cheese ale," to "ear the land," to "take out," and hundreds of others are very carefully explained, and several of them for the first time made to have some clear meaning for the contemporary words of modern customs. These various notes are necessarily brief. Most of them are foot-notes, and would scarcely be noticed except by the very careful reader; but very many will be found of great value, although so brief in form. In some few cases Mr. Staunton has been tempted to a passing note on the glories of the play before him; but in nearly every case his remarks and notes seem to have been compressed in the very most possible words and the smallest possible space. Wherever the subject has seemed to him to require any remark he has given a few telling words, as in the great scene in "The Winter's Tale" (v. 3) in which the accompaniments of the Queen of Parkins folio have restored to manufacture and insert a whole new line. Lewter standing before the statue of Hermione, and in the warmth of his passion and despair endowing it almost with life, exclaims, "Do not shake, O, thou last kind workman! for which the prosaic Perkins adds, "I am but dead, stone looking upon stone!" In his admirable note upon this tasteless interpolation, which we highly approved, Mr. Staunton indignantly asks if "it was that Shakespeare wrought it" and most ably and soundly answers it. We had the new line in a very large portion of the marvellous beauty of the scene, but that the very phrase, "Would I were dead, but that methinks already!" both by the spoorphal antonator, and by Mr. Collier himself. In this and many other cases we might quote Mr. Staunton has risen above the misconceptions of the mere verbal critic, and shown not only his high appreciation of the true scope and grandeur of Shakespeare's immortal drama, but the matured judgment of the cultivated taste with which he has edited these noble plays.

In his prefaces, as in his various notes, the editor has had to consider the claims of Francis Bacon to a voice in the settlement of the text of Shakespeare. He had long been convinced by the latest evidence alone that the pseudo-ancient cryptograms in the margins of this famous folio discovered by Mr. Collier were critically worthless, but he has given the whole matter full consideration by the general body of readers unless their worthlessness could be distinctly proved. Conjectural critics, however, ought to be warned by us once, Mr. Staunton, together with Dr. Ingleby, appears to have asked the question of the folio in relation to the wording of the notes, and when, after much trouble and delay, the folio was placed in Sir Frederic's hands, he soon came to the conclusion that the pseudo-ancient annotations were modern forgeries. This opinion has been confirmed by the further and more minute examination of Mr. Staunton's powerful lens, and all similar counter-evidence has yet been produced. The question is a most important one, and not merely the age and nature of notes and emendations to the text of Shakespeare's plays, but the genuineness of many of the documents relating to the poet's life, contributed to aid the story of his private and professional life. A glossarial index—evidently a work of heavy labour—gives the list of obsolete words, and the meanings given to them in which they appear; and, as explanations are given of the words in addition to the mere definitions, the book becomes, to some, the value of this index is greatly enhanced.

Our notice of these volumes is necessarily far too short to convey any idea of the literary labour involved in their production. Years of study and research have been condensed into the brief notes which illustrate them, and the general results presented to the reader have been expended in preparing such a work for the press. As the work is lavishly pictorial, and the woodcut illustrations are doubtless the chief charm to many purchasers, we fear that Mr. Staunton will scarcely receive the honour and the praise which are justly due to him for his share in so large and laborious a work. The studious reader will find on every page traces of the conscientious care with which his task has been performed, in the minute and careful collation of the folio with the early quarto copies of the plays. In some of these cases, and especially in a work so popular in form, much of this thankless labour might have been spared, or its results transferred to the more critical edition, which, we hope, Mr. Staunton will some day undertake.

"YACHTING."

The Supplement issued with the Number of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of June 23 will contain a Picture, printed in Colours, entitled "YACHTING," from a Drawing by Edwin Weedon; a Tinted Illustration of The Entrance to the Court of Queen's Bench, Westminster Hall, on Private Business; and the following Engravings:—Fox Warren, Cobham, Surrey, the residence of Mr. Charles Buxton, M.P.; in the Valley of the Esk, by G. Chester, in the Royal Academy Exhibition; the Peel Institution, Accrington; Queen Mary's Summer House, near Holyrood Palace, Edinburgh: and a Vase from a portion of Shakspeare's Mulberry-tree.

Country Readers will observe a fair kind this year, even though the House of Commons, was reduced to a physical calculation. Although no statute fixes the period during which the Legislature shall sit, custom and the volunteer nature of the services of members of Parliament has decreed that only a certain number of months shall be devoted to the business of legislation. The most cursory glance at the work which must absolutely be done before the prorogation of Parliament would show a positive surplus of about a clear day, which by great management might have been appropriated to the discussion of the Reform Bill in the various stages through which it would have had to pass. An unopposed and greater purpose on the part of members to meet ministerial proposition might have tended at least not to invite obstruction, it is unquestionable that the situation had become untenable at the moment when the measure was given up.

A good deal has been chuckingly said about the sense of relief which all parties and sections in Parliament must feel at the removal of that which appeared to be an incubus to all, and to many a dread. Very likely gentlemen who within the walls of the Parliament House are in much the same position as the ostrich that buries its head in the sand, and believes itself to have secured perfect safety, are quite at their ease, and believe that their fat has settled the question for a time more or less indefinite. We will venture to say that they will find themselves mistaken. No great skill in vaticination is necessary to forese that from this moment and from this act will be dated a new era in the history of reform in Parliament. The state of the atmosphere in this month of June is of itself suggestive of social and political probabilities which do not seem to have entered into the contemplation of gentlemen who have dealt with a great national question, to use a familiar illustration, with kid gloves, and with consideration than is applied to a turnpike bill. Prosperous, well-employed, busy England is essentially unpolitical. Work, the business of daily life, the few pleasures and amusements which our somewhat unmercurial, national temperament induces us to indulge in combine to win the public mind into that state which is the paradise of the professional governing classes. At no time since that which is forgotten by the People is remembered, do they look on public affairs with the same abstract interest with which, as individuals, they would regard a game of chess or a cricket match. A shudder or a grumble at a tax imposed—a momentary excitement at the chances of a party move—and a perusal of the debates in Parliament, from much the same point of view as an account of a trial trip of the Great Eastern, or a delineation of the sports on Epsom Downs—will, in the great majority of cases, suffice as the consideration which is afforded to the current of public affairs. But assume a bad harvest, failure of the hop crop, diminution to a large extent of live stock, mercantile and manufacturing depression, troubles in India, military disaster in China, and political trouble and disturbance on the Continent—the occurrence of no one of which events is a violent assumption—what then? Will not politics take that grand position in times of adversity which the events has made the Legislature a mere instrument of popular will; and will not the very first cry be that the interests of the country have been trifled with by the representatives of the people; and will not the members themselves be the first to say that which the question of Parliamentary reform has received be deeply and vengefully remembered?

Without pressing this topic further, it may be permitted us to say that, if Ministerial explanations will only suffer themselves to believe that events, and especially political events, are always in process of being reproduced, that like results must always follow from certain causes, they will not fall into the error of supposing that the question of Reform has lapsed into a Parliamentary abeyance; but each in their sphere will sedulously apply themselves to its consideration with a view to some settlement before midwinter has arrived.

THE fents of the modern Perseus, the deliverer of the Sicilian Andromeda from a fouler monster than that of Æthiopia, and the withdrawal of the Reform Bills of 1859, are the chief topics of the week, and are dealt with elsewhere. Perhaps the extraordinary weather, which, in the middle of June, alternates between deluge and hurricane, beats down grass, and sends up prices, and causes much misery to the unhappy, as ineligible place of residence, may be quoted as the third topic. In connection with the subject of the storms, we may be allowed to invite the attention of the benevolent to the fearful distress which has been caused around our eastern and southern gales, and to express a hope that the generosity of England, never wanting when there is need for its exercise, will be duly appealed to in favour of the hundreds of widows and children who have been bereaved of their hardy, hard-working providers by disasters occasioned solely by the tempests. Surely the formation of a Relief Committee, the selection of a few intelligent agents, and the advertisement of the fact thereof to succour the unfortunate creatures who have been thus cruelly visited, ought not to be neglected. The claim of fishermen's hand is still for ever; let us now throw our nets for the sake of the helpless ones he has left.

It is announced that the Archbishopric of Canterbury will be vacant by the death of Lord Stratford is to be conferred upon the man who deserves it better than any one else in the world. It is not to be given to one of the Royal family, though there are three members of that household by whom precedent would sanction its being taken; nor is it to be less paternally selected by a carpet soldier. The appointment is reserved for the glorious veteran who has been serving England all his long life, and whose age has been crowned by the saving of India. We need not name Lord Clyde; and it is equally unnecessary to add that the confirmation of the announcement will be received with universal acclamation. These Colonelcies are not, as is sometimes supposed, mere military appointments: they are in the nature of honourable pensions for long military service, and they should be exclusively kept for men who can show that claim, not given to those

Who never smelt a squadron in the field,
Nor the direction of a battle took
But from a spinster.

A curious agitation has arisen in connection with the proposed requirement of the new Census Bill, that every person shall state whether he is of any and what religious profession. Inasmuch as it is thought that the Church of England will obtain the numerical benefit of the returns when compared with those of the adult of troubling themselves about the outward forms of religion, the Dissenting bodies protest against the demand of statistics which, they contend, will not represent their real strength. More exalted grounds are taken by some of the opponents of the inquiry, but there is no particular wisdom in using a razor to cut what an axe can deal with. Several anti-census meetings have been held on the subject; and, on the other hand, Lord Palmerston has been attended by a deputation, of which Mr. Disraeli, Mr. Hope, and other Conservative gentlemen, were members, and has been assured of support from that side of the House if he will adhere to the present proposals. This the Premier has declared it to be his intention to do. At one of the anti-census meetings a speaker broke in upon the solemn oratory by declaring that, if a lady were not ashamed to tell her age, a gentleman ought not to be ashamed of telling his creed; and Lord Palmerston avowed a similar view, and thought that those who did not wish to be particularly definite might describe themselves as General Christians—a new sectarian title with the invention of which his Lordship is henceforth to be credited.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 16, 1860.

No one is inclined to deny that the Ministry had no alternative left them than to withdraw the Reform Bill. Most persons, too will be ready to admit that the responsibility of the step, which is probably very much underrated, does not rest with them. The Government was compelled to accept a bad kind this year, even though the House of Commons, was reduced to a physical calculation. Although no statute fixes the period during which the Legislature shall sit, custom and the volunteer nature of the services of members of Parliament has decreed that only a certain number of months shall be devoted to the business of legislation. The most cursory glance at the work which must absolutely be done before the prorogation of Parliament would show a positive surplus of about a clear day, which by great management might have been appropriated to the discussion of the Reform Bill in the various stages through which it would have had to pass. An unopposed and greater purpose on the part of members to meet ministerial proposition might have tended at least not to invite obstruction, it is unquestionable that the situation had become untenable at the moment when the measure was given up.

A good deal has been chuckingly said about the sense of relief which all parties and sections in Parliament must feel at the removal of that which appeared to be an incubus to all, and to many a dread. Very likely gentlemen who within the walls of the Parliament House are in much the same position as the ostrich that buries its head in the sand, and believes itself to have secured perfect safety, are quite at their ease, and believe that their fat has settled the question for a time more or less indefinite. We will venture to say that they will find themselves mistaken. But assume a bad harvest, failure of the hop crop, diminution to a large extent of live stock, mercantile and manufacturing depression, troubles in India, military disaster in China, and political trouble and disturbance on the Continent—the occurrence of no one of which events is a violent assumption—what then? Will not politics take that grand position in times of adversity which the events has made the Legislature a mere instrument of popular will; and will not the very first cry be that the interests of the country have been trifled with by the representatives of the people; and will not the members themselves be the first to say that which the question of Parliamentary reform has received be deeply and vengefully remembered?

Without pressing this topic further, it may be permitted us to say that, if Ministerial explanations will only suffer themselves to believe that events, and especially political events, are always in process of being reproduced, that like results must always follow from certain causes, they will not fall into the error of supposing that the question of Reform has lapsed into a Parliamentary abeyance; but each in their sphere will sedulously apply themselves to its consideration with a view to some settlement before midwinter has arrived.

THE fents of the modern Perseus, the deliverer of the Sicilian Andromeda from a fouler monster than that of Æthiopia, and the withdrawal of the Reform Bills of 1859, are the chief topics of the week, and are dealt with elsewhere. Perhaps the extraordinary weather, which, in the middle of June, alternates between deluge and hurricane, beats down grass, and sends up prices, and causes much misery to the unhappy, as ineligible place of residence, may be quoted as the third topic. In connection with the subject of the storms, we may be allowed to invite the attention of the benevolent to the fearful distress which has been caused around our eastern and southern gales, and to express a hope that the generosity of England, never wanting when there is need for its exercise, will be duly appealed to in favour of the hundreds of widows and children who have been bereaved of their hardy, hard-working providers by disasters occasioned solely by the tempests. Surely the formation of a Relief Committee, the selection of a few intelligent agents, and the advertisement of the fact thereof to succour the unfortunate creatures who have been thus cruelly visited, ought not to be neglected. The claim of fishermen's hand is still for ever; let us now throw our nets for the sake of the helpless ones he has left.

It is announced that the Archbishopric of Canterbury will be vacant by the death of Lord Stratford is to be conferred upon the man who deserves it better than any one else in the world. It is not to be given to one of the Royal family, though there are three members of that household by whom precedent would sanction its being taken; nor is it to be less paternally selected by a carpet soldier. The appointment is reserved for the glorious veteran who has been serving England all his long life, and whose age has been crowned by the saving of India. We need not name Lord Clyde; and it is equally unnecessary to add that the confirmation of the announcement will be received with universal acclamation. These Colonelcies are not, as is sometimes supposed, mere military appointments: they are in the nature of honourable pensions for long military service, and they should be exclusively kept for men who can show that claim, not given to those

Who never smelt a squadron in the field,
But from a spinster.

A curious agitation has arisen in connection with the proposed requirement of the new Census Bill, that every person shall state whether he is of any and what religious profession. Inasmuch as it is thought that the Church of England will obtain the numerical benefit of the returns when compared with those of the adult of troubling themselves about the outward forms of religion, the Dissenting bodies protest against the demand of statistics which, they contend, will not represent their real strength. More exalted grounds are taken by some of the opponents of the inquiry, but there is no particular wisdom in using a razor to cut what an axe can deal with. Several anti-census meetings have been held on the subject; and, on the other hand, Lord Palmerston has been attended by a deputation, of which Mr. Disraeli, Mr. Hope, and other Conservative gentlemen, were members, and has been assured of support from that side of the House if he will adhere to the present proposals. This the Premier has declared it to be his intention to do. At one of the anti-census meetings a speaker broke in upon the solemn oratory by declaring that, if a lady were not ashamed to tell her age, a gentleman ought not to be ashamed of telling his creed; and Lord Palmerston avowed a similar view, and thought that those who did not wish to be particularly definite might describe themselves as General Christians—a new sectarian title with the invention of which his Lordship is henceforth to be credited.

We hear of a small war in New Zealand, where some of the natives, remaining unimpressed with the conviction that white men have a mission to improve them from off the face of the earth, have adopted an idea of a nationality, and refuse to sell any more land for sold to settlers. An armed resistance has been made to the last transaction of the kind, and, as it is manifestly impossible that such excessively unenlightened views can be permitted more than a limited existence in these days of Armstrong guns and electric telegraphs, the usual antagonistic argument has been paraded, in the form of soldiery, volunteers, and a naval brigade. The first seem, however, to have behaved weakly, and the second indiscreetly; but sailors, under a gallant leader—and there is no other having been left to do the work of conviction, which they achieved in the usual dashing style of our gallant blue-jackets—storming the fort of the New Zealanders and making a signal example. We presume, therefore, that the nationality notion has been thus refuted, it will be abandoned by the ancestors of Lord Macaulay's eternal sketcher on the broken arch of London-bridge, or their legis laiæ in delirio.

It may be convenient to those who have the misfortune to be afflicted with legal advisers to know that in the celebrated case of Mrs. Swinfen against Sir Frederic Thesiger (Lord Chelmsford), just adjudged in the Exchequer, the Lord Chief Baron has not only laid it down as a rule that "in no imaginable instance can an honourable barrister be made liable for any loss or mischief his ignorance, inability, or blundering may entail upon his client, but that "an advocate of the Bar, whose conduct is not brief in the usual way undertakes a duty, but does not enter into any contract or promise, expressed or implied." So that if Ascot, or a picnic, or a pleasanter case, or a heavier fee, should leave a client unrepresented when his action is called on, he has no legal hope he will not for the future be guilty of the ungentlemanlike practice of saying that he has been cheated—at the very worst the conduct of his absentee counsel is only that of a person who has accepted a fee in relation to a dull family dinner to meet his aunts, and in the evening to hear an interesting lecture on the aborigines of Patagonia, and who throws that respectable engagement over for "a rout" or M. Frezzolini's last night but one "Dinorah." The words we have had the honour to cite are those of Sir Frederic Pollock, one of the most deservedly venerable of our admirable Judges. Mrs. Swinfen has a ladylike Indisposition to be convicted, and means to bear a little more upon the subject.

ROYAL REVIEW OF THE VOLUNTEERS.

We have authority to state that her Majesty has been pleased to intimate her intention to review the volunteer corps in and about London in Hyde Park on Saturday, the 23rd inst., at four p.m. As some applications have been received from other than metropolitan corps, it is necessary to state that no metropolitan district to be permitted to attend the review at their own expense, it being decided that such applications shall be taken into consideration, with a view to the admission, as far as space and numbers will allow, of such corps as may be in an early distance from London, provided their applications are received at the War Office on or before the 16th inst., and it is immediately stated in which such corps will be informed whether it will be possible to attend the review.

Admiral W. J. Hope Johnstone has been appointed Commander-in-Chief at Sheerness.

The Channel fleet arrived in the Firth of Forth yesterday week. On the fleet's return it is rumoured that, after leaving the Firth of Forth, the fleet will cruise round the north of Scotland, and then proceed to Ireland.

Lord Clyde will succeed the late Lord Strafford in the command of the Colchester district. The new appointment takes effect on the 15th, by the appointment of Major-Generals Maunsell and Mounie, both officers of Peninsular fame.

A marine, of very bad character, named Edwin Ireson, received fifty lashes at Portsmouth yesterday week, for absenting himself from his ship. He bore the punishment without evincing the slightest sensation of pain, and after the last stroke of the cat was laid on, he coolly pulled up and put his shirt across his shoulders and marched erect to the infirmary, accompanied by an escort.

ADMIRAL EDWARD HAWKER died yesterday week at Brighton. The deceased entered the navy as midshipman in 1793, and was present at a large number of engagements. His commissions bore the dates of Lieutenant, 1 July, 1794; Commander, Aug. 22, 1805; Captain, June 6, 1884; Rear-Admiral, Sept. 30, 1846; Vice-Admiral, Nov. 21, 1851; and Admiral, Sept. 17, 1858.

The Army and Navy Gazette states that an address to the Crown will probably be moved in the House of Commons shortly against the proposed plan of the Royal Commissioners recommending the transfer of the Secretary for War announces his intention to carry out as soon as a more efficient system of inspection have been brought into operation.

The recent experiments at the Nore have settled that our present ships of the line are obsolete, and that the only proof against the power of the Whitworth and Armstrong guns. A shipbuilder of Liverpool, Mr. Cotton, has recently patented an iron-cased ship, which he calls an angulated armour-cased sided ship, which consists in the sides of the ship being cased at a considerable inclination, so that the shot will strike similar angle being made under the line of flotation. The inventor is confident that with the sides at these angles many guns could be mounted. He has constructed a large butt of the same scantling as the ship is specified to be constructed of, having angles of 45 degrees, and he has found that he will have his invention tested, their Lordships have promptly granted his request. The experiment will take place at the Nore, and the result of the experiments will take place shortly at Portsmouth.

CHANGES IN THE ARMY.—The following additional regulations, consequent on the reduction of the prices of commissions in the cavalry, have been approved by her Majesty, on the recommendation of the Army:—Horse Guards, June 12:—In cases where on sticor of the cavalry, who was in the service before the 1st of November, 1858, shall be exchanging from cavalry to full half-pay of infantry, have been entitled, under the regulations in force, to receive the difference between the cavalry commission which he then held, and infantry, according to the rates fixed by the regulations, he having qualified for such infantry half-pay, shall be allowed to receive the difference from the reserve fund. Captains of cavalry who have served two hundred days on the staff in the rank of Captain of an infantry regiment, will only be required, on purchasing a majority, to pay £1650, and not £2150, as the terms fixed by the Queen's Regulations for the retiring officer in the cavalry. Also Captains, however, who have purchased any of their previous steps under the new regulations will be required to pay the regulated price of £1400 for the majority.

PARCELLING OF LAND IN FRANCE.—The inconvenience of parcelled morcels of landed property strike the eye at once. They are most visible in the fertile districts where the possibility of cultivating a large and ample labour has availed itself most largely of the law of equal partition. Even in the richest country in all to be discovered into 120,000 distinct parcels, of which one-fifth exist in the ten departments forming the angle of the north-east frontier. Calculating the population at 36,000,000, there are three parcels and a half to each person. Apart from all the bother and misery of the system, it is found, when a landowner has the difficulty of apportioning a small farm equally on the death of the holder, his children have endeavoured to satisfy equity by allotting each other small pieces of various quality, so that no one's lot is all together, but scattered up and down, and here and there. The French now seek some remedy at the hands of their Legislature against this indefinite process of morcelling, and, in the hope of seeing how their neighbours, similarly afflicted, may contrive—not, indeed, to burn the patched coat of their country into a new garment, yet to effect some consolidation of the patches—they look eagerly for an initiative to the neighbouring States of the German Rhine, which are suffering from the same evil, and are seeking to heal it.—Dublin University Magazine.

LITERATURE AND ART.

We once saw it gravely asserted in an American literary journal that the "book" to Rocke's opera of "The Gipsy's Warning" was written by William Makepeace Thackeray. We believe that the libretto in question was the production of a namesake of the illustrious author of "Vanity Fair," but there could be certainly no more curious bibliographical collection than a catalogue of his "miscellanies," written by eminent men at some stage or another of their career. Did not Francis Bacon commence a novel and dictate a jest-book? Did not Douglas Jerrold project (with Lamia Blanchard) a grave work on natural philosophy? Was not Charles Dickens the author of the "words" to all the songs in Hullah's opera of "The Village Coquettes"? Was not Lord Lytton the author of the tragedy of "Don Carlos?" Was it not the grave William Pitt who composed in his last verse to the prison-song in Canning's burlesque of "The Rovers"—the ditty with the immortal refrain of

niversity of Gottingen?

The present Emperor of the French once published a pamphlet on the sugar question; and his uncle, the great Napoleon, latfunished a romance entitled "The Earl of Essex." The reading world is now all on the tiptoe-hankers for the publication of "Miscellaneous works" which may well be called the "oddities" of the late Lord Macaulay; and on Monday next Messrs. Longman are to give to the long-expectant public a volume containing not only biography, essays, epitaphs, and early ballads, but fragments of plays and burlesque histories of parochial squabbles. The list of contents of this curious volume seems sufficiently "miscellaneous," but we presume that some degree of discrimination in the way of suppression has been exercised. We know that the late great historian of England may have written some fervent ballpenny tracts for the Religious Tract Society, and that it was his earliest contributors to Fyraer. Stranger things have been done by renowned authors in the dawn of their fame. Men say that Tupper once wrote sermons for the Low Church party, and that even the respectable journalists and essayists acknowledges the authorship of a puff on a dealer in coal tar soap.

We spoke last week on the sale by auction of "The Meeting of the Waters," Moore's cottage, and the valuable relics now causing crowds of literary associations. Newstead Abbey has again been brought to the hammer, and Mr. Richard Ellis Millingham gave £36,000 for the mansion and estate in 1818. The Colonel is said to have laid out £200,000 in repairing and beautifying the ancient Abbey; and every body knows how Byron's friends were forced to sell it, since place when permission to visit Newstead was refused to the Countess Blessington and Count D'Orsay. Mr. Richard Ellis Millingham was the auctioneer in 1818; and the house in which the sale took place had to be brought down with him from the north. The auctioneer's house in 1860 the sale of Byron's home does not create so much excitement. Byron is dead, but Tennyson lives. "Rien est mort; vive le Roi!" No bidder would be higher than £12,000 for the estate was bought in at the reserved price of £150,000.

Mr. Alexander Munro, the well-known and early-improving sculptor, has been doing the honours of his studio during the present week to admirers of his genius, who wished to view the last work which he has executed for the Oxford Museum. Three of these noble figures—Science, Art, and Industry—form the gift of Queen Victoria. The statue of Sir Humphry Davy is presented by the Marquis of Lothian. Mr. Boulton (most gracefully and appropriately) contributes the statue of Locke, which is said to be the representative of cigarist scholarship, comes forward with a gift of the statue of Bishop Butler.

The name of the accomplished art-critic remains at that, if any doubt existed before, that of Mr. Ruskin. The well-known Mr. Dean of Carlisle contributes notices of the theatres; and in the last issue of literature, Mr. Tom Taylor, edits all the advertisements. Where all is full generosity, it may be mentioned that the publication of a photograph of a remarkably humorous leading article published at the commencement of every new number of Punch is a graceful compliment to the proprietors. "Jacob" weight Racing Fill" has been ascribed to the well-known "Jacob Omnium." Bendigo with an impromptu and his portrait is described as "who the Higgins is he?" but a passage in the leader, where the writer pathetically laments the disfavour with which livery-stable keepers look on equestrian exercise as a means of training for hire saddle-horses, seems to fix the authorship pretty closely on a well-known Mr. Yates. Mr. Punch, Mr. Punch, Mr. Punch, Mr. Punch, Mayhew, and Mr. Carus Wilson, must be reckoned, so far as numbers go, among the good sons of Anak.

Does anybody know—we have particular reasons for asking—anything about a picture by Mr. Frith, R.A., which is said to represent a scene from "Henry the Fourth," "Sir John Falstaff and the rest of the Recruits brought to him by Justice Shallow"? The painting was purchased by the late Mr. Sheepshanks, and left to Dividend Stephenson, and is now in the possession of Mr. Arthur Helps.

The line of Lord Lansdowne, which has descended to his great liberality lately. We have had the memoirs of Sir Martin Archer Shee, the life of Lord Lansdowne edited by Mr. Tom Taylor, and Mrs. Grote's exquisite biography of Ary Scheffer. Now we are promised some memoirs of Turner, by Mr. Walter Thornbury, the lively and graphic traveller and writer on Art. Thornbury, as we understand, had access to an invaluable collection of inedited correspondence by Turner and his friends, and to many artistic stores have, we believe, been placed at his disposal by Mr. Ruskin, a work under the auspices of Mr. Thornbury promises the every promise of excellence and success.

We have had "Lives" of Wilkie, by Allan Cunningham, and of Haydon, by Tom Taylor, and a comedian, who was the contemporary of Charles Mathews, the elder, and of Liston, and of Edmund Kean. Mr. Yates has elucidated the text of the lady-authoress by many interesting illustrations, and has issued it in two volumes in the neat dress by a preface, most sensibly and gracefully written, bearing especially on that "dignity of the actor's calling" at which brainless people are in the habit of sneering.

It may interest some of our archæological if not literary or artistic readers to learn that the author of "Paradise Lost" was, if we rightly remember, a descendant of the author of the philosopher who wrote the "Essay on the Human Understanding." A great grandson of the musician who composed the music to "Macbeth"! Not the least in the world. Peter Locke is a figment, a myth, a nonentity, the shadow of a shade; but he still lives. On Wednesday, being the last day of term in the Court of Exchequer, the chief usher "called upon somebody to inform the Court, or the Queen's Attorney-General, or Ancient Sergeant, why certain silks or other goods, or certain ships or other vessels, lately seized and forfeited by 'Peter Locke' and others, should not remain as forfeited by the said Peter Locke." Peter Locke, to be serious, is Mr. Nobody. He is a legal fiction, the cousin-german of John Doe and Richard Roe; and we wish that we could finally raise this column—our learned contemporary Notes and Queries supplying the inscription—over his tedious remains.

The Queen's Bench has surely been stilled long and closely enough to its pictorial sister to warrant us in including among our art-notes the record of the presentation at Court of Lady Crampton (late Mdlle. Victoire Balfe), which took place at her Majesty's Drawingroom on Tuesday. In nursery days, long since, the writer of these lines had the honour to be a playmate of the gifted family of whom Lady Crampton is one. She would not remember his name now were she to hear it; but the memory always recalls among his brighter reminiscences the fact that he has played "Puss in the Corner" with an Ambassadress that was to be. Lady Crampton, by right of her husband's diplomatic rank, has the privilege of the entrée—a privilege for which the highest-born dames vainly sigh; and it is with the sincerest pleasure that we hail the accession to the accomplished young lady to an elevation in the social scale in which she will find such illustrious predecessors as a Countess of Jersey (Miss Farren), a Countess of Essex (Miss Stephens), and a Countess Waldegrave (Miss Leslie), not forgetting the Semiramidi Duchess of St. Albans (Miss Mellon).

THE COURT.

The Queen held a Court and Privy Council on Saturday at Buckingham Palace. At the Court the Right Rev. Dr. Wigram had an audience of the Queen in the Throne-room closet, and did homage on being appointed Bishop of Rochester. The Right Rev. Dr. Longley, Lord Bishop of Durham, Archbishop of Canterbury designate, by command of the Queen was sworn one of her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council. General Sir Richard Dacres, from the Royal Horse Guards Blue, had the first audience of the Queen, to which he was introduced by Lord John Russell; and Mr. Wyke, the British Minister to the Republic of La Plata, had an audience on his returning to resume his functions in the States of Central America. In the evening the Queen and Prince Consort entertained by the King of the Belgians, Prince Alfred, and the Count of Flanders, honoured the performance of the Royal Italian Opera with their presence.

On Sunday her Majesty held a Chapter of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath at Buckingham Palace. The following Knights Grand Crosses of the Order were severally introduced into the presence of the Sovereign between the hours of one and two o'clock, and invested with the Collar of the Knights Grand Cross present, when the Queen, assisted by the Prince Consort, Prince Alfred, and the Count of Flanders, invested them with the ribbon, and star of the Military Division of the First Class of the Order, viz.:—Admiral the Right Hon. Sir Thomas Byam Martin, G.C.B.; General Sir George Scovell, General Lord Dowson, Admiral Sir Thomas John Cochrane, Admiral Sir Provo William Parker Wallis, Sir Rowland Stevin, General Sir James Ferguson and Lieutenant-General Sir John Bell. The following Knights Commanders received the honour of knighthood:—Mr. Rowland Hill (civil), Colonel Alfred Hastings Horsford (military), Mr. Rice Rhys (civil), Lieutenant-Colonel Phillip Dalbiggs (military), Lieutenant-General Thomas Erskine Napier (military), Lieutenant-General the Hon. Charles Gore (military), Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Lacy (military), Vice-Admiral Provo William Parry Wallis (military), Lieutenant-General Frederick Augustus Adam, Mr. Frederick Lamb, Major-General Sir Robert North Collie Hamilton, Bart. (civil), Colonel Peter Meinell (military), Colonel Samuel Colonel Herbert Benjamin Edwardes (military), and Colonel James Wyke (civil). A great number of other decorations in the civil and military branches of the service.

On Tuesday the Queen held a Drawingroom (the last of the season) at St. James's Palace. In the forenoon the Queen and Prince Consort visited the Prince and Princess Frederick of the Netherlands at Claridge's Hotel, Brook-street. Her Majesty and the Royal Highness had a visit to the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, at her residence in St. James's Palace. In the evening the Queen and Prince Consort, accompanied by the King of the Belgians, Princess Alice, and the Count of Flanders, honoured the Royal Italian Opera with their presence.

On Wednesday the Queen gave a concert, to which a party of about 400 were invited. The following distinguished persons had the honour:—Baron Beyschlag, Baron Miolan-Carvalho, and Caillay; Signori Giuglini, Gardoni, Bolletti, Belletti, Tagliafico, and Zelger; the Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary, Prince Frederick of the Netherlands and Princess Marie, the Duke of Cambridge, the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, the Prince of Lichtenstein, Prince Jules and Prince John of Holstein-Glucksburg, the Duke and Duchess of Holstein, and the Hereditary Duke of Nassau. At Buckingham Palace at a quarter before ten o'clock. The Queen and Prince Consort were conducted into the Throne-room by the Lord Steward, the Lord Chamberlain and the Lord Steward. Her Majesty and the Royal Highnesses were received by the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Napoleon, Prince Frederick of the Netherlands, Prince Victor of Hohenlohe, the Duchess of Cambridge and Princess Mary, the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, the Countess of Gleichen, the Princess of Lichtenstein, Prince Jules and Prince John of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glucksburg, the Duke and Duchess of Holstein, and the Maharajah Singh. Her Majesty was attended by the Duchess of Sutherland, Mistress of the Robes; the Countess of Gainsborough, Lady in Waiting; Gen. Lord Kerr and Hon. Mary Bulteel, Maids of Honour in Waiting; Lady Charlotte Bruce, Lady in Waiting to the Princess Royal; and other officers of the household in waiting. The performance commenced on the entrance of her Majesty.

On Thursday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice and Prince Alfred, and attended by the Hon. Charles Stopford, took a drive in a carriage and four. The Prince Consort, attended by Colonel the Hon. A. Hardinge, visited the Royal Agricultural Hall. His Royal Highness went to the Crystal Palace in the afternoon. In the evening the Queen and Prince Consort, accompanied by the Count of Flanders, honoured the performance at the Haymarket Theatre with their presence.

The Countess of Gainsborough succeeds the Countess of Desart as Lady in Waiting to the Queen. Viscount Torrington and General Sir Edward Bowater have succeeded Lord Foley and the Hon. Montague S. West as the Lord and Groom in Waiting to her Majesty.

THE DRAWINGROOM.

The Queen held a Drawingroom in St. James's Palace on Tuesday last, which was attended by the Royal Highnesses the Princess Alice accompanied by Princess Alice, and attended by the ladies and gentlemen in waiting, arrived from Buckingham Palace about two o'clock. The Royal Highnesses Prince Frederick of the Netherlands, the Count of Flanders, and the Duke of Cambridge, and their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Lichtenstein, Prince Julius and Prince John of Holstein-Glucksburg, joined the Queen's procession as they passed. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort were attended by the Duchess of Sutherland, Mistress of the Robes; the Countess of Gainsborough (in waiting), the Duchess of Atholl, the Countess of Desart, Lady Churchill, the Hon. Caroline Cocks, Lord Kerr, Lieutenant-Colonel of the Buckmaster; and the other Lords and Ladies of the Royal household. The Queen wore a train of white silk, trimmed with rouleaux of black crape; the petticoat black silk, trimmed to correspond. Her Majesty's headdress was formed of diamonds and diamonds, black feathers, and black crape veil. Princess Alice wore a train of rich white corded silk, trimmed with rouleaux of white crape. Her petticoat of white tulle, over glacé silk, also trimmed with heartsease and bows of ribbon. The Royal Highnesses and suite were in attendance with Duchess, and a silver veil, as a headdress. The Court was very fully attended.

Her Royal Highness the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz landed at Gravesend yesterday from a visit to the Queen at Osborne. Her Royal Highness crossed from Flushing in the John Penn mail steam-packet, Captain Smithett, from Calais. Her Royal Highness was received by the Lord Chamberlain, Colonel Clifton, Equerry in Waiting to her Majesty, and conducted to Birmingham's Royal Ship Hotel, where the Duchess rested to rest. Her Royal Highness left the hotel shortly after for London.

Their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess Frederick and Princess Marie of the Netherlands, attended by a numerous suite, have arrived at Claridge's Hotel from Torquay.

Their Serene Highnesses Prince Julius and Prince Henri o Hesse, accompanied by his Excellency Baron Capullos, have left Maurig's Hotel for Darmstadt.

The Duchess of Sutherland has been called from town to Dunrobin Castle by the illness of her Grace the Duke of Ronald Leveson Gower. The Duke remains at Cliefden, near Maidenhead.

Viscountess Palmerston has issued cards for an assembly this evening (Saturday) at Cambridge House.

PRIESTERS' ALMSHOUSES.—The annual meeting of this institution, for the transaction of the usual business and the election of two inmates to the asylum at Wood Green, Middlesex, was held on Monday evening. The names of the successful candidates were Hannah Fry and Robert Chester. The report, as read by the secretary, was of a very encouraging description, showing that great care had been taken by the committee during the past year to provide for the comfort of the inmates. The institution appears to have been placed in a most satisfactory condition.

OUR SPECIAL ARTIST IN SICILY.

PALERMO, May 27, Five a.m.

GARIBALDI is fighting in the town. I am going to chance the shots. Lots of sketches and a long letter by the next ship. One is now leaving the harbour. Whiz! all the dust dashed up near me. In great haste.

PALERMO, June 2.

My last sketches were so hastily dispatched that I had no time to send any details in connection with them. The fact is, all direct communication with England is stopped, and those who have letters to forward are entirely dependent on the irregular departure of vessels for Malta or Naples; and, to improve the matter, no intimation of such departures is given, beyond the signal from the funnel of the steamer showing that fires have been lighted on board.

In my letter from Messina I mentioned that I was about to ship as one of the crew of a boat bound for Palermo, that being the only possible means of reaching Garibaldi. At first I thought of making an attempt to join the revolutionists overland, but the place was so strictly inclosed that to have done so would in all probability have got me into a narrow chamber of the citadel, some two or three feet below high-water mark. I received notice to join my ship at seven p.m., and while the anchor was being weighed I made the sketch of the fortress which commands the harbour, the tower, and the Straits of Messina, here hardly three miles in width. Unless the insurrection spread to Calabria, on the other side of the Straits, as we hear it has done, it will be extremely difficult to take the place, for, even presuming it to be thoroughly invested on the land side, reinforcements could be continually thrown in from the sea. I counted eighty guns in position directed towards the city, and, if well served, not a house would remain standing after twelve hours' bombardment.

On the morning of the 24th ult., as our vessel rounded Cape Mongerino, we could distinctly perceive firing going on along the crest of hills above Palermo. Of course, every one on board the Vultore was on the qui vive in an instant, an interested group, of whom your humble servant formed one, congregated, with telescopes and double-barrelled glasses, on the taffrail; while the crew, leaving their work, struggled on the crosstrees for the best places. Immediately we dropped anchor in the bay we were boarded by numbers of people, who told us that an engagement between Garibaldi and the Royal troops had taken place near Monreale, and that they were anxious to purchase any arms we might have for sale. They also told us that, despite the precautions taken by the authorities, who had made it death for any one to be found with a sword or musket, some thousand young fellows were prepared to fall upon the soldiers, and cut them to pieces, as soon as Garibaldi should drive them in. However, the fighting turned out to be a mere feint on the part of the Liberals, for the puffs of smoke retreated further and further into the hills till they were lost to view, and nothing decisive was gained on either side, except that the Neapolitans arrogated to themselves a victory, supposing the retiring column to be the whole of the patriot army. This was one of Garibaldi's famous "sells," for he, in the meantime, with the bulk of his force, made a flank march from Parco to Misilmeri, leaving the Neapolitan General under the impression that he had fled in an opposite direction. Of course the supposed triumph was made much of by the Government; and I am inclined to think, from what I saw on landing, the people were becoming discouraged at the reported discomfiture of their hero. This feeling, however, was soon dissipated by the "committee," a secret revolutionary council, sitting in the heart of Palermo, who took active measures to revive the drooping spirits of their fellow-citizens. Apropos of this "committee," I witnessed an incident connected with it on my first visit to the shore which provided me with material for a sketch.

You can easily imagine that the shirri were very curious to find out the persons who composed this council of conspirators, and that they lost no opportunity of gaining information as to the whereabouts of the sitting and the names of the members. I had just passed through the Porta Felice when I saw an immense rush of people coming towards me from the direction of the "Reale Fieramm." At their head was a man running at full speed with the blood streaming from numerous wounds about the head: one gash in particular was frightful; it extended from the temple to the chin, and gave an awful appearance to the wretched creature, who was shrieking as he ran for mercy. But those who came behind had none for the spy who had been found lurking about the quarters of the "committee," and, as the fleetest of his pursuers came up with him, stab after stab was made with their gleaming knives till the miserable spy sank exhausted in the doorway of a house near the American Consul's into which he was dragged by some passing soldiers.

On Saturday, the 26th ult., there was a great stir amongst the Neapolitan steamers in the bay; they all of them got their steam up and stood out to sea in various directions, as if their mission was to intercept a second landing on the coast. This was not the case, as I afterwards learned. General Letizia, the commander of the Royal troops, had been so taken in by Garibaldi's feigned retreat to the hills that he started all the steamers in pursuit of him, should he attempt to embark at any point of the coast, and he also dispatched a vessel to Naples with the news that all was over, and that he hoped soon to send the patriot in person to be tortured in some dark dungeon for his Majesty's gratification. As it happened, I received, about an hour after the departure of the steamers, a communication from Garibaldi's camp telling me where they were (only eight miles distant), and promising, if I would wait for a day or two, to find some means of getting me to them; but it was also hinted in the letter that they would come to me.

About half-past three on Sunday morning (the 27th ult.) I was awoke by a rapid discharge of musketry, the ringing of church bells, and loud hurrahing, shouted by thousands of lungs. To jump up and dress was the work of but five minutes. Garibaldi with his men was fighting his way into the town by the Porta St. Antonino, while Neapolitan officers, surprised at the sudden appearance of the man whom they thought far away and a fugitive, were galloping about, giving confused orders to the troops they had got together, and then countermanding them immediately afterwards. The first precaution taken by the military was to place sentinels at intervals along both sides of the streets and at the entrance of every thoroughfare, with instructions to fire on any one offering to show himself either at the windows or the doors of the houses. I was particularly amused by two of these fellows who were posted on each side of the Porta Felice. They fluttered themselves like waters against the wall, while they looked askant at the projecting balconies, in expectation of a shot from some wary housekeeper who had got a musket stowed away in some safe hiding-place. But the firing gets nearer and nearer. It is steadily advancing along the Strada Nuova, showing that the troops are losing ground. The sure aim of Garibaldi's chasseurs tells fearfully on the dense masses of soldiery blocked in the narrow streets, and; seized with a panic, they fire their muskets without taking aim, and retire in the direction of the Piazza Reale, near the Porta Nuova. Shouts of "Viva l'Italia!" "Viva la Sicilia!" "Viva nostra Generale Garibaldi!" "Viva l'Italia Unita!" are heard above the sharp cracks of rifles; armed people, with the tricolor on their breasts, are fraternising with their deliverers; while those who have no weapons are busily employed throwing up barricades. But what is that crash that shakes every house in the quarter and sends the window-panes spattering on the pavement below? Two guns have been brought up, and are sweeping the Strada Nuova from the Via Toledo to the Porta St. Antonino. Every balcony in the former street has now become a fortress; citizens that were supposed to have been disarmed are now doing good service on the panic-stricken troops; while the small column of libertors are making sure progress, taking advantage as they that they lost no opportunity of gaining information as to the whereabouts of the sitting and the names of the members. I had just passed through the Porta Felice when I saw an immense rush of people coming towards me from the direction of the "Reale Finanze." At their head was a man running at full speed with the blood streaming from numerous wounds about the head: one gash in particular was frightful; it extended from the temple to the chin, and gave an awful appearance to the wretched creature, who was shrieking as he ran for mercy. But those who came behind had none for the spy who had been found lurking about the quarters of the "committee," and, as the fleetest of his pursuers came up with him, stab after stab was made with their gleaming knives till the miserable spy sank exhausted in the doorway of a house near the American Consul's into which he was dragged by some passing soldiers.

On Saturday, the 26th ult., there was a great stir amongst the Neapolitan steamers in the bay; they all of them got their steam up and stood out to sea in various directions, as if their mission was to intercept a second landing on the coast. This was not the case, as I afterwards learned. General Letizia, the commander of the Royal troops, had been so taken in by Garibaldi's feigned retreat to the hills that he started all the steamers in pursuit of him, should he attempt to embark at any point of the coast, and he also dispatched a vessel to Naples with the news that all was over, and that he hoped soon to send the patriot in person to be tortured in some dark dungeon for his Majesty's gratification. They flattened themselves like wafers against the wall, while they looked askant at the projecting balconies, in expectation of a shot from some wary housekeeper who had got a musket stowed away in some safe hiding-place. advance of every projection which offers shelter. The men who drove the Austrians from Como and Varese know the value of every ounce of lead, and there is not one of their bullets that has not its billet on leaving the muzzles of their guns. Hurrah! the Toledo—the centre street of the town—is gained; and a strong breastwork of bedding, sacks of shumac, and paving-stones is raised midway between the Porta Nuova and the Porta Felice. The former, with the Piazza Reale and the Palace, is in possession of the troops, who are assembling there in strong bodies and collecting their guns. The fort has now began to shell that portion of the town in possession of Garibaldi. No position one can take up is safe; loud explosions, followed by clouds of dust from falling houses, succeed each other without intermission. Women and children run shrieking about the streets, while here and there organised bands of labourers are dragging dead and wounded from beneath the heaps of smouldering ruins. Verily, Letizia, the Neapolitan General, should be complimented on his manly and valorous mode of fighting; it is a great achievement to kill unoffending old women and little children. Why, in one ruined house I saw the charred bodies of an entire family, averaging from the ages of sixty years to six months. But the firing is getting stronger in the Via Toledo; some field-pieces have been brought into position at the Porta Nuova, which sweep the street from end to end. However, at the Porta Felice a barricade has been raised, and on it one of Garibaldi's officers plants the Italian flag amidst a storm of grapeshot, that, wonderful to say, leaves him untouched. All the steeples in the vicinity have their bells ringing as a signal for all those who have arms to congregate at the spot, and soon the barricade has a host of defenders. In the meantime Garibaldi's own men and the "squadri," or Sicilian mountaineers, have taken the troops in flank from some of the intersecting streets, and, in conjunction with those from the barricade of the Porta Felice, drive them well back on to the Piazza Reale. It is now night, and the scene in the Toledo baffles all attempt at description. A Neapolitan war-steamer has taken up her position off the quay at the foot of it, and is sending 13-inch shell up the pathway of houses. Flames are bursting forth in all directions, and walls are falling with a crash across the narrow thoroughfares, while the shrieks and yells of the wounded, as they are removed to more sheltered positions, combined with the hurrahing of the patriot soldiers as they drive the troops step by step towards the Royal Palace, realised to the beholder the idea of a dozen Pandemoniums in one. All through the night does the fighting continue uninterruptedly, and there is little or no sleep to be obtained by even a non-combatant, who at any moment may be awakened by a live shell in his bed.

The next morning early I went through the town, taking my chance at the barricades, and ducking and running across the open places, exposed to the fire of the troops. The dead that were lying about had mostly been killed on the previous day, and from the excessive heat they were rapidly decomposing, and tainting the atmosphere of the narrow lanes with their poisonous exhalations. The fighting to-day was more especially confined to the neighbourhood of the King's Palace, the Mint, and the Castle, which latter did nothing but throw shells into the town from morning till night, assisted by the steamer already alluded to. The captain of this last was guilty of a most cowardly act, and one that caused him to be execrated by all parties, interested and non-interested. Having ascertained the position of the hospital, an easy thing to do from the yellow flag flying on its roof, he steamed into a favourable position, and commenced firing shell after shell at the building, which by any other officer of any other navy would have been respected. On Tuesday the fighting was harder than ever. An attack was made on the Palace, and one wing was taken from the soldiers and held for a considerable period: this exploit was performed by young Garibaldi, at the head of fifteen men, and had he not been recalled I believe he would have established himself firmly.

When it is considered that Garibaldi entered the city with only a thousand of his own people whom he could depend upon, the result achieved is surprising. The Sicilian mountaineers, or squadri, who joined him en route are, indeed, a brave, manly race; but from experience I am inclined to think that the Palermitans are more addicted to shouting and parading about, decorated with tricolour ribbons, than to manning the barricades. They are, no doubt, much given to the pomp and circumstance of glorious war, but they are by no means partial to the knocking about that every one must go in for who means really to do any fighting. I am assured by residents here that all we have been told of brave demonstrations against the authorities is highly coloured, and in many instances false. If Garibaldi had not his own handful of men and the sturdy Sicilian mountaineers to depend upon I do not think he would have achieved the success he has. However, I hope I may be wrong in my surmises—certainly the people have armed themselves the best way they can, and are now showing a good front in the streets.

On Wednesday morning, at twelve, a general attack was to have been made upon the Palace. At ten I was enabled for the first time to penetrate to Garibaldi's head-quarters at the Senate House, and I shall never forget as long I live the courteous reception given me by the General. He advanced to meet me from his group of officers, and, shaking me by the hand, welcomed me to his roof, which at any time might be splintered into fragments above our heads. The artillerymen at the citadel had ascertained that the Senate House was occupied by Garibaldi, and they directed all their shells in that direction, but fortunately without success, for they all fell short among the houses that surrounded the place.

Steam is up on board a vessel leaving with despatches for Naples, and I must get this off at once. I will only add now that we have had an armistice since Wednesday afternoon, which is to expire to-morrow (Sunday, June 3), at twelve. It was the Neapolitan General who asked for it, and he has gone to Naples for instructions how to act.

The Sketches which you have already received and the one I now send almost explain themselves. The first is La Masa, the Sicilian guerrilla chief, with his body-guard, in the streets of Palermo. The second is the Barricade at the Porta Felice, defended by the insurgents on the evening of May 27. The third is a Sbirro being paraded through the streets previous to being shot on the market-place. The fourth is Guiseppe d'Angelo, the captain of a barricade, behind which I was sheltered for some time on the Tuesday after the outbreak. The last is General Garibaldi receiving Major Bosco, a Neapolitan officer, who came on the first day of the armistice to request that provisions might be taken from the Castle to the Palace, as the troops in the latter place were starving. By the General's excellent dispositions, the fortress and palace had been cut off from each other. To Major Bosco's extreme astonishment, Garibaldi told him he should detain him a prisoner until some carts of flour that had been taken from his men were returned. [Some of the Sketches here referred to will appear in forthcoming numbers of this Journal.]

I hope to send to you on Tuesday next, when I shall inclose you more incidents of the revolution, and continue the narrative from the third day's fighting.

PALERMO, June 7.

I intended to send you five sketches by the Caradoc, which leaves to-day for Naples, but I am unable. During the days of the fighting, and immediately afterwards, I was so much about in the sun, and this, combined with the stench of the dead blocking the narrow streets in all directions, brought on an attack of fever that completely knocked me up for three days. I sat amongst a pile of dead for two hours or more at the White Benedictine Convent sketching the horrors there, and this, I believe, brought on the attack. I have five rough sketches, made in different parts of the town, of injury done by the bombardment to life and houses, and of different points where the fighting was most severe, and these sketches it was impossible for me to finish on the spot, as I was exposed to falling houses and chance shots. Had I not have been knocked up these would have been sent off; as it is, I will dispatch them the first opportunity.

THE PICTURE OF "EARLY SUMMER-TIME" given with the Number of this Journal for June 2 is a view in Surrey; it was taken from just above the village of Albury, looking towards St. Martha's Hill; the church on the right is Albury Church.

THE ISLANDS OF FAVIGNANA AND MARITIMO.

BOTH these islands are in the Mediterranean, off the west coast of Sicily, and belong to the group of the Trapani Islands, subject to Sicily. Favignana, the ancient Ægusa or Æthusa, lies about sixteen miles from the mainland of Sicily, and is eighteen miles in circumference. It has excellent anchorage-ground for large vessels, and a strong castle. There are good pastures and copious springs in this island, and a number of sheep are reared on it. The woods contain hares and deer, and the surrounding sea abounds with fish. In the centre of the island a hillrange crosses it from north to south, having on its highest point St. Catherine's Castle. It has stone quarries, tunny and anchovy fisheries, and an export trade in sheep, goats, and poultry. On its east side is the principal town, San Leonardo; and on its north coast is a good harbour, defended by Fort San Giacomo. The island is used as a place of banishment for criminals.

Maritimo, formerly called Hiera, lies west of Favignana, farther out at sea. It is eleven miles in circuit; is rocky and naked, and the coast is bold and steep. Wild thyme grows there in abundance, and supplies nutriment for swarms of bees. There is on it a strong castle, with dungeons for State prisoners.

MUSIC.

There has been but one operatic novelty this week, but it is a remarkable one—the appearance, at HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, of Signor Ciampi in the character of Dr. Bartholo in the "Barbiere di Siviglia." It was a triumphant effort, and sufficient to establish the character of the young performer both as an actor and a singer. He is only one-and-twenty, it is said; and yet he personated Rosina's crabbed, crotchety old guardian with a truth and humour not equalled by any one that we have seen in the part, Lablache only excepted. His acting is, perhaps, too painstaking and elaborate—too full of minute points and bits of byplay; but this is a fault which will disappear under the influence of time and experience, and, indeed, even now it does not detract much from the excellence of the performance. In other respects the cast of the opera is as before.

A heavy domestic affliction has interrupted Grisi's brilliant performances at the ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA. There has been nothing new or remarkable in the performances during the week.

THE MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON had their fifth concert at St. James's Hall on Wednesday evening. The principal features of the performance were Mendelssohn's symphony in A minor (called the "Scotch Symphony"), Beethoven's overture to "Leonora," Weber's overture to the "Freischütz," and a fine violin concerto, admirably executed by Herr Molique, the composer. The singers were Mdlle. Jenny Meyer and Miss Louisa Pyne, who performed several classical pieces. This concert, which terminated the society's second season, was, on the whole, the best they have given. It can scarcely be said that this great body have hitherto made good the magnificent professions with which they began their career.

The fifth and last NEW PHILHARMONIC CONCERT of the season, under the direction of Dr. Wylde, took place at St. James's Hall on Monday evening. It was an excellent entertainment, and did honour to the director, who is also the entrepreneur of these concerts. The orchestra was complete and powerful, and Beethoven's symphony in D, with the overtures to "La Clemenza di Tito" and "Preciosa" were played with much effect; and Mr. I. F. Barnett performed Mendelssohn's pianoforte concerto in D minor in a manner which did great honour to this rising young pianist. Spohr's dramatic concerto was admirably executed by Herr Becker. The vocalists were Mdme. Lemmens-Sherrington and Miss Louisa Pyne. Mdme. Sherrington created quite a furore by her execution of the old French air, "Ah, vous dirai-je, Maman," with Adolphe Adam's variations. It was a prodigy of brilliancy, finish, and grace, and was encored with enthusiasm. Miss Louisa Pyne sang Mozart's "Vedrai carino" charmingly, and with similar marks of approbation. It is announced that these concerts will be resumed early next season.

MRS. ANDERSON'S CONCERT, which we noticed by anticipation last week, was such as this distinguished lady's annual concerts always are—one of the most brilliant, and at the same time one of the most classical, entertainments of the season. Mrs. Anderson, during her whole career, has been a firm and zealous votary of the classical school, and, both as an instructress and a public performer, has done as much as ever has been done by an English professor in promoting and diffusing the knowledge and love of what is good and great in the musical art. She has almost ceased to be a pubiic performer, confining her appearance to her own annual concerts, but as an instructress she is as actively and as beneficially engaged as ever. It is probably in consequence of the extent of her labours in this capacity that she has, in a great measure, abandoned the more conspicuous branch of her profession; for her performance on Wednesday, particularly of Beethoven's magnificent concerto in E flat, showed that her powers as a performer are undiminished. In this piece, and in Osborne's duet for two pianofortes on themes from the "Etoile du Nord," which she played along with Mr. Cusins (a worthy coadjutor), she was applauded with the utmost enthusiasm. The concert, as we have already said, was in Her Majesty's Theatre, which was crowded in every part by an elegant and fashionable audience. The programme, with the exception of the above pieces and a solo on the violin by Herr Becker, consisted of vocal music, and was very interesting. All the great performers of Her Majesty's Theatre appeared, together with several others, particularly Miss Louisa Pyne and Mdlle. Artôt, not belonging to that establishment. The entertainment was ample as well as varied, but, by means of good management, it was not protracted to an unreasonable length.

MR. AGUILAR'S CONCERT, at the Hanover-square Rooms, last week, was an entertainment worthy of the reputation of this distinguished musician. It derived especial interest from the production of two new instrumental pieces, composed by himself; a trio for the pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, and a sestet for the piano, flute, oboe, clarinet, horn, and bassoon. Both were admirably performed, the former by Messrs. Aguilar, Holmes, and Lidel; the latter by Messrs. Aguilar, Pratten, Nicholson, Lazarus, C. Harper, and Hausser. Both were found to be masterly works, and were listened to by a very musical audience, with the warmest applause. There was some excellent vocal music, sung by Miss Lindo (Mr. Aguilar's relative, a young and rising performer), Mdlle. Parepa, and Signor Belletti. A beautiful song of Mr. Aguilar, "In a wood on a windy day," sung by Miss Lindo, excited great interest, and was encored; and the same compliment was paid to Belletti's performance of a German song, also composed by Mr. Aguilar. There was a crowded audience, which included many of our most eminent musicians and amateurs.

MR. WASHINGTON FRIEND AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.—We have much pleasure in commending Mr. Washington Friend's entertainment and panorama now exhibiting in Piccadilly. By the means of lecture and lyric Mr. Friend contrives to intimate the prominent points of a monster panorama, comprising five thousand miles of an American tour, including Canada and the United States, with Niagara, and the River St. Lawrence. The pictures are of his own painting, and do credit to his skill both in colouring and outline. Of their accuracy we are assured by a number of testimonials, and, altogether, Mr. Friend comes before us with excellent letters of credit. Among the subjects treated is one of a Camp Meeting, which is very animated—in fact, full of life and spirit. The groups are well disposed, and the whole story is excellently told. Mr. Friend adopts the familiar style of discourse and communicates his information with great ease, interspersing it with amusing anecdotes and songs, both comic and pathetic, which he sings with force and facility, accompanying himself on many instruments. He is, therefore, a man of varied accomplishments, and well qualified to give variety to an entertainment like the present. The room was numerously and fashionably attended.

MR. RYDER'S READINGS.—The tragedian whose reputation has so long been connected with the Princess' Theatre, has within the last few weeks employed himself occasionally in giving dramatic readings to the public. Not long ago, we received great pleasure from hearing him read "Macbeth"; and were especially gratified by his delivery of "Julius Cæsar," on Monday, at the Literary and Scientific Institution, Edward-street, Portman-square. Mr. Ryder is a distinguished elocutionist, and every exhibition of himself as a reader presents an opportunity to the student of which he should immediately avail himself in order to gain a sound style of declamation. Mr. Ryder, we perceive, will again read

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

PEOPLE out of doors—as all those members of the human race who are not also members of the British Legislature are technically designated—will scarcely believe that for apparent intensity of interest and for reality of purpose the debate in the House of Lords on the Light-Weights Racing Bill far exceeded the last moments of discussion on the Reform Bill. In the Chamber of Peers on Tuesday things wore a most stirring aspect. At an early hour the House was very full, and every now and then noble Lords appeared whose faces were not only unfamiliar to the ordinary outside attendants on their Lordships' deliberations, but were quite unknown to the oldest messenger and doorkeeper. Remarkable, too, was the circumstance that what is called the Episcopal Bench was unusually crowded, and the obvious idea arose that the Prelates had somehow or the other confounded this measure with a bill for the prevention of cruelty to animals, and so felt it to be their duty to give it their countenance. To do them justice, however, it should be stated that their gathering was caused by the approaching advent of a measure which, really and technically, belonged to their jurisdiction. Those now old Whigs who remember young and ardent Mr. Stanley jumping on the table at Brooks's during the struggle at the era of the Reform Bill, and pouring out a flood of passionate appeal, which kept the waverers together, probably recognised something of the eager flush of that moment on Lord Derby's countenance on this occasion. As a politician the noble Earl has been always and essentially a "light-weight;" a wonderful person for going the pace, but, some how or the other, always finding his horse running away with him and bolting over the ropes. A good deal of amusement was expected of him, but, in fact, he did not make any jokes. Lord Derby considers politics and government, and all that sort of thing, good fun and legitimate subjects for jesting; and he, to parody the old song about Alexander, "always hated thinking, and joked about the Council Board." But racing, in his mind, is actually the serious business of life; and therefore his argument was grave and logical, and he proved to demonstration, first, that he was not a mere sporting latitudinarian, like Lord Granville, who could look at the matter from a comic point of view, and, next, that he was not so untrue to his most solemn convictions as to permit a question of the turf to be committed to an inexperienced, lukewarm, and uncertain assembly like the Parliament of England, when there was a learned, potent, and grave tribunal like the Jockey Club which was able, if not willing, to deal with it. There is a complaint just now that the House of Lords is encroaching on the province of the Commons; and, as one of the functions of the latter House is to receive into its cognisance every subject and every grievance that can by no possibility find shelter anywhere else, it would seem as if the Peers, judging from the introduction of this class of topics, were inclined to share this habit with the popular branch of the Legislature. Well, it amuses them and hurts nobody.

But to return to our muttons! alas that we should have to say our dead muttons!—we mean the Reform Bill. Let every credit be given to the Government, and even to the House, for the effort which was made on the last debate to give an air of vitality and reality to the affair. Sir James Fergusson, who is undoubtedly a very gentlemanly and in many respects a very smart and active member of Parliament, surprised the House by the argumentative and able manner in which he spoke on his motion, which, technically unimportant, went direct to the strangulation of the bill. Sir George Grey, who is master of a kind of whirlwind oratory, after which panting stenography halts very nearly in vain, was as impassioned as if he meant what he was saying, or believed that his single rushing onset could disperse the serried ranks which, in front, flanks, and rear, were closing on the devoted Reform Bill. The easy fluency and somewhat coarse banter of Mr. Whiteside was a justification of the suppressed rage which characterised Mr. Bright's speech, and which, laboriously enveloped as it was in Parliamentary courtesies, denoted the bitterness of spirit within him, and betrayed nothing less than his consciousness that the Opposition believed that the coming catastrophe was a defeat of him personally. Certainly he must have enjoyed a profound momentary triumph when he touched on that famous article in the Quarterly Review which was directed towards the deposition of Mr. Disraeli from the leadership of the Conservative party. Mr. Bright's direct look at, and allusion to, the reputed author of that treatise, who was sitting exactly opposite, operated, we are told, to the manifest confusion and discomfiture of the by-no-means shrinking-and-unblessed-with-assurance young nobleman in question. It is even said that his Lordship covered his face with his hands for a time, and shortly afterwards left the House, and did not return for the rest of the evening. It was observed and remarked upon that Lord Palmerston was not in the House during the early part of the evening. He did not come in until between nine and ten; and, looking to his antecedent conduct in the debates on the Reform Bill, some surprise was felt when, at the close of Sir Hugh Cairns' somewhat dull and platitudinous speech, the Premier (who, it seems, had been all day at Ascot Races) sprang on his legs with wondrous vivacity, and launched out into one of those old, ringing, pointed, trenchant, witty exordiums for which he was once so famous. Indeed, all through his speech he was Palmerston redivivus in the strictest sense of the term; and never was there a better rush at the close of a losing race than he made on this occasion. The eagerness of Mr. Disraeli was manifest. Once or twice, when he supposed that Lord Palmerston had concluded, but had not, he sprung up; and we fancied that his opponent, seeing this, prolonged his remarks as much as possible, in the hope of giving him a balk, which is sometimes as fatal to the beginning of a speech as it is to a physical leap. It is not possible to say whether or not Mr. Disraeli has actually learned the knack of positive impromptu speaking, which he did not possess completely at one time. Certainly one or two of his recent speeches, if they were not impromptu, were marvellous specimens of the artful concealment of art, and on this occasion he outdid himself. His sentences were like a series of shells which were thrown here, there, and everywhere, and went bouncing and bursting and scattering destruction around. To descend in the scale of pyrotechnic comparison, probably a more appropriate simile would be that of an exaggerated cracker, for his speech ran fizzing about in all directions, with intervals of sharp, loud explosions, which must have been very annoying whereever its erratic course guided it. The extraordinary quietude and the languid attitude of Mr. Gladstone, his compressed lip and extreme pallor, while Mr. Disraeli was speaking, led to an idea that he would follow; for that is a mode of listening to the speeches of the leader of the Opposition which Mr. Gladstone has long assumed. Some disappointment was felt, therefore, when Lord John Russell, in a few languid sentences, closed the debate, which terminated with that unequivocal division which naturally led to the scene of Monday evening.

After all it was not much of a scene; but, judging from the appearance of things in the House, and from some remarks made in the course of the evening, it was somewhat of a surprise, that withdrawal of the Reform Bill. A small but significant circumstance warned accurate observers of what was coming. Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, a Lord of the Treasury and an assiduous sub-whipper-in, presented a petition praying that there might be no postponement of the measure, and as he gave it in he fairly burst out laughing, conscious, of course, of the expost facto condition of the document. A by no means crowded, but a very quiet, well-behaved, and attentive, House listened without visible emotion either of sorrow or triumph to the few judicious and manly sentences in which Lord John Russell stated the resolve of the Government with regard to the bill. One hardly ever recollects Lord John appearing to better advantage. There was in his demeanour neither an affectation of intense disappointment, nor any evidence of suppressed indignation. He spoke calmly and tactically of that which he felt to be inevitable; and, if there was to be traced any under-current to his observations, it seemed as if he meant to imply that he was conscious that in the measure which he was then giving up he had lent himself merely to a compromise, but that it should be for the last time; and that if he felt anything it was pity for the judicial blindness of those who, having a fair opportunity for a tolerably long settlement of the Reform question, which was obnoxious to them in any shape, were so unwise as to throw it away, thus unavoidably precipitating the period when they would have to enlarge the sphere of their political digestion for the reception of a far more extended measure.

Of course some of the metropolitan members felt bound to impinge on the good taste and good feeling which the House generally was evidently anxious to display on the occasion, and which Mr. Disraeli certainly represented in the line he adopted, and on which even Mr. Bright, though he did get somewhat impassioned towards the close of his speech, did not trench. Of course Mr. Horsman took this, as he would take any, opportunity for delivering one of those orations which, it would seem, he employs his pensive mornings in composing, and which are a kind of long-drawn-out devoting to evil of all and sundry—a species of spread-out anathema, the talent for the production of which would render their author an invaluable coadjutor in any process of excommunication and cursing with bell, book, and candle. There was here and there, perhaps, a spice of malice amongst the "little men" who would rise one after the other when the interest of the moment was departed and the majority of the members had gone to dinner, for they kept poor Lord John for a mortal hour or two on the rack while he was waiting to perform the technical duty of discharging the order for going into Committee on the Bill for the Amendment of the Representation of the People. At last, in a House not boasting twenty members, and in so quiet and even hurried a way that, when the next order was called on, some people could not believe the ceremony of withdrawal had actually been performed, another Reform Bill was consigned to that Parliamentary limbo which must be expansive indeed in order to contain the vexed spirits of departed bills of all sorts. The next night the only sign of the occurrence of this event was that Lord John Russell did not appear in the House at all during the sitting.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Ecclesiastical Courts and Registries (Ireland) Bill and the Church Temporalities Acts (Ireland) Amendment Bill were read a second time.

The Bank of Ireland Bill passed through Committee.

The Prevention of Cruelty to Animals Bill was withdrawn.

The Sir John Barnard's Act Repeal Bill was read a third time and passed.

THE REFRESHMENT HOUSES AND WINE LICENSES BILL.—On the order of the day for the third reading of this bill, Lord DENMAN objected generally to the principle of the bill, and moved that it be read a second time that day six months.—The Earl of DONOUGHMORE supported the motion, and, after a brief discussion, in which Earl Granville, Lord Redesdale, and others took part, their Lordships divided, and the amendment was rejected by 26 to 2. The bill was then read a third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

WITHDRAWAL OF THE REFORM BILL.

On the order of the day for resuming the adjourned debate on going into Committee on the Reform Bill,

Lord J. RUSSELL said it was impossible that the Government could agree to the motion of Mr. Mackinnon to stay the progress of the measure until the result of the next Census had been ascertained. Neither could they—regard being had to the fact that 250 members had voted in favour of postponing the measure—insist any longer in urging it forward. Looking also to the impossibility of carrying the bill through both Houses of Parliament in the present Session without sacrificing the other business of the country, the Government had arrived at the conclusion that it would be idle, and perhaps culpable, for them to go into Committee for four or five nights, and then make the obstacles which might then interpose the reason for abandoning the bill. The number of amendments also, of which notice had been given, showed the impossibility of carrying the bill within the period usually assigned to the Parliamentary Session. The Government were likewise bound to consider the general state of the public business. Many important questions remained to be considered. There were the Estimates, the demands which the Chinese war would necessarily entail, and the important questions of coast fortifications arising out of the report of the Commissioners on national defences. It might perhaps have been possible to carry the bill if the Government had protracted the Session to an inordinate length, but they did not think there was that immediate urgency, nor that demand on the part of the public out of doors, to proceed which would justify them in adopting any extraordinary course in that respect. Such being the case, they were of opinion that it was not their duty to proceed further with the measure in the present Session. He was aware that he was open to the accusation of having delayed the Committee until the 4th of June; but his answer to that charge was that the French Treaty and the commercial changes arising out of it were so important to the trade of the country that he had no alternative but to give way to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Having defended the Government from any imputation of insincerity in their desire to amend the representation of the people, the noble Lord announced that at the earliest opportunity next Session they would bring in another measure of reform.

Mr. MACKINNON expressed his willingness to withdraw his amendment, and congratulated the country "upon the settlement of the question." For his own part he believed Lord John Russell could employ his time much better than in attempting to carry such a measure to the exclusion of far more important business.

Mr. DISRAELI said the Government had taken a wise and not undignified course in withdrawing the bill, for otherwise it would have been impossible to have carried on the business of the country. He had heard the announcement of Lord John Russell with perfect approbation, and he assured the Government that the Opposition would afford them every possible assistance in disposing of the remainder of the business to which the attention of Parliament might be invited.

Mr. BRIGHT addressed himself to what he considered to be the reasons which had induced the Government to withdraw the bill, and which reasons he thought were to be traced, not to the amendment of the member for Rye (Mr. Mackinnon), who had never succeeded in carrying anything, but to the hostility of the Conservative party to anything in the shape of reform. The Session of 1860 had not, however, been an idle one, for it had seen the removal of four hundred obstacles to the trade and commerce of the country. The treaty with France was also a great fact in the history of the country, and he had reason to believe that its results would exceed even the most sanguine expectations of its most enthusiastic friends. He was glad the Government had withdrawn the Reform Bill; for he thought it far more desirable that it should be withdrawn at once than be tampered with in Committee. Any proposal to increase the rating in boroughs from £6 to £8 would be received with great dissatisfaction out of doors, and he warned the Government that in any future bill which might be brought forward there must be no compromise on this point.

After some remarks from Mr. Newdegate, Mr. E. James, and Lord Fermoy,

Mr. OSBORNE said he did not agree with some criticisms which had been made on the conduct of the Government for giving up the bill. It was the House and not the Government which was responsible for the abandonment of the bill. The conduct of the Opposition and of certain pseudo-Liberals had been in the last degree unfair and unworthy. They declined to join issue with the Government, and fight a stand-up battle on the second reading, but they committed Parliamentary assassination by administering small doses of adjournment and other poisonous ingredients. He was surprised that the Conservative party had not proved true to their tenets and accepted the offer of the Government, for they might depend upon it that a far more comprehensive measure would be insisted upon next Session.

Mr. HORSMAN thought there were two reasons which accounted for the withdrawal of the bill—the lateness of the Session and the general unpopularity of the measure. The noble Lord at the head of the Foreign Office had referred to the number of amendments of which notice had been given, as if they had emanated from the traditional opponents of liberal measures; but an examination of those amendments would show that out of ninety on the paper seventy had been given by Liberal and but twenty by the Conservative members. The right hon. gentleman criticised with some severity the conduct of the late and present Governments in relation to reform, and characterised as unworthy and unstatesmanlike the practice of promising reforms when there was no honest or sincere intention of granting them.

A desultory conversation ensued, in the course of which Mr. Angerstein, Mr. Slaney, and Mr. Warner expressed their regret at the withdrawal of the bill, and Mr. R. Long and Mr. W. E. Duncombe their satisfaction.

Mr. WHALLEY admitted that he felt but little interest in the subject, as he considered the House of Commons occupied a very undignified position pending the settlement of the question of privilege raised by the House of Lords.

The amendment of Mr. Mackinnon was then withdrawn, and,

On the motion of Lord J. RUSSELL, the order for the Committee was discharged, and the bill itself was withdrawn.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL moved the second reading of seven bills for the consolidation of the criminal law. After some discussion the bills were read a second time.

A number of the orders of the day were disposed of, most of them without any debate.

The adjourned debate on the second reading of the Tenure and Improvement of Land (Ireland) Bill, the rejection of which had been moved, was resumed. After a discussion, the bill was read a second time.

The other orders were disposed of.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

LIGHT-WEIGHTS RACING BILL.—Lord REDESDALE moved the second reading of this bill, the object of which was to prevent horses from carrying weights below six stone. The noble Lord asserted that the present practice of racing with light weights was an encouragement to gambling, and at the same time a source of danger, since boys were employed who had not sufficient control over the horses.—The Earl of WINCHILSEA opposed the bill; as did also the Duke of BEAUFORT, who, as an amendment, moved that it should be read a second time that day six months.—The Marquis of CLANRICARDE supported the bill.—Earl GRANVILLE supported the amendment, contending that the subject was more fitted to be dealt with by the Jockey Club than by Parliament.—The Earl of DERBY denied that there was any necessity for such a measure; and asserted that it would not cure the evils which it was intended to meet, even if they were as great as Lord Redesdale had represented them to be. He admitted that under the present system evils existed, but recommended their Lordships not to interfere, but to leave all such matters in the hands of the Jockey Club, who were better qualified to deal with them than the Imperial Legislature. In conclusion, the noble Earl recommended the withdrawal of the bill.—Lord REDESDALE assented, and the bill was withdrawn accordingly.

The Duchy of Cornwall (Limitation of Actions) Bill passed through Committee.

The Petitions of Rights Bill, the Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Bill, and the Malicious Injuries to Property Act Amendment Bill were read a third time, and passed.

A long discussion took place on the report of amendments on the Union of Benefices Bill, in which all the principles and details of the measure were dealt with, principally by members of the Episcopal Bench.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

ANNUITY TAX ABOLITION (EDINBURGH) BILL.—There was a morning sitting, which was devoted to the consideration in Committee of this bill. Progress was made as far as the 13th clause before the House, at four o'clock, adjourned to six.

THE REVOLUTION IN SICILY.—At the evening sitting, in reply to a series of questions from Mr. Sheridan, Lord PALMERSTON said that, in order to afford aid and shelter to persons who might claim the protection of the British flag in Sicilian waters, the Admiralty had been instructed to station one ship at Marsala, one at Messina, another at Palermo, and four ships in the Bay of Naples; that an Envoy was on his way from Naples to this country to whom her Majesty's Government would not hesitate to express the views with which they regarded the bombardment of Palermo; that the Government of Naples had applied to its foreign allies to guarantee the possession of the Two Sicilies; that Austria had positively and peremptorily refused to interfere; that there was every reason to believe that the French Government had arrived at a similar determination; and that it was unnecessary for him to say what the feeling of the British Government must be on such a matter.—In reply to Mr. Griffith, Lord PALMERSTON said a report had been received of an agreement between the commander of the Neapolitan forces at Palermo and General Garibaldi, that the English Admiral should occupy the fort of Castellamare, but that, from subsequent accounts, it appeared that the occupation did not take place.

THE CENSUS OF 1861.—In reply to Sir C. Douglas, Sir G. C. LEWIS said that when in Committee on the Census Bill he should withdraw the clause imposing a penalty for refusing to answer the question as to religious opinions.

CONSTITUTION OF THE ADMIRALTY.—Admiral DUNCOMBE moved for a Select Committee to inquire into the constitution of the Board of Admiralty and the various duties devolving thereon.—Lord C. PAGET opposed the motion, on the ground that all the matters to which it referred were already under the consideration either of the Select Committee on piers and harbours, or a Royal Commission, and that, consequently, the appointment of another Select Committee was entirely unnecessary.—Mr. B. OSBORNE supported the motion, on the ground that the noble Lord himself, before he became Secretary to the Admiralty, had brought grave charges against that department, which he had never retracted, and which, therefore, required to be cleared up.—Colonel DICKSON also supported the motion.—Sir J. PAKINGTON thought there should be an inquiry; but, as he was of opinion that that inquiry should be conducted by a well-selected Commission, and not by a Select Committee, he should oppose the motion.—Mr. LINDSAY regarded the inquiry as absolutely necessary, and could see no reason why the Admiralty should refuse it.—Mr. BENTINCK recommended that the First Lord of the Admiralty should be a Peer, in order that he might escape the scrutinising criticism of the House of Commons on matters of detail connected with promotions.—Sir C. NAPIER supported the motion, but said it was impossible that such an enormous machine as the Navy could be properly worked while the Lords of the Admiralty were changed with each successive Administration.—After some remarks from Mr. Wall, Sir J. ELPHINSTONE advised Admiral Duncombe to be satisfied with the moral effect of the discussion, and to withdraw the motion.—Sir C. WOOD expressed his opinion that a Select Committee could not properly conduct an inquiry into the different departments of the Admiralty, and defended his Administration when he presided there as First Lord.—After some remarks from Lord Lovaine and Sir M. Seymour, the motion was then, by leave of the House, withdrawn.

EUROPEAN FORCES IN INDIA.—Sir C. WOOD asked leave to bring in a bill to repeal so much of the Act of the 22nd and 23rd Vict., chap. 27, as enables the Secretary of State for India to raise men for her Majesty's local European forces in India. He said the bill consisted of a single clause, and that he had adopted that mode of proceeding so as to test the question of principle, without incumbering with any details to distract the attention of the House from the question which he had to submit. There were papers on the table which contained three plans of carrying out his object, and he had a fourth plan, which he should be glad to submit for consideration when the time came for dealing with matters for detail—the only point upon which he then wished to take the opinion of the House being whether they should continue to maintain a separate European force for local service in India, or whether the whole of that European force should be a part of the Queen's English army for general service. In the opinion of the Government it should be the latter, inasmuch as it was inexpedient and inconvenient that there should be two armies under distinct control in the same country. The right hon. gentleman argued at very great length in favour of this course, which he contended would place the English power in India on a more satisfactory footing than that on which it stood at present, and enable it to meet such a contingency as that of a renewed mutiny in a better state of preparation than could otherwise be the case.—On the motion of Mr. DANBY SEYMOUR the debate was then adjourned till next Thursday.

PASSING TOLLS.—Mr. FENWICK obtained leave to bring in a bill to abolish passing tolls.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

THE MINES REGULATION AND INSPECTION BILL.—This bill was taken in Committee. On clause 1, which provides that no boy shall be employed in a mine under twelve years of age, unless the provisions of the second clause (which require that a boy between ten and twelve shall receive a certificate that he is able to read and write) are satisfied, Mr. PAGET moved to substitute the age of "thirteen" for twelve.—Mr. CLIVE opposed the amendment.—After discussion, on a division the amendment was lost by 178 to 71.—On the motion that clause 1 stand part of the bill, Mr. LIDDELL moved that it be omitted. On a division the numbers were—For the clause, 180; against it, 91: 89. The clause was then agreed to. On clause 2 Mr. KINNAIRD moved to insert that it shall not be lawful for any person whatsoever to employ, keep, or allow to remain in any colliery or ironstone mine any boy above the age of ten years and under the age of fourteen years for a longer time than eight hours in any one day.—On a division the amendment was lost by 146 to 77.

The House then resumed and the other business was disposed of.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

ROYAL COMMISSION.—The Royal assent was given by commission to the Refreshment Houses and Wine Licenses, Sir John Barnard's Act, &c., Repeal, Malicious Injuries to Property Act Amendment, and to twenty-six private bills. The Lords Commissioners were the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of St. Germans, and Lord Sydney.

The Fisheries (Scotland) Bill was read a second time.

The report of amendments on the Union of Benefices Bill was brought up and agreed to.

DISTURBANCES IN NEW ZEALAND.—The Duke of NEWCASTLE, in reply to the Earl of Carnarvon, made a similar statement to that of Mr. C. Fortescue in the House of Commons in reference to the disturbances in New Zealand.

FOREIGN WINES.

Lord MONTEAGLE asked for an account showing the amount of drawback paid, or which may be payable, on foreign wines by reason of the reduction of the duty on wines by the commercial treaty, distinguishing French, Spanish, Portuguese, and other foreign wines. The noble Lord asked whether any negotiations are pending or proposed in respect to alteration of duties consequent upon the reduction of the import of duties on Spanish and Portuguese wines? Also, whether any information had been obtained, or calculation has been made, showing the losses that might be sustained on British spirits, malt, or hops by reason of the reduction of duties on foreign wines?

Earl GRANVILLE hoped the noble Lord would postpone his motion for the return he had moved, as it would be inconvenient at the present time to furnish him with the information he sought for. In reference to his first question, he might state that communications had taken place with Portugal with reference to the reduction of the Portuguese tariff, but they had not as yet been successful. One important point had, however, been gained—namely, the abolition of certain fiscal restrictions which pressed upon trade. The Government had not yet entered into an official communication with Spain upon the subject. With regard to the second question, it was not believed that the reduction of the wine duties would interfere with the duties now levied upon malt, hops, and British spirits.

Lord MONTEAGLE assented to the withdrawal of his motion.]

TUSCANY AND SARDINIA.—The Earl of MALMESBURY reminded the Government of the circumstance of an English vessel having been siezed some years ago by the Tuscan Government upon the plea that it was engaged in the interests of a certain revolutionary party. Every attempt to obtain compensation from the Tuscan Government of that day having failed, he wished to know whether any application for compensation in relation to that affair had been made to Sardinia since the cession of Tuscany to that Power? Lord WODEHOUSE said that her Majesty's Government had made application to the Sardinian Government on the subject referred to; and an anxiety had been expressed by the latter to have the matter settled. His noble friend the Secretary for Foreign Affairs had consented to the question being referred to an impartial authority, in whose hands it now rested.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

TREATY OF TURIN.—Mr. KINGLAKE gave notice that upon the motion for the adjournment of the House on the following day he should call attention to the ratification by the Emperor of the French of the treaty of Turin, and would ask the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether he would give the House any information respecting the manner in which the French Government proposed to give effect to the second article of that treaty.

DISTURBANCES IN NEW ZEALAND.—Mr. Alderman SALOMONS asked whether the Government had received any despatches demanding an immediate increase of the military force to assist in quelling the native rising in New Zealand, and whether it was not, therefore, the intention of the Government to send out such reinforcements forthwith by steam?—Mr. C. FORTESCUE said that despatches had been received from the Governor of New Zealand asking for reinforcements; but the Secretary of State for the Colonies (the Duke of Newcastle) was not prepared to increase the force at present in the colonies, as there were large forces already there and in Australia. He had reason to suppose that reinforcements had been sent from Melbourne and Sydney. If, however, the rising turned out to be more serious than it was understood to be the course suggested by the Governor would then be followed.

Lord PALMERSTON gave notice that it was the intention of the Secretary for War to propose the Army Estimates on Monday, and, as soon as those Estimates were disposed of, the Civil Service Estimates would be taken in detail. The noble Lord expressed a hope that all notices in respect to military matters would therefore be postponed until Monday. He also gave notice that on to-morrow he would move that, on all succeeding Fridays until the end of the Session, orders of the day should have precedence of notices of motion.

Mr. DISRAELI said he had no objection to such an arrangement.

NAVAL RESERVE.

On the motion for going into Committee on the Navy Estimates,

Mr. LINDSAY called attention to the inefficient state of our Naval Reserve, and complained that the recommendations of the Manning Commission had not been carried out. He pointed out the defects of the present system, and suggested many alterations with the view of making the Naval Reserve popular with the merchant navy.

Mr. LIDDELL asked what had been done with regard to the establishment of school-ships?

Lord C. PAGET said that the Board of Trade and the Admiralty conjointly had done a great deal towards establishing those school-ships. He then entered into a statement for the purpose of showing that the Admiralty had done all in their power to increase the Naval Reserve, which was now progressing satisfactorily.

After some discussion the subject dropped.

THE INCOME TAX.

Mr. WHALLEY called attention to the present mode of assessing the property and income tax, with a view of a more equitable assessment thereof.

Mr. P. URQUHART thought the time was come when this subject ought to be taken into the serious consideration of the Government.

Sir F. GOLDSMID also urged upon the Government the importance of grappling with a question which in its present state created universal dissatisfaction.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said the different Governments with which he had had the honour to be connected had given the most minute attention to the subject, with the view of arriving, if possible, at some practical plan for the reconstruction of the tax. The result of their deliberations had been an impression of the utter impossibility to devise any plan that would effect a satisfactory readjustment of the impost in reference to permanent and contingent or casual incomes. The fact was this—that, upon the whole, those who were assessed under schedule B paid much less upon their incomes, according to the liberal arrangement made by the law, than those who were assessed under schedule A, who, he believed, in every case, without exception, paid really upon more than their actual income. He thought the strongest claims might be urged on behalf of that class of persons who were the owners of a certain description of houses. If, however, it were the general feeling of the House that an inquiry upon the subject ought to be instituted, he should not, certainly, consider himself justified in resisting their wishes.

After a few words from Sir H. WILLOUGHBY the subject dropped.

The House then went into a Committee of Supply upon the Naval Estimates, which occupied the consideration of members for the remainder of the evening.

TRIP OF THE "GREAT EASTERN."

THE great ship was taken on a short trip to sea during Saturday and Sunday, for the purpose of testing the newly-arranged machinery, previous to her first real voyage. She slipped her moorings at about two o'clock on Saturday, and with a small but distinguished party on board steamed gently down Southampton Water. The day was wet and squally, and a drizzly mist, half rain, half wind, made anything like sea-cruising about as unpleasant as could well be conceived. This fact, coupled with the secrecy which had been maintained about all relating to the trial, checked anything like a demonstration in the way of boats assembling to witness the departure. Only one of the Ryde packets kept alongside for a mile or so, and now and then the crew of a yacht or cutter gave a cheer, but beyond such recognitions, few and far between, the Great Eastern left her moorings almost unheeded. Rounding Calshott Castle the vessel was kept so close in shore, and turned with such marvellous ease and rapidity, as to excite to the utmost the astonishment and admiration of Mr. Murphy, the New York pilot, who was on board, and who, on seeing how much she was "in hand," at once expressed his belief that the Great Eastern could go anywhere where there was water. From Calshott she wound her way slowly past Cowes and Ryde, through Spithead, and round the south coast of the Isle of Wight.

After passing the Isle of Wight the vessel's course was shaped for the Start Light. The orders were given to keep both screw and paddles going easily ahead at little more than half speed till all had got into regular working order. Then the paddles started, when clear of the land, at about 7 revolutions and the screw at 24—a rate of speed which was only gradually increased during the night, when the former engines rose to a little over 8 and the screw to 27. At this rate all went very easily and well, the vessel going at 9 or 9½ knots. The injector-pipes for feeding the boilers, however, were soon found to be scarcely large enough for the duty, and the paddle-boilers accordingly had to be fed from the donkey-engines. It was also quickly ascertained that the new wooden casings for the forward funnels, and which were intended to assist in getting rid of the hot air, did not work at all, for all the hot air was most effectually kept inside the casing itself, which heated to such a degree as to require constant watching in case of accident. This casing will be removed, and an iron lattice-work substituted. The forward pair of boilers also of the paddles were more or less troublesome throughout the night, and, indeed, during the whole trip. They were constantly "priming," as it is termed, which means boiling so fiercely as occasionally to send the water as well as steam along the steam-pipe into the cylinders—an intrusion which, though not dangerous, is very annoying to engineers. This was found to arise from the foul state of the boilers, which had not, it was ascertained, been properly cleaned out, and is not likely to occur again.

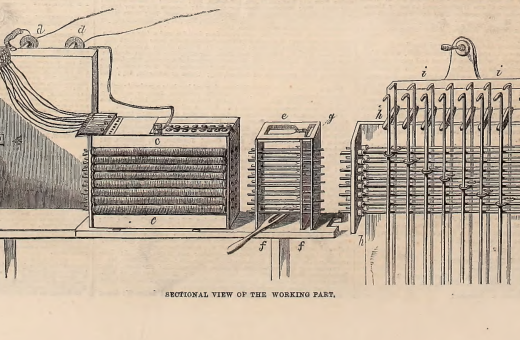
At one o'clock a.m. on Sunday the Great Eastern was abreast of the Start Light, when the helm was put hard over, and the huge vessel, even at low speed, turned completely round in a small circle in little over seven minutes. During this turn, as throughout the trial, there was a total absence of the uneasy wagging motion of the stem and stern which was so often felt last year. Its disappearance now was attributed entirely to the additional girders and diagonal bracings which had been latterly put in, and which, with the screw-tunnel, render the whole ship as rigid as a bolt. From the foul state of the vessel's bottom it was thought that her speed would not be at all considerable. At six a.m. on Sunday, however, the pressure was increased, and the revolutions of the paddles rose from 8 to 10½, and the screw from 27 to 39, but beyond this rate it seemed impossible to get them.

On the last run round from Holyhead to Southampton the screw worked easily at 43 revolutions, and the paddles at 12, and for a short time at 12½, at which time the vessel ran a clear 16 knots an hour. On this occasion, however—partly owing, we suppose, to the increased depth of the ship (two feet), and partly to the weedy condition of the bottom—nothing approaching this result could be obtained. Neither screw nor paddle ever went at a greater rate than the revolutions we have mentioned, and the greatest speed never exceeded 12¾ knots on hour. An average of 12¼ knots, however, was maintained with great ease and steadiness.

The vessel was taken back through Spithead in the same way that she went, and before one o'clock was once more fast at her moorings.

Both in her external appearance and her internal accommodation and fittings the Great Eastern now presents a very different aspect compared with the time when she first steamed up to her moorings in Southampton Water, in November last. The huge, black, coffin-like hull has now its sombre massiveness relieved by a broad streak of white, which, making an easy curve from stem to stern, gives lightness to her appearance, and shows off her beautiful lines to perfection. The row of black chimneys which also disfigured her have been painted cream colour, and these changes, with others as to the colour of her yards, make her look light and yacht-like, and more after the style of our swift seagoing packets than at first it seemed possible to produce in a vessel of such colossal proportions.

The Great Eastern is to sail to-day (Saturday) from Southampton for New York.



RECEPTION OF THE JAPANESE EMBASSY BY PRESIDENT BUCHANAN IN THE EAST ROOM OF THE WHITE HOUSE, WASHINGTON.—SEE NEXT PAGE.

BONELLI'S ELECTRIC SILK-LOOM

THE electric silk-loom invented by M. Bonelli, of Turin, formed the subject of the discourse by Professor Faraday on Friday the 8th inst., being the last of the evening meetings for the present year. The Duke of Wellington, vice-president, was in the chair. After some preliminary remarks on the connection of the subject with the motto of the Royal Institution, "Illustrans Commoda Vitæ" (Lucretius viii., 5), "shedding light upon the comforts of life," Mr. Faraday explained and exemplified the theory of weaving in its simplest form, and then dwelt upon the great advantages of the loom invented by Jacquard, and first exhibited at Paris in 1801. In this loom the office of a man or a boy to work the pattern is set aside by the employment of a series of cards pierced with holes, according to a required pattern. The more elaborate this is, of course the more cards will be needed; the number frequently rising to several thousands. In a robe made at Lyons for an Archbishop of Mexico 52,000 were employed. [An adequate description of the Jacquard loom could not be given without several diagrams and many words; we, therefore, refer our readers to a good encyclopædia, such as "Ure's Dictionary of Arts."] The preparation of the cards in this loom entails a large expense, through the time required for perforation, and then only serving for one pattern. M. Bonelli was therefore induced to endeavour to apply the electric current to this purpose. His loom, in the weaving part, is the same as Jacquard's, but his arrangement gets rid of the cards by substituting a perforated metal plate connected with electro-magnetic apparatus. The large Engraving gives a general view of the front of M. Bonelli's loom; and the smaller one is a sectional view of the working part, which we will endeavour to explain, with reference to the letters marked in it. a a is an endless band of paper, coated with tinfoil (a conductor of electricity), sustained by a revolving cylinder, on which a pattern is painted in black varnish, which is a non-conductor. This paper is made to pass under a series of thin metal teeth (b, b, b), each of which is in electric connection with one of the small electro-magnets, c, c, the whole being brought into the circuit of a galvanic battery by the wires d, d. One of the wires, d, is connected constantly with the tinfoil paper, a, while the other wire, d, is joined to the teeth, b, b, so that a current of electricity from the battery passes through each of the teeth as rest on the metallised or conducting surface of the paper, while no current can pass through those teeth which rest on the varnished non-conducting part. Thus, at every movement of the band of paper, each magnet becomes active or inactive, according to the pattern on the paper band. A movable frame, e, opposite to the ends of the horizontally-placed electro-magnets, c, c, are a series of small horizontal iron rods, or pistons, f, f, capable of sliding easily in the frame and passing through a pierced plate, g, attached to the front of it. When, by a mechanical arrangement, the ends of the pistons are brought into contact with the ends of the electro-magnets, the former are seized by such of the magnets as are in an active state, while the others are moved with the frame and fixed by the dropping of the plate g, so that all the holes in the plate occupied by them are filled. This action thus becomes the equivalent of the card in the Jacquard loom, and arranges the steel needles, h, h, which govern the crochets or hooks in connection with the warp threads. In conclusion, Professor Faraday explained and illustrated the methods devised by M. Bonelli to obviate the difficulties which he had to encounter in the course of his experiments, such as the deflagration of the tinfoil, when contact with the galvanic battery was made or broken; and the [continuance of the magnetic attraction after the current had ceased. It is stated that the superiority of the new loom mainly consists in the facility with which modifications may be made in the pattern or texture of the fabric, and in its being more independent of the workman; and also that a saving of 90 per cent may be effected in the production of complicated patterns.

FRONT OF THE LOOM.

SECTIONAL VIEW OF THE WORKING PART.

THE JAPANESE EMBASSY AT WASHINGTON.

THE arrival at Washington of the Japanese Ambassadors to the United States occasioned, as might be supposed, an extraordinary sensation, not only in that city, but throughout the whole of the States. We give some particulars, in addition to those already given, of their reception at Washington, in connection with the Engravings on pages 580 and 585.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune, under date of the 14th of May, furnishes an account of their arrival at that city, of which we give an abridgment:—At daybreak the Philadelphia, with the Ambassadors and Attachés on board, was steadily steaming up the Potomac, the Japanese artists taking views at every point. The Philadelphia stopped off Mount Vernon, the band playing a plaintive air, while the bell was kept mournfully tolling. The Ambassadors, through the interpreters, were informed of the history of the "Father of his country." At an early hour the Navy-yard was thronged with a dense multitude, including many ladies. At about half-past eleven a gun from the yard announced that a steamer was in sight, whereupon there was a wild rush to the wharves. The Philadelphia approached, while the marine band, on her upper-deck, played "The Star-spangled Banner." Mayor Berret went on board, and was introduced to the Ambassadors, extending to them a welcome in the name of the citizens of Washington, to which they acknowledged their thanks for the honour and the compliment. The treaty-box was first brought from the boat, and then followed the Japanese, under the escort of several naval officers. They passed as they landed between the American and Japanese flags. Having approached to where Captain Buchanan was standing, he, in the presence of his brother naval officers, welcomed them in the name of the President of the United States and the country, reciprocating the kind feelings expressed by the Japanese Government when the treaty was made by the gallant Perry. As an humble participator on this other interesting occasion he felt proud of being the medium of their reception on the part of his countrymen. The dignitaries thus addressed, through the interpreter, bowed their acknowledgments. While these ceremonies were progressing a salute was fired from the battery. The military were arranged on the side of the plankway, on which the visitors walked to the gate, where the cortège was formed. First, the President's mounted guard; then the Japanese in hacks; next the treaty in a large red morocco box, in a square stage. The marines and district militia followed, and there was music from several bands. The side-walks on Pennsylvania-avenue were crowded, and the windows filled. The interest excitement continued throughout the distance from the Navy-yard to the quarters of the Japanese, Willard's Hotel, which they reached at about a quarter to two o'clock. So dense was the crowd of pedestrians and carriages that the Japanese cortège occupied over an hour in going from the Capitol to Willard's. The resident populace was more excited and enthusiastic than ever before, and the whole march through the city was one perfect ovation. The reception-rooms at Willard's were densely thronged with the wives, sisters, and daughters of the dignitaries of the country, who were assembled to receive these welcomed visitors. Over an hour was spent in the exchange of courtesies before the wearied travellers were allowed to retire. The crowd then dispersed, and the military returned to their quarters.

The Japanese Embassy had audience of President Buchanan on the 17th of May. A little before noon they left the hotel in open carriages, policemen in front and rear, marines and ordnance-men on each side. In point of size and extravagance of embroidery the dresses of the Ambassadors were worthy the occasion. The naval officers and the officers of the army formed a line in the east room, which was destined to be the scene of the grand presentation, and at noon the folding doors were opened, and the President, accompanied by Secretary Cass then retired to his private apartments. After delivering their message they retired, but soon returned, bowing as before, when the President responded through the interpreter to the address they had delivered, concluding by handing them a copy of his speech. After the President had shaken hands with them the Cabinet officers were successively introduced, and then General Scott and Speaker Pennington. At the conclusion of the ceremonies the Ambassadors returned to their hotel in the order of their coming.

The ceremony of exchanging ratifications of the treaty with Japan took place on the 22nd ult., at the State Department. It consisted merely of comparing and certifying the correctness of the copies. On the 25th ult. the President entertained the Ambassadors at dinner, to which a number of distinguished gentlemen were invited.

The Japanese Ministers had determined, it was stated, to call only on such of the diplomatic corps as represent Powers having diplomatic relations with Japan. These include England, France Russia, and the Netherlands.

ILLUMINATION AND FIREWORKS AT PESHAWUR.

IN the Number of this Journal for the 7th of April last we gave an illustration of a grand procession of Sikh chiefs at Lahore on the occasion of a durbar held there by the Governor-General and the Commander-in-Chief. Another of those grand durbars which distinguished the progress of his Excellency the Governor-General and Viceroy of India was held at Peshawur on Wednesday, the 29th of February last, for the reception of the principal chiefs of the various hill tribes who had assembled from far and near to do homage to the representative of Queen Victoria. Here, as at all the principal towns which the Governor-General visited, the occasion was celebrated by illuminations and a display of fireworks, of both of which the natives are exceedingly fond; and they produce the finest effects by the most simple means. A little earthen dish, like a small flat cup, is used, filled with oil, and with a piece of cotton-wick in it. These lamps are provided in great numbers, and are placed in rows along the tops of the houses, upon the cornices of the shop fronts, over and under windows, around arches, and, in fact, wherever one of these tiny lamps can be placed. The effect is picturesque in the extreme. Everywhere the natives are sitting, perfectly still and quiet, in long rows, behind the lights, waiting patiently to see the Lord Sahib pass by.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE withdrawal of Lord Redesdale's bill has created some disappointment in the racing world, which is very much in favour of the 6st. limitation. His Lordship's chance of success was quite nullified, owing to the obstinacy with which he stuck to 7st. up to nearly the last, in the teeth of even those most friendlily disposed towards his bill. His assertion that the present system of handicaps spoils our breed of horses is quite a fallacy, as every breeder goes for as much bone and size as he can possibly get, in the hope that if the produce is not fast enough for racing purposes it will take with the foreigners, or as a country sire, or else become a hunter. What made so many trainers anxious for 6st. is the scarcity of really clever little jockeys under that weight, and the very natural idea that boys have no right to "waste," and starve, and physic, so early. Still, if 6st. had been adopted as one limit, it would have been necessary to make 10st. the other, so as to bring the top horses within racing weights. The Jockey Club proposition of 5st. 7lb. will be an improvement on the present one; but, as the three-year-old weight-for-age standard is to be raised to 8st. 10lb., Lord Derby might as well have adhered to the 5st. 10lb., which Admiral Rous and Sir Joseph Hawley have already proposed. The Bench of Bishops mustered very strongly to hear the debate; but of course there would have been a great rustling of lawn sleeves in the direction of the door if things had betokened a division.

Odiham, on Tuesday; Beverley, on Wednesday and Thursday; and the Hampshire Carnival on those two days and Friday, make up the programme for next week. Mouravieff is in the Stockbridge Triennial; Mainstone (3lb.) in the Biennial; Big Ben (3lb.) in the Two-Year-Old Biennial; and Promised Land (7lb. ex.), Rupee (7lb. ex.), Thormanby (10lb. ex.), Seclusion, Mainstone, Gaspard, Newcastle (7lb. ex.), Mouravieff, Schism, &c., in the Stewards' Plate. Seclusion, Folkestone, Big Ben, North Lincoln, and Walloon figure in the 200-Sov. Plate; and the latter and Diophantus (5lb. ex.) in the Mottesfont,—so that an interesting week may be expected.

We are glad to hear that the veteran Will Butler is going to don the scarlet once more, as huntsman to Earl Fitzwilliam in the Wentworth country. Will was "entered to the animal" by Mr. John Warde, about fifty years ago, and whipped into Charles King, when Lord Althorp had the Pytcheley country. Ten seasons as huntsman to Mr. Foljambe, and as many with the Badsworth, formed the very kernel of his huntsman's life; hence his present country is familiar ground to him, and if he only shows such sport as he once did in it during an interregnum, with only a scratch nine couple, and find as good foxes as the memorable one he killed, regardless of all shrine privileges, at Roche Abbey, he will not have been called back to the saddle in vain. Mr. White is still the master of the Essex and Suffolk, but we have not heard that his huntsman is appointed as yet; and Sir Thos. Lennard has taken the South Essex in hand, on the retirement of its stanch old "huntsman and manager" Mr. Abraham Cawston. The Yarborough prize hunting-whips, from Callow and Co., Park-lane, have been adjudged to Mr. W. F. Holgate, of Keelby, for Vaulter, and Mr. R. F. Bingham, of Swallow, for Courtly.

The morning of the Grimston sale was so hopeless in point of weather that there was "a highly-successful elimination" of at least two-thirds of the spectators which Yorkshire threatened to furnish. Nothing could have been more lucky, as it was as much as Mr. Tattersall and his cousin could do to keep the ring at all. The two or three "rurals" were perfectly helpless. We have seldom seen an audience behave worse; and at one time Mr. Tattersall was obliged to threaten to stop the sale unless some little order was maintained. The rain cleared off just as business commenced; but, considering the magnificent biddings, there was wonderfully little excitement. The previous valuation of the forty lots was £18,000; and they just made, exclusive of the fifty-guinea van, 20,699 gs. A son of Voltigeur and Ellerdale (500 gs.) was the highest-priced yearling; and he fell, along with a colt by Orlando from Boarding-School Miss (410 gs.), and a chestnut filly by Stockwell from Ennui (260 gs.), to Lord Stamford, who attended in person, with the Earl of Stradbroke, Baron Rothschild, Colonel Towneley, Mr. Greville, Mr. Naylor, Mr. Eastwood, Mr. Blenkiron, Mr. Harry Hill, and many other well-known turfites, breeders, jockeys, trainers, farmers, and prophets. The three highest-priced Stockwell yearlings averaged 303 gs., while West Australian's corresponding trio only made 163 gs.; and the fourteen just averaged 225 gs. A very fine half-brother to the Rap (350 gs.), which was very nearly damaged by breaking loose in the ring, went to one of Mr. John Scott's masters, and a filly by the same horse from Marchioness to Colonel Towneley. Mr. Eastwood bid with great spirit on behalf of the Colonel for the mares, and not only did Boarding-School Miss (400 gs.), Florence (210 gs.), and Ellermire (610 gs.), go to the Whitwell stud farm, but Mr. Fisher only shook him off at 1260 gs. for Gildermire. Mr. Blenkiron bought Ellerdale (1120 gs.), Ennui (450 gs.), and Epaulette (150 gs.), as consorts for his beautiful Kingston; and her Majesty's commissioner, Colonel Maud, fixed his affections successfully on Countess of Albemarle (210 gs.), Garnish (260 gs.), and Eldorado (340 gs.) Mr. Fisher's cheque for his four purchases—Rose de Florence, Juliet, Gildermire, and Marchioness—amounted to £3276; and we believe that the quartet, with their one West Australian and two Stockwell foals, are to be shipped forthwith to Adelaide. The twenty-three mares averaged about 410 gs., a price perfectly unparalleled in the Tattersall annals. Four of them had no foals, and the twenty at their feet were all Stockwells or West Australians, with the exception of one Warlock, and twins by Alarm. Ellerdale and her three scions made exactly 3940 gs. Yorkshire had generally set Stockwell at 5000 gs., and "The West" at 3500 gs.; and they both just came within 500 gs. of the estimate. The former was purchased by Mr. Naylor, of Cheshire, after a keen struggle with the commissioner of the Emperor of the French. The chestnut was shedding his coat, and seemed rather dull, while West Australian raised his beautiful white reach head and gazed proudly round him. It seemed rather to touch the pride of the tykes that their pet horse did not outstrip the southern-bred one, and many and involved were the arguments thereon. Stockwell goes to the Rawcliffe paddocks, and The West to Chantilly, while Warlock (620 gs.) is destined for the Sheffield-lane paddocks. The three cost originally rather above 10,000 gs.; but, what with The West's winnings, and his and Stockwell's large subscriptions for five seasons, the two have brought it back with compound interest. Three St. Leger winners never before stood up to be sold in succession, and probably never will again.

The Champion cricketers have been rather unexpectedly beaten by three wickets at Manchester. The slow bowling of Tinley, the fine batting of Anderson, and the capital wicket-keeping of Lockhart, all told their tale; and it is remarkable that the latter (who received a silver cigar-case as a recognition of genius) was stumped and caught by Lockyer in his two innings. On Monday Sixteen of the University of Cambridge played Eleven of England at Lord's; and the All England engage Twenty-two of Lincolnshire at Lincoln. Eton is the battle-ground on Wednesday for the M.C.C. and Ground against the present Etonians; while on Thursday the I Zingari v. Eleven Gentlemen of England at Lord's, Surrey v. Sixteen of Cambridge University, and the All England Eleven v. Eighteen of the Broughton Club at Broughton are the issues of the willow.

ROYAL LONDON YACHT CLUB.—Wednesday was the great day of this club. The following were the competing craft:—

FIRST CLASS.
(A silver tankard, value £50, for the first boat; silver plate piece for the second; and £10 in specie for the third.)

Yachts.	Tons.	Owners.
Audax	60	Mr. J. H. Johnson.
Glance	36	Mr. A. Duncan.
Thought	27	Mr. F. O. Marshall.

SECOND CLASS.
(A claret-jug and salver for the first boat; £10 for the second; and £5 for the third.)

Yachts.	Tons.	Owners.
Laura	20	Lieut.-Col. Armitage.
Gipsy	20	Mr. J. F. Delany.
Kitten	13	Mr. R. J. Leach.

The distance was from Erith to the Nore Light and back for the larger boats, and from Erith to Southend and back for the smaller. The Audax came in first, but lost the first prize owing to the Thought coming in within her time, the race finishing thus:—

Audax..	5h. 3m.
Laura, winner of the second class	5h. 9m.
Thought, winner of the first class	5h. 16m.
Glance	5h. 20m.
Kitten	5h. 25½m.

CRICKET.—The match between the "Champion Eleven," who visited America last autumn and another Eleven of All England was, after three days' play, brought to a close at Old Trafford last Saturday evening, and terminated in the victory of the latter, with three wickets to spare. The following is the score:—The Champion Eleven, 1st innings, 83; 2nd innings, 57. The England Eleven, 1st innings, 40; 2nd innings, 101.

Sixteen of Kent v. Eleven of England: This match, which was begun on Monday, was concluded on Wednesday, Kent winning by 32 runs. Score:—Kent, first innings, 124; second, 42. England, first innings, 80; second, 54.

On Monday and Tuesday next it is intended to have a great regatta by the boats of the ships of the Channel Fleet, on the Firth of Forth.

The three large Government banks at St. Petersburg are to be amalgamated into one national institution, of which Baron Steiglitz is to be the first governor.

THE RECENT GALES.—We continue to receive details of the loss of vessels and their crews during the late gales. The poor fishermen of Yarmouth and its neighbourhood have suffered most severely. An exploring expedition was dispatched in search of twenty fishing-vessels, which, with two hundred souls on board, left Yarmouth and Lowestoft before the gales commenced; and, from the information which the expedition brought back, it is feared that the whole of the missing party have perished on the coast of Holland.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

ALTHOUGH the general tone of the market for Home Securities has continued steady, arising, in some measure, from an official declaration on the part of Ministers that no foreign intervention is likely to take place between the King of Naples and the Sicilians, the actual business operations, both for Money and Time, have been unimportant, but without leading to any change of moment in the quotations.

Both at the Bank of England and in Lombard-street there has been an increased demand for accommodation, and, notwithstanding that the supply of capital is large, the rates have, in some instances, had an upward tendency. In Lombard-street, and at the large discount houses, short first-class bills have been done at 3¾ to 4; three months', at 4; four months', at 4¼ to 4½; and six months', at 4¼ to 4¾ per cent.

From various sources about £400,000 in bullion has reached us, and we learn that the value of the gold now on passage from Australia is £769,000. A few parcels have been sold to the Bank, and the demand for export to the Continent, owing to the favourable nature of the exchanges, is still limited. The steamer to sail on the 20th inst. will take out about £100,000 in specie on Government, and £350,000, almost wholly in silver, on merchants' account.

A proposition has been lately made to reduce brokers' charges on the sale and purchase of railway shares and other securities. The Committee of the Stock Exchange, to whom it was submitted, have, however, intimated that they "decline to make any resolution to enforce a scale of brokerage," but that they will be ready to recommend any scale that may be proposed by the general body of brokers themselves.

The transactions in the shares of the newly-formed companies have been very moderate; nevertheless, on the whole, the quotations have continued steady. Ocean Marine Insurance have realised 1½ to 1¾ prem.; Thames and Mersey Marine, 1 3-16 to 1 5-16 prem.; Universal Marine Insurance, ¼ to ½ prem.; London and Provincial Marine, ⅜ to ¼ dis.; City of London Brewery Preference, ¼ dis. to par; Pneumatic Despatch Company, ¼ to 1 prem.

On Monday there was only a limited business passing in Home Stocks. Prices, however, were steady. The Reduced Three per Cents realised 93⅜ ¼; Consols, special transfer, 94½; Ditto, ex div., 93⅜ ⅝; New Three per Cents, 93¼ ⅜; Indian Bonds, 5s. dis.; Exchequer Bills, 12s. prem.; India Five per Cent Paper was done at 97⅝ ½ ⅜; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 102⅞. Tuesday's business was restricted, yet the quotations were firm:—Bank Stock touched 230; Reduced Three per Cents, 92⅞ ½; New Three per Cents, 93⅜ ½; India Five per Cent Rupee Paper, 97¼ ⅜; Ditto Debentures, 1858, 96½ ⅜; Consols, for Account, 93¾ ⅝; Exchequer Bills, 8s. to 12s. prem. Although the Paris Bourse was somewhat active, the rise in prices on the following day was trifling:—The Reduced Three per Cents left off at 93½ ⅜; New Three per Cents, 93⅜ ½; Consols, for Account, 93¾ ⅝; India Five-and-a-Half per Cent Paper, 102½; Ditto, Debentures, 1858, 96⅜; Ditto Bonds, 10s. dis.; India Five per Cents, for Account, were 104¾; and Exchequer Bills, owing to some heavy sales, declined to 5s. to 9s. prem. On Thursday most securities were rather heavy:—Consols, ex div., were done at 93⅜ ¾; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 93⅜ ½; Long Annuities, 17¼; India Debentures, 96¼ ⅜; Exchequer Bills, 2s. to 4s. prem; India Five-and-a-Half per Cent Paper was 97¾ ⅞; and Bank Stock, 230.

British Guiana is about to raise a loan in our market in debentures of £500 and £1000, bearing 6 per cent interest from the 1st proximo.

The dealings in the Foreign House have been somewhat restricted; nevertheless, compared with last week, no change of importance has taken place in the quotations. The leading figures for the week are as follows:—Brazilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 1860, 87¾; Grenada Deferred, 45; Ditto, New, 4½; Mexican Three per Cents, 21½; Russian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 97¾; Russian Three per Cents, 64; Spanish Three per Cents, 48½; Ditto, New Deferred, 38⅜; Turkish Six per Cents, 76½; Ditto, New, 59½; Venezuela Three per Cents, 25½; Ditto, New, 13; Austrian Five per Cents, 53¾; Dutch Four per Cents, 101½.

Joint-stock Bank Shares have ruled firm in price, and a fair amount of business has been transacted in them:—Australasia have realised 65½; Bank of London, 55; Bank of Turkey, 1¾; British North American, 52; Chartered of India, Australia, and China, 20; City, 75½; English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered, 16½; London Chartered of Australia, 23⅜; London and County, 36; London Joint-stock, 33½; London and Westminster, 61; Ottoman, 18¼; Provincial of Ireland, 88⅝; Union of Australia, 43¾; and Union of London, 24¼.

Colonial Government Securities have changed hands to a moderate extent only, at about previous rates:—Canada Six per Cents, January and July, at 115½; New South Wales Six per Cents, 1888 and upwards, 100⅜; Victoria Six per Cents, January and July, 105; Ditto, April and October, at 107.

The Miscellaneous Market has continued inactive, as follows:—Australian Agricultural, 31; Crystal Palace, 81½; Ditto, Preference, 100; English and Australian Copper, 2½; Great Ship, ⅜; General Steam, 25½; Peninsular and Oriental Steam, 76; Ditto, New, 38; South Australian Land, 34¾; London Docks, 66½; Coventry Canal, 227½; Grand Junction, 59; Regent's, 21; Chelsea Waterworks, 17½; Lambeth, 99½; West Middlesex, 107; Waterloo Bridge, 2¾.

Alliance Maine Insurance Company's shares have marked 68½; Atlas, 16⅜; Globe, 101; Indemnity Marine, 160; Marine, 109; Phœnix, 175 ex div. and ex bonus; Royal Exchange, 309; Equitable Gas, 54½; Great Central, 8½ ex div.; United General, 22½; Westminster Chartered, 62½.

The Railway Share Market has shown signs of weakness, and prices have tended downwards, arising, possibly, from the settlement of the accounts, which, on the whole, has passed off steadily. The traffic returns, almost generally, continue very favourable. Annexed are Thursday's official closing quotations for money:—

ORDINARY SHARES AND STOCKS.—Caledonian, 91½; Eastern Counties, 54¾; Great Western, 68¾; Lancashire and Yorkshire, 104¾; London and Blackwall, 70¾; London and Brighton, 114½; London and North-Western, 101½; London and South-Western, 93¾; North-Eastern, Berwick, 95¾; Nottingham and Grantham Railway and Canal, 6⅜; South-Eastern, 85⅜.

LINES LEASED AT FIXED RENTALS.—Chester and Holyhead, 51¾; Lancaster and Carlisle, 208; Northern and Eastern, 56½; North-Western, 14⅝.

PREFERENCE SHARES.—Great Western, Four-and-Half Per Cent, 100½; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, £6, 5⅛; North-Eastern, G. N. E. Four per Cent, 96; Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton, First Guarantee, 125; South Wales, Four-and-a-Half per Cent, 100.

BRITISH POSSESSIONS.—Bombay, Baroda, and Central India, 97; Ditto, B, 12⅝; East India, 102¼; Grand Trunk of Canada, 31; Ditto, Six per Cent Preference, 91¼; Ditto, Second Preference, 79; Ditto, Debenture, 59¾; Ditto, Seven per Cent, 1862, 67; Great India Peninsula, 99¾; Great Western of Canada, New, 9¼.

FOREIGN.—San Paulo, 1⅜; South Austria and Lombardo-Venetian, 12.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, June 11.—The supply of home-grown wheat on sale here to-day was moderate, but in fair average condition. Both red and white qualities were in fair request, at 1s. to 2s. per quarter above last Monday's currency. In foreign wheat—the show of which was rather limited—very little was passing, at 2s. advance. Floating cargoes realised rather more money, and all kinds of barley realised extreme rates. The malt trade was in a sluggish state, on former terms. There was a good consumptive inquiry for oats, at an improvement in value of 6d. per quarter. Both beans and peas were the turn dearer, with a fair demand. The flour trade was steady. Country marks advanced 2s.; town-made, 4s. per 280lb.

June 11.—The show of wheat samples was good, and the demand was much less active than on Monday; nevertheless, that day's currency was supported. All spring corn and most qualities of flour were steady in price.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 48s. to 59s.; ditto, white, 52s. to 61s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 49s. to 58s.; rye, 30s. to 34s.; grinding barley, 28s. to 30s.; distilling ditto, 30s. to 31s.; malting ditto, 30s. to 36s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 52s. to 69s.; brown ditto, 48s. to 49s.; Kingston and Ware, 56s. to 69s.; Chevalier, 70s. to 72s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 22s. to 27s.; potato ditto, 28s. to 31s.; Youghal and Cork, black, 22s. to 27s.; ditto, white, 23s. to 29s.; tick beans, 33s. to 40s.; grey peas, 37s. to 39s.; maple, 19s. to 41s.; white, 36s. to 39s.; boilers, 39s. to 41s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 50s. to 54s.; town households, 46s. to 50s.; country marks, 40s. to 41s. per 280lb.; American, 27s. to 33s. per barrel; French, 37s. to 44s. per sack.

Seeds.—For most kinds of seed the demand continues very inactive; but, compared with last week, we have no change to notice in prices. Cakes are a slow inquiry.

Linseed, English crushing, 54s. to 58s.; Calcutta, 48s. to 49s. 0d.; hempseed, 38s. to 40s. per quarter; coriander, 14s. to 16s. per cwt.; tares, 7s. to 8s. 0d. per bushel; English rapeseed, 62s. to 66s. per quarter. Linseed cakes, English, £9 10s. to £10 10s.; ditto, foreign, £9 10s. to £11 0s.; rape cakes, £5 0s. to £6 0s. per ton. Canary, 46s. to 52s. per quarter. White clover, 81s. to 90s. per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 8d. to 9d.; of household ditto, 6d. to 7½d. per four-pound loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 51s. 2d.; barley, 35s. 0d.; oats, 27s. 8d.; rye, 38s. 1d.; beans, 45s. 9d.; peas, 40s. 8d.

The Six Weeks' Averages.—Wheat, 52s. 10d.; barley, 36s. 5d.; oats, 26s. 3d.; rye, 31s. 6d.; beans, 44s. 1d.; peas, 40s. 4d.

English Grain Sold last Week.—Wheat, 86,128; barley, 2148; oats, 3673; rye, 101; beans, 2160; peas, 219 quarters.

Tea.—The public sales have closed slowly, and, in some instances, the quotations have had a drooping tendency. The stock in the United Kingdom is 72,892,000lb., against 70,035,000lb. at the corresponding period in 1859.

Sugar.—About an average business has been passing in most descriptions of raw sugar but at a further decline in value of 6d. per cwt. Refined goods are a slow sale, at about previous currency. The stock of sugar is now about 13,000 tons in excess of last year.

Coffee.—Nearly all kinds are in fair, though not to say active, request, at full quotations. The market continues to be well supplied with Ceylon qualities.

Rice.—A large business has been passing in most kinds, and prices have had an upward tendency.

Provisions.—Most descriptions of butter are in fair request, but the late high prices are not supported. The best Friesland is quoted at 98s. per cwt. Bacon moves off freely, and the quotations are the turn dearer. All other provisions support previous rates.

Tallow.—The market is steady, and P.Y.C. on the spot, is still quoted at 52s. to 52s 3d. per cwt. The quotations for the last three months are 51s. 9d. to 52s.

Oils.—Linseed oil is steady, at 28s. 3d. per cwt. on the spot. Most other oils are a slow inquiry, at barely previous rates. Spirits of turpentine are quoted at 34s. to 35s. Rough is selling at 9s. per cwt.

Spirits.—The demand for rum continues inactive at 1s. 7d. to 1s. 8d for proof East India, and 1s 8d. to 1s. 9d. for Leewards. Brandy maintains its previous value, and grain spirits are steady in price.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 to £4 15s.; clover ditto, £4 to £5 15s.; and straw £1 6s. to £1 14s. per load. Trade steady.

Coals.—Best house coals, 18s. 6d. to 19s.; seconds, 16s. 6d. to 18s.; Hartley's, 15s. 6d. to 16s. 3d.; and manufacturers', 13s. 3d. to 15s. per ton. A fair trade.

Hops.—Owing to the late heavy rains there is more business doing in hops, and, in some instances, the rates have an upward tendency.

Wool.—English qualities move off steadily, at very full prices; but foreign and colonial parcels are very dull. The stock in London is now about 60,000 bales.

Potatoes.—Old qualities—the supplies of which are seasonably good—move off slowly, at from 75s. to 120s. per ton. New potatoes are selling at from 8s to 16s. per cwt.

Metropolitan Cattle Market (Thursday, June 14).—Our market to-day was very scantily supplied with beasts, in mostly poor condition. The few prime breeds on offer commanded fully Monday's currency. Otherwise, the beef trade was very inactive, on former terms. Sheep—the show of which was only moderate—moved off freely, at full quotations. There was an improved inquiry for lambs, at Monday's decline in value. We had an active sale for calves, at 2d. to 4d. per 8lb. more money. Both pigs and milch cows commanded extreme rates, with a fair demand. Per 8lb. to sink the offal: Coarse and inferior beasts, 4s. 4d. to 4s. 6d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 10d. to 5s. 2d.; prime large oxen, 5s. 4d. to 5s. 8d.; prime Scots, &c., 5s. 8d. to 5s. 10d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 4s. 0d. to 4s. 4d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 6d to 4s. 10d.; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 5s. 0d. to 5s. 2d.; prime Southdown ditto, 5s. 4d. to 5s. 6d.; large coarse calves, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 2d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 4d. to 5s. 8d.; large hogs, 4s. 0d. to 4s. 6d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 8d. to 5s. 0d.; lambs, 5s. 4d. to 7s. 0d.; suckling calves, 19s. to 22s.; and quarter-old store pigs, 23s. to 30s. each. Total supply: Beasts, 709; cows, 136; sheep and lambs, 5900; calves, 420; pigs, 220. Foreign: Beasts, 251; sheep and lambs, 1400; calves, 283.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—A moderate business is doing in these markets, as follows:—Beef, from 4s. 4d. to 5s. 0d.; mutton, 4s. 4d. to 5s. 0d.; lamb, 5s. 2d. to 6s. 4d.; veal, 4s. 6d. to 4s. 8d.; pork, 4s. 4d. to 5s. 4d. per 8lb. by the carcase. ROBERT HERBERT.

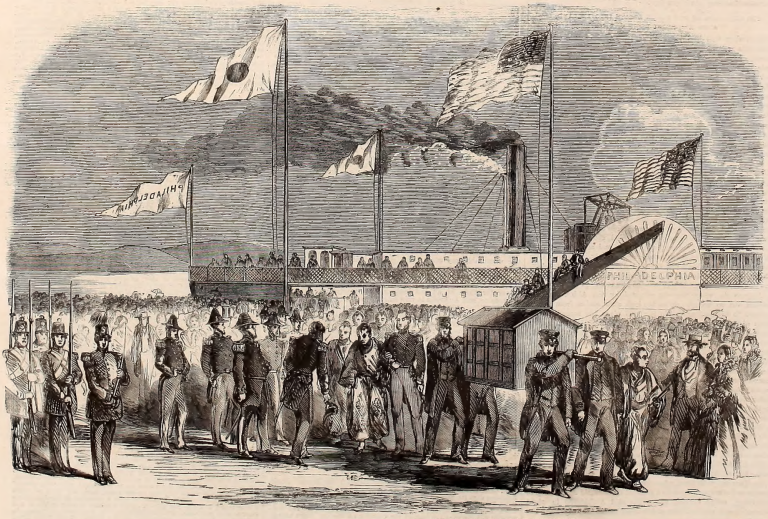
CHAPPELL'S FOREIGN MODEL PIANOFORTE, price Fifty Guineas. This instrument has (unlike the ordinary Cottage Pianoforte) Three Strings and the fullest Grand Compass of Seven Octaves. It is strengthened by every possible means to endure the greatest amount of wear, and to stand perfectly in any climate. The workmanship is of the best description; the tone is round, full, and rich; and the power equal to that of a Bichord Grand. The case is of the most elegant description, in rosewood; the touch elastic, and the repetition very rapid. Every possible precaution has been taken to ensure its standing well in tune. Chappell and Co. especially invite the attention of the public, the profession, and merchants, to the Foreign Model, feeling assured that no Pianoforte, in all respects comparable, has hitherto been made in England at the same price. Every instrument will be warranted, and (if desired) exchanged within twelve months of the purchase.—50, New Bond-street, London.

HARMONIUMS at CHAPPELL'S.—The HARMONIUM by ALEXANDRE is the only instrument of the kind that remains in tune; from the simplicity of its construction is but slightly affected by changes of weather, and is alike calculated for the Church, Chapel, School, or Drawing-room.

No. 1. In oak case, one stop, 5 octaves, 10 guineas.
2. In mahogany case, one stop, 12 guineas.
3. In oak case, 3 stops, 15 guineas; rosewood, 16 guineas.
4. With five stops—oak, 22 guineas; rosewood, 23 guineas.
5. Eight stops—oak, 25 guineas; rosewood, 26 guineas.
6. Twelve stops—oak or rosewood, 35 guineas.
7. One stop, and percussion action, in oak, 16 guineas.
8. Three stops, and percussion action, in rosewood, 20 guineas.
9. Eight stops, percussion action, oak or rosewood, 32 guineas.
10. Twelve stops, percussion action, in oak, 40 guineas.
11. Twelve stops, percussion action, large size, in rosewood, 45 guineas.
12. The new patent model—15 stops, percussion action, expression à la main, &c.; the most perfect Harmonium that can be made, in handsome oak or rosewood case, 55 guineas.



Full descriptive lists on application.

Relics of the Past.

THE RECEPTION OF CARDINAL CAMPEJUS ON HIS VISIT TO ENGLAND IN 1518.

AT the moment when the question of restoring diplomatic relations with the Court of Rome is likely to occupy some attention the fol-lowing picturesque narrative, never before printed, of the reception given to the Pope's Legate in the reign of "bluff King Hal" will not be without interest either to the scholar or the general reader. The name of Cardinal Campejus, or Campeggio, is familiar to everybody as one of the characters in Shakspeare's play of "Henry VIII." Though true as the great dramatist invariably is to every really important feature of the history, he does not occupy a very prominent part in the business of the play, his thoughts, words, and actions being entirely subservient to those of Wolsey, with whom he has been appointed by the Pope to act as joint assessor in the trial of Queen Catherine's divorce. It is not, however, of that visit we have now to speak. Ten years before the famous divorce question had been mooted Campeggio was sent here by Leo X. upon a very different mission, and on this occasion Wolsey, though in the plenitude of political power and honour—having but recently attained the dignity of Cardinal—was not a little jealous of the Papal Envoy. He accordingly resolved that if Campeggio was admitted to this country as Legate he himself should be appointed Legate also; and, backed by Henry's influence with the Pope, he succeeded in obtaining a bull to the desired effect. Alas!

> We, ignorant of ourselves,
> Beg often our own harms.

It was the most invidious distinction he had ever gained. The temporal Lords had long entertained an animosity against him, and, after this requisition, the spiritual Peers also rebelled at his ascendancy, for he took precedence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and it was said accounted himself equal to the King.

The purpose of Campeggio's first mission was to induce Henry to join in active measures for the defence of Europe against the Turks. The Pope had taken advantage of a brief interval of peace in Christendom to send Legates to all the great Powers for this important object, and not without reason, for ever since the capture of Constantinople the Turks had been encroaching more and more upon Christian Europe, making inroads into Hungary, ravaging the shores of the Mediterranean, and putting the Pope himself in fear that he might be driven out of Europe. The difficulty of making any successful resistance to them was increased tenfold by the dissensions among Christian Princes and the want of confidence in the Papal Government. Henry VII, had been applied to for aid, but that politic Prince knew too well the value of money to place it, even for the best of purposes, at the disposal of such a character as Pope Alexander VI. Leo X., however, if not a very religious Pontiff, was, at all events, not a Borgia; and Henry VIII., more liberal than his father, was disposed to do something for Christianity and civilisation. He had written to the Pope, promising his aid in a joint enterprise of European Powers; an unwonted cordiality prevailed between him and France (it was just two years before the famous Field of the Cloth of Gold); and for the time everything appeared favourable to the simultaneous action of all Christian potentates.

Coming on such a mission, it was natural that a Papal Legate should meet with a magnificent reception, and the contemporary account of it from the Harleian MS. 433 (f. 293), must be regarded as a very curious record of a time when "pride, pomp, and circumstance" were so much more indispensable in missions of political importance than they are in our day:—

THE RECEIVING OF THE POPE'S LEGATE INTO ENGLAND, ANNO X^{MO} REGNI REGIS H. VIII.

Memorandum that the Friday, the 23rd day of the month of July, the year of our Lord God 1518, and the 10th year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord King Henry VIII. that now reigneth, the Pope's Legate, called Dominus Laurentius de Campegio, arrived at a place called the Deele, beside Sandwich, where the Bishop of Chichester, the Lord of Burgevenny, and the Lord Cobham, with a great number of estates and gentlemen of Kent, received him, and so from thence conveyed him to Sandwich aforesaid, where he rested that night.

The Saturday next the said bishop, lords, estates, and gentlemen conveyed him from thence to Canterbury, where he was between nine and ten of the clock before noon; and afore his entry there, changing his apparel, was received by all the clergy and religious men there, and also by the Mayor of that city, with the Aldermen, and so brought to the gates of Christchurch, where the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Rochester, with the Abbots of St. Augustine's and Feversham, the Priors of Christchurch and of St. Gregory's, being all in pontificalibus, received him solemnly. And after he had kissed the Holy Crucifix he was brought up to the high altar, the monks singing "Summæ Trinitati," &c. And thereupon the Archbishop of Canterbury sang certain orisons over him. After that he kissed certain relics, and so was had to St. Thomas's shrine with an anthem of St. Thomas; which ended, the said Legate sang the collect, "Deus, pro cujus ecclesia," &c., and afterwards turned him to the people and gave his benediction solemnly. This done, then he returned again to his mule, the said Archbishop of Canterbury, with all the said lords and nobles, giving still their attendances upon him, and so conveyed and brought him riding to the Abbey of St. Augustine's, where he was received by the Abbot and his brethren, and so brought up to the high altar, and so from thence conveyed to his lodging within the said place, the foresaid Archbishop of Canterbury then returning to his palace there, having with him the most part of the said estates, nobles, and company to dinner. And so the said Legate was there lodged that night and the next also.

The Sunday then next the said Legate rested within the said Monastery of St. Augustine's, and the same day he was at a solemn mass in the choir; and after mass had a great dinner there, when the said Archbishop of Canterbury, with all the said nobles and estates, dined; and after dinner he went to Christchurch, where he saw the shrine of St. Thomas and other relics of that church, and so then returned again to his mule, and was conveyed to his lodging at St. Augustine's aforesaid for that night.

On Monday, early in the morning, when it thundered, lightened, and rained sore, he took his journey, accompanied with the said Bishops, Lords, estates and gentlemen towards Sittingbourne, where he dined. And at afternoon rode unto the Abbey of Boxley, there resting him all that night.

The Tuesday then next, after his breakfast was made, he was, likewise as before, conveyed to a place of the foresaid Archbishop of Canterbury, called Otford, where the said Archbishop in right honourable wise received him, and so there rested that night and the next after. So that——

The Wednesday then, and all that season of two days and two nights, the said Archbishop made unto the said Legate, with all his, and other all the lords and estates coming with him, goodly and great cheer, besides many and divers pleasures and goodly pastimes made and showed unto him by the said Archbishop.

The Thursday then, in the morning, he was conveyed to Lewisham, beside Greenwich, where they dined at one Mr. William Hattecliff's place, one of the clerks of the Green Cloth. And after dinner, about one of the clock, he was brought to Blackheath, where the Duke of Norfolk with divers and many lords and nobles appointed in a great number, tarried his coming. And so there met, saluted, and received him in the best manner, the Bishop of Durham saying a short oration in congratulation of his coming; and thereupon all the company set in an order, according to their degrees, to the number of 2000 horses or mo. The said Legate then proceeded in his journey towards London, and beyond St. Thomas Watering, in a great meadow, there was set the King's tent, a marvellous rich thing, wherein the said Legate changed his apparel and his mule and thereupon rode forth to London, with his cross borne before him, two pillars and two ballaxes (poleaxes), all the nobles and gentles, as esquires, knights, and lords, both spiritual and temporal, riding in good order before him; and next after him rode his own brother, a prothonotary, joined with him a bishop of Ireland called Mr. Thomas Halsey, an Englishman born. And all the Legate's servants riding after in order, clothed in gowns, hats, and hosen, all red colour. And next after them came the Archbishop of Canterbury's servants, to the number of 200 horses, set in good order, and all of one livery, with red hats, except chaplains. And so the said legate, coming and passing through the religious persons,—and all the clergy of London standing in order of both sides of the street, all the ways of his coming, in rich copes of gold, with their goodly crosses and censers,—at London-bridge the said Legate was saluted by an oration, a short thing. The crafts of London began their order in Gracious-street, and in the Cheapside the Mayor of London, with all the Aldermen, welcomed him; and there a brief oration and salutation was made to the said Legate in Latin, by Mr. More.* At Paul's Church he was received by the Bishops of Lincoln and London, and all the ministers of Paul's; and there the Bishop of London said short oration, and afterwards he was had up to the high altar, and so returned again to his mule, and then was conveyed and brought from thence to Bath's place,† his lodging.

As an amusing pendent to these gorgeous doings we must add the following anecdote, related by Hall, the Chronicler, of a ludicrous accident which befel the Legate's impedimenta in passing through what is now called Cheapside:—

"The night before he came to London the Cardinal of York, to furnish the carriages of the Cardinal Campeius, sent to him twelve mulettes with empty coffers covered with red; which twelve mulettes were led through London amongst the mulettes of Campeius, which were but eight; and so these twenty mulettes passed through the streets as though they had been full of treasures, apparel, and other necessaries. And when they came into Cheap, one of the mulettes brake from her keeper, and overthrew the chests, and overturned two or three other mulettes' carriages, which fell with such a violence that divers of them unlocked, and out of some fell old hosen, broken shoen, and roasted flesh, pieces of bread, eggs, and much vile baggage. At which sight the boys cried, 'See! see! my Lord Legate's treasure!' And so the muleteers were ashamed, and took up all their stuff and passed forth."

Who does not heartily sympathise with the boys of the sixteenth century?

* Afterwards the famous Sir Thomas More.
† The Bishop of Bath's house.

THE FARM.

THE heavy rains recently have completely stopped all preparation of fallows for green crops. The wheat has also suffered considerably, and, although pretty good in colour, it is thin on the ground, and storm-broken in many places. In fact, when the land is in good heart no plant requires less wet, and in the tropical summer of '26 it was the only one which could make head at all. To all present seeming the harvest will be a late and a doubtful one, and, as a farmer with 500 quarters of old wheat in his granary is a marvel to his fellows at the market table, holders may well calculate that the old "legitimate sixty" will rule till harvest. The grazing-grounds are all suffering from superabundant moisture, and beasts have shown a strong disposition to scour upon them. The scythe has scarcely been put into any meadows as yet, even in the south; and the thickness of the under-growth, which has been somewhat starved by the extra days of rain, is such as to promise a very heavy crop for the July mowings. Last year's rot among turnips has set many farmers almost mangel mad, and it is calculated that at least ten times the acreage in some counties is being sown with it. Too many are apt to forget that this root is one of the most exhaustive in the farm catalogue, and that no land is ripe for it unless there has been a great previous increase in the cake and bone bills. There is comfort in store for the meat-consumers, as the present high prices will tempt the farmers to send everything to market, and the increase of summer pasturage will enable them to keep up a regular and fair supply. The rise in the price of wool has been a remarkable feature; and the humble days of twenty-eight shillings a tod seem to have quite faded from memory. The best long staple clips are now worth fifty shillings, which is within six shillings of the memorable era when "the golden farmers" could sell their golden fleeces at two shillings per pound. It must, however, be remembered that long wools of such value can only be grown under a few degrees of latitude. Hence France has become a good customer for them at all the leading wool marts from Lincoln to Ballinasloe, and Australia is now fully alive to the same fact.

At the West of England Show Mr. George Turner and Mr. E. Pope were the most successful exhibitors of Devons, the former getting three firsts and two seconds in the six classes. In the class for Hereford bulls under three years old Mr. Duckham, the editor of the Hereford Herd Book, was second with his Franklyn. Mr. Stratton, of Broadhinton, was in good force with his shorthorns, of which Duke Humphrey, Hickory Nut, and Matchless 6th all got first prizes; and Sultana 2nd, Harmless 3rd, Kathleen, and Queen of the Harem were in the second rank. Matchless 6th is the first daughter of the prize Warwick cow, and does her ample justice with her nice flank, good back and breast, and neat bone. At Worcester she had a first prize, and was also highly commended in Faith's class at Warwick last year. Mr. George Turner was as successful with his Leicesters as Mr. Wood and Mr. Harding with their Southdowns, or Mr. John Moore with his Hampshires; and Lady Pigot beat all the West Countrie with her Suffolk mare and foal.

Mr. E. Newman, of Ealing, one of the very stanchest advocates of tenant right in the kingdom, has just published a third edition of his pamphlet on the subject. It is dedicated to Mr. Tollemache, M.P., and gives in detail the compensating covenants of that gentleman's estate.

HOME CIRCUIT.—The Judges appointed for the Home Circuit, Lord Chief Justice Cockburn and Mr. Justice Blackburn, have fixed the following days for holding the assizes in the different counties:—Hertfordshire, Tuesday, July 10; Essex, Monday, July 16; Sussex, Friday, July 20; Kent, Thursday, July 26; and Surrey, Thursday, August 2. The commission will be opened in each of the counties on the day above named, and business will be proceeded with on the following morning. The special juries in Surrey will be summoned to attend on Monday, the 6th of August.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE EARL OF STRAFFORD.

THE Right Hon. Sir John Byng, G.C.B., G.C.H., Earl of Strafford, Viscount Enfield of Enfield, and Baron Strafford, of Harmondsworth, in the county of Middlesex, was a scion of that branch of the noble house of Torrington, the Byngs of Wrotham, which for more than a century have so creditably represented Middlesex in Parliament. He was the third son of George Byng, Esq., of Wrotham Park, Middlesex, by his first wife, Anne, eldest daughter of Thomas Wentworth, Earl of Strafford and coheir of her brother William, the second Earl, and was the younger brother of the well-known and popular member for Middlesex, the late George Byng, Esq., of Wrotham. His grandfather, the Hon. Robert Byng, was the third son of George, first Viscount Torrington, and his uncle, Robert Byng, was one of the victims of the Black Hole of Calcutta. John Byng was born in London, in 1779, and entered the British Army in 1793; his first services were with the 33rd Regiment in Flanders and in Holland, in 1794 and 1795; he was wounded at Geldermalsen. After that he acted in Ireland. He went with the 3rd Guards to Hanover in 1805, was at Copenhagen in 1807, and in the Walcheren expedition in 1809. He was there with the reserve under General Sir J. Hope; and, while commanding that General's advance, he charged a detachment of the Dutch troops, and took some officers and upwards of one hundred men prisoners. In 1811 Byng proceeded to the Peninsula to join the Guards in Portugal, and he was appointed to lead a brigade in the second division of the army under Lord Hill. With this brigade he was present in all the movements and affairs with the enemy in the south of Spain. Upon Lord Hill joining the main body of the army at the commencement of the campaign of 1813, Byng shared in the glory of Vittoria, of the Pyrenees, and of Pampeluna, in which last action he was wounded. He was again wounded in the crossing of the Nivelle and the attack of the fortified camp, when he had two horses shot under him. He was at Cambo, in the passage of the Nive, and in the glorious affair before Bayonne, when the second division was attacked by six divisions of the French army commanded by Marshal Soult. In that action a horse was shot under him. At the commencement of the campaign of 1814 he engaged the rearguard of the enemy at Espelette, and the next day acted with effective daring in the attack of the heights above Garris. He was in the actions of Orthes and Aire; he repulsed the enemy at Garlin, and was with his brigade at the battle of Toulouse. In the campaign of 1815 he won further honour, and especially at Waterloo, where he led with splendid effect the second brigade of the first division. After Waterloo he commanded the first corps of the British Army which marched from the field of victory to Paris, and in that march he took the fortified city of Peronne. He it was who got possession of Paris by occupying the heights of Belleville and Montmartre. After peace was declared Sir John Byng was appointed to the command of the Eastern District, and subsequently to the Northern District, where he remained several years, as Major and Lieutenant General, and obtained from the Governments of that time the warmest expressions of approbation for the firmness, discretion, and ability with which he discharged a very delicate and important duty at a critical period of discontent and disaffection in the manufacturing districts. The late Field Marshal was Commander of the Forces in Ireland from 1828 to 1831. He took latterly an active share in Whig politics at home. From 1831 to 1835 he represented the borough of Poole in the House of Commons. He was a Lord of the Treasury in 1834. On the 12th of May, 1835, he was created Baron Strafford, and was advanced to a viscounty and to the earldom of Strafford on the 18th of September, 1847. His Lordship was Colonel of the Coldstream Guards, and Governor of Londonderry and Culmore. The Earl of Strafford married, first, on the 14th of June, 1804, Mary Stevens, eldest daughter and coheir of Peter Mackenzie, Esq., of Grove House, Middlesex, by which lady (who died on the 17th of June, 1806) he had one son, George Stevens. He married, secondly, on the 9th of May, 1809, Marianne, daughter of Sir Walter James James, Bart., and by her (who died on the 26th of October, 1845) had another son, William Frederick, and three daughters—viz., Harriet, married to Captain Charles Ramsden, late 60th Regiment, son of Sir J. Ramsden, Bart.; Frances, who was married to Henry Tufnell, Esq., of Tufnell Park, and died in 1846; and Caroline, married to Sir W. G. Stirling, Bart. The Earl of Strafford died at his town house, 44, Grosvenor-street, on the 3rd inst. He is succeeded by his elder son, George Stevens, Viscount Enfield, F.R.S., now second Earl of Strafford, who was born on the 8th of June, 1806, and who, after sitting in the House of Commons from 1831 to 1852, was, on the 8th of April, 1853, summoned to the House of Lords in his father's barony of Strafford. His Lordship has married twice—first, in 1829, Agnes, fifth daughter of Field Marshal the Marquis of Anglesey, by which lady (who died on the 9th of October, 1845) he has had three sons and three daughters: of these the eldest son, George Henry Charles, now Viscount Enfield, is M.P. for Middlesex; and the eldest daughter, Alice Mary Georgiana, is the wife of Captain Hedworth Hilton Jolliffe, M.P., eldest son of Sir W. G. Hylton Jolliffe, Bart., and M.P. The Earl of Strafford married, secondly, on the 16th of March, 1848, Harriet Elizabeth, second daughter of Charles Cavendish, Lord Chesham, and by her has three sons and two daughters.

GENERAL SIR D. LEIGHTON, K.C.B.

SIR David Leighton, K.C.B., a General in the Army and senior officer on the Bombay establishment, was the son of Thomas Leighton, Esq., of Brechin, in Scotland. He was born in 1774, and entered the military service of the East India Company in 1795, and was in the Mysore campaign and at the taking of Seringapatam. Leighton acted under Wellington in the Mahratta warfare against Dhoondia Waugh, and shared in the storming of Dummul, Rolletead, and Syringy. He did good service in Malabar in 1803; in the Deccan's field force in 1815; and, under Sir S. Smith, in Arabia, in 1821, when the Arab tribe of Beni-Boo-Ali was subjugated. Leighton was for a long period Adjutant-General of the Bombay army, and was for four years a General of Division. He was made a K.C.B. in 1837. Sir David Leighton married, in 1818, Isabella, daughter of Henry Thomas Williams, Esq., and leaves issue. The gallant General died at his seat, Bafford House, near Cheltenham, on the 1st inst.

OPENING OF THE VICTORIA STATION AND PIMLICO RAILWAY.—This line, which forms a connection between all the railways south of the Thames and the Victoria Station, now in course of erection at Pimlico, was opened on Saturday by the directors, in the presence of the officials of the line and their friends. The train started from the Battersea Station of the Brighton Railway, and passed over the Victoria-bridge, amidst the cheers of the assembled workmen, proceeding up to the Victoria Station, which occupies the site of the old Grosvenor Basin. Here the company partook of an excellent déjeûner provided by the contractors. The line of railway so opened forms an important feature in the metropolitan communications, as affording access from all the railways south of the Thames to the western and central districts of London. The chief work on the line is the bridge over the Thames, which consists of four openings of 175 feet each, and is entirely composed of wrought iron, with stone piers and abutments. The design is exceedingly light and elegant, and when quite completed will be one of the most beautiful of the metropolitan bridges. This line was commenced in the autumn of 1858; the first stone of the viaduct over the Thames was laid on the 9th of June, 1859; so that the time occupied in erecting this great work has been exactly twelve months. The contractor for the whole whole work was Mr. Kelk, of London. Mr. Fowler is the engineer-in-chief to the company, under whose direction, in conjunction with Mr. Wilson, the works having been carried out.

THE WINES OF BURGUNDY.—(To the Editor.)—We have read in your Number of the 12th of May the letter of Mr. Cyrus Redding, and saw also the rectification sent by Mr. Félix Lausseure, and published in your Number of the 26th of May, relative to the wines of Burgundy. Confirming the statement of Mr. F. Lausseure as to the wine of Santenot, we will feel obliged by the insertion of the following remarks, without which some others of the assertions of Mr. Cyrus Redding might be accepted as correct. His letter (or a misprint in its publication we should rather suppose) states that the produce of the growth of Corton is only from ten to fifteen litres (about two to three gallons) per hectare of ground. The produce of that vineyard, although inferior in some parts to that of other fine growths, still brings from seven to nine hogsheads—viz., sixteen to twenty hectolitres (350 to 450 gallons) per hectare. The letter mentions also some of the wines of the Mâcon district as "being found mousseux, effervescing naturally, and without the maker's intention." We must observe that all wines can sparkle and become more or less effervescing if they are bottled whilst in a state of fermentation; and there is, indeed, no other natural way for making sparkling burgundy or champagne, or any other sparkling wine of good quality. Therefore, between wines made such, and wines "effervescing without the maker's intention," there is a difference which the public can appreciate. Another assertion in the letter might lead the public to suppose that the oïdium has raged through all that extent of country which was called Burgundy before the Revolution of 1789. If some parts of the Mâcon district have been visited by that disease of the vines (and they have been but in a few instances after all compared to what it has been in the southern and Bordeaux vineyards), such has not been the case with the fine wines of the Côte d'Or, which, until now, have been quite free from that sort of cholera of the vineyards. The estimated value of the 578,000 hectolitres of wine, which are supposed to be the produce of the Côte d'Or vineyards, is quite underrated at the average of 15,000,000 francs. It must be raised to 20,000,000, rather 25,000,000 francs. With regard to the wine of Santenot, some white wine used to be made with that growth many years ago, but since the proprietors have replaced the vines of white grapes by those of the red sort, and the santenot blanc has ceased to be mentioned as a "vin classé," assuredly a few casks that are to be found here and there of white santenot cannot maintain the name of such a wine out of the spot where it was made, and the fine growth called santenot is only spoken of and known as a red wine.—J. LAUSSEURE and Co., proprietors of vineyards, growths of Richebourg, Romanée, and La Tâche. Nuits (Côte d'Or), June 2, 1860.

SCIENTIFIC NEWS.

ROYAL OBSERVATORY, GREENWICH.—The annual visitation of this establishment took place on Saturday last, when Lord Wrottesley, Sir B. C. Brodie, Sir J. Herschel, and many other eminent scientific men were present. Much attention was devoted to the magnificent new equatorial, stated to be larger than any in this country or France, and only exceeded by the Russian instrument at Pulkowa—the diameter of the object-glass being nearly 13 inches, and the length of the telescope between 14 and 15 feet. It is so nicely balanced that, although weighing many tons, it is moved as if it were supported in air. The present able astronomer, Mr. G. B. Airy, was appointed in 1835, since which time many new instruments have been added to the stock of apparatus, and the whole establishment reorganised.

COUNT LEO THUN, on account of the great service which he has rendered to science by the promotion of education in Austria, has been unanimously elected an honorary member of the Imperial Academy of Sciences at Vienna.

NEW ELECTRIC CURRENT.—M. Quincke, in an elaborate article in Poggendorff's Annalen, gives an account of experiments which, he says, prove that, when pure water flows through a porous body, an electric current is elicited. By means of glass tubes, fastened to a plate of burnt clay, he has examined silk, linen, ivory, glass, sand, woods, sulphur, talc, graphite, iron, and platina. In a subsequent paper he states that, by using flour of sulphur as a porous diaphragm, the electro-motive force becomes incomparably greater, and that he has thus been able to prove that these electrical currents produce chemical decomposition, and afford evidence of free electricity.—Philosophical Magazine.

PRESERVATION OF STONE.—M. Dalemagne has recently submitted to the French Academy of Sciences a preparation for this purpose, composed of phosphate and silicate of potash, which he terms phosphosilicic acid, and which he believes to be free from the objections alleged against the water-glass of Von Fuchs.

VELOCITY OF SOUND.—Acknowledging that the problem of the propagation of sound is considered to be solved, yet, with the view of further discussion, the Rev. S. Earnshaw has commenced, in the Philosophical Magazine, the exposition of a new theory.

DR. A. W. HOFMANN (Professor of Chemistry at the Museum of Geology, &c.) has printed in the new number of the Journal of the Chemical Society a series of twenty-three Miscellaneous Observations, embracing many interesting points in organic chemistry.

ECLIPSE OF THE SUN (on July 18 next).—In the June number of the Philosophical Magazine appear some notices (with a coloured plate) by Dr. Lamont, the Bavarian Astronomer Royal at Munich, of certain phenomena observed by him during total eclipses of the sun. He gives an account of his mode of observation, with the view of helping his brethren during the eclipse of the 18th of July next. We have been informed that Saïd Pacha, the Viceroy of Egypt, has directed that arrangements be made for scientific observation of the eclipse in some parts of his dominions.

ON REFINING ALLOYED GOLD. — Mr. R. Warington (in the Journal of the Chemical Society) states that white and brittle gold from Australia has caused much trouble and annoyance to the officers of the Mint; and that about 47,000 ounces of gold bars were returned to the Bank of England as unfit for coinage, not bearing hammering or rolling. Mr. Warington has succeeded in remedying this defect. His process consists in the employment of oxide of copper, about 10 per cent of which is to be added to the alloyed gold, with the addition of a small quantity of borax—the whole being maintained in a well-fused state for about half an hour. The result is a perfectly malleable gold, containing a small percentage of metallic copper, and well fitted for the purposes of coinage.

TO PRESERVE THE EGGS OF BIRDS (for hatching) Mr. A. D. Bartlett has enveloped them in the thoroughly-dried gut of any animal whose intestine is large enough to admit the egg, and put them in a box containing dry grain or seed, in a cool, dry, place. Before putting the eggs under a hen, if the dry gut be cut with a knife it will peel off without injuring the egg.—Proceedings of Zoological Society.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

Professor ANSTED gave his seventh lecture on Thursday week, his subject being "The Circulation of Water in the Interior of the Earth." After describing the composition of water (1 volume of oxygen and 2 of hydrogen gas) and its properties, the professor explained its relations with the various rocks of which the substance of the earth's crust is formed. While ordinary sandstones can be dried so as to contain only about one or two per cent of water, many of the harder kinds will hold, when saturated, as much as five pints in the cube foot. Limestones will contain a gallon, and some of the magnesian limestones as much as twelve pints of water in the same bulk (weighing 150lb.) Chalk is even more absorbent, the cube foot sometimes containing two gallons of water. Clays often contain ten per cent of water in their ordinary state; and many of the rocks generally regarded as non-absorbent also contain water. Thus, slates contain often five per cent, and sometimes much more; and even granites, and other rocks termed igneous, one or two per cent. Water in many cases is not merely absorbed mechanically, but is permanently contained in minute cavities of the rock. In quartz, cavities of considerable size are sometimes seen containing fluids, water being the chief. These indicate the circumstances of pressure and heat at which such rocks were formed; and that not only in the formation, but also in the subsequent modifications, of all rocks there was an important and essential circulation of water, without which the rocks could not exist as we find them. Water, therefore, is essential to the existing condition of matter upon the earth.

Professor TYNDALL's discourse yesterday se'nnight was devoted to the consideration of "some Alpine phenomena" witnessed by him during a visit to Switzerland last Christmas, undertaken to fulfil a desire to see the glaciers in winter. With much difficulty, on account of the violent snowstorms, he and his brave and intelligent guides proceeded as far as the Montanvert and examined the Mer de Glace. They succeeded in fixing a series of stakes in the ice; and Dr. Tyndall, by means of a theodolite, was enabled to determine that the glacier, which moves in the middle at the rate of thirty inches a day in summer, moves only fifteen inches in winter. Many interesting phenomena were described, and several illustrated by experiments—e.g., the lifelike progress of crystallisation, the sound of falling snow (increased by echos), and the varying colours of the sky. The electric light sent through a turbid liquid gave a facsimile of the sun seen through a fog. Sir Roderick I. Murchison was in the chair.

Mr. F. A. ABEL (of the Chemical Department at Woolwich Arsenal), in his seventh lecture "On Heat and Chemical Force," on Saturday last, gave an account of the numerous attempts made within the last century, and even recently, to prepare, by means of chlorate of potash, a mixture which should possess superior advantages to gunpowder. By an experimental comparison of the oxidising properties of chlorate of potash and saltpetre, he showed that the chemical action of the former was not sufficiently under control; and that, moreover, the action of all explosive mixtures containing chlorate of potash was too similar to that of fulminating compounds to allow of their safe employment in firearms for any great length of time. The nature of gun-cotton (cotton wool steeped in a mixture of nitric and sulphuric acids) and similar compounds was next described, and their unfitness for employment as substitutes for gunpowder demonstrated. The highly-explosive metallic compounds known as the fulminates were also described. These various detonating substances, in which chemical action is set up by friction or by blows, have, however, received numerous important applications, the principal being the instantaneous production of fire, evidenced in the development and gradual perfection of the lucifer-match (since 1834). Mr. Abel, after referring to the injurious effects of phosphorus upon the health of the makers of lucifer-matches, described Schrötter's important discovery of the amorphous or allotropic phosphorus, which may be worked with impunity, and also referred to the important improvements recently made in France in the safe application of this amorphous phosphorus, and in the preparation of matches containing no phosphorus, and requiring none for their ignition. The subject was recently considered and reported on by a commission of the Academy of Sciences, at the desire of the Imperial Government.

Mr. F. A. ABEL (chief of the chemical department at Woolwich) gave his last lecture on the association of heat and chemical force on Saturday last. After an examination of the contrivances now in use for firing cannon and smallarms, and of the principles involved in the production of concussion and percussion fuses, a description was given of various special applications of gunpowder and similar compositions to the production of quick-match, portfires, time-fuses (for the ignition of the charge of powder in shrapnel and other shells), rockets, and signal-lights. In referring to the latter, the lecturer passed to the applications of chemical heat to the production of artificial light, both for illuminating and pyrotechnic purposes. An inquiry was first instituted into the manner in which coloured flame and fire are produced. It was shown by experimental illustration that metallic compounds, such as those of strontia, soda, copper, &c., do not impart a colour to flame merely by being highly heated, but that the tint peculiar to each metal is produced during a chemical change of the metallic compound heated, and while the metal has passed for an instant to the state of vapour. A series of experiments were shown to prove that artificial light of any degree of intensity is due to the radiation of light by highly-heated solid matter. The luminosity of the flames of all substances used for domestic illumination was ascribed to the momentary separation in the flame of carbon in a minute state of division, which, becoming highly heated before it is burned, radiates light. The lime-light was alluded to as another example of the intense light emitted by highly-heated solid matter; and an account was given of the most recent improvements in the mechanical arrangements for obtaining a continuous light by means of the oxy-hydrogen flame, such as has been recently exhibited in different parts of the metropolis. The various pyrotechnic effects obtained by the application of the principles discussed were exhibited at the conclusion of the lecture.

The season at the Royal Institution is now concluded.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

SPARTACUS, LIONEL, F. G.—BRITISH CHESS ASSOCIATION.—The committee of the Cambridge clubs are at length bestirring themselves; and if the following circular, which is being disseminated among the various chess societies of the kingdom, meets a liberal response, we may reckon on a capital gathering about the end of August:—

"TO THE SECRETARY OF THE CLUB.

"Sir,—It is proposed to hold a meeting of the Chess Association this year at Cambridge, of which a programme will be issued as soon as possible. In the meantime, as the success of the meeting must materially depend on the amount of support received from the several chess clubs in the kingdom, the Cambridge committee wish respectfully to press upon you the necessity of bringing the subject before the members of your club with the least possible delay, and to forward to the treasurer such subscriptions as you may collect. If every society of amateurs would exert itself within its own circle, not only would the labours of the committee be greatly lessened, but the success of the meeting would be ensured beyond the probability of failure.

(Signed by the pro tem. Secretary of the Committee.)

"N.B. The day of meeting, which will in all likelihood be fixed for the last week in August, will be stated in the programme."

M. H.—Your opponent is in error. A Pawn can only be taken in passing by a Pawn.

M. M. S.; W. G.; NOVICE; R. S. of Malines; and others.—Problem No. 851 cannot be solved by 1. R. to K 6th (ch).

DEREVON.—Your solutions of the enigmas are right.

F. B., Bombay.—It is defective, admitting of an easy solution by 1. Q to K Kt 2nd (ch), and 2. K to R 2nd, &c.

C. SCHNITZLER.—No. 2 is imperfect; No. 3 correct, but too simple.

W. C. R., Northampton; G. A. HEANEKT and others.—Yes; Problem No. 850 can apparently be solved by 1. R to K Kt 6th, though not so elegantly as by 1. R to K R 5th.

W. C., Rokeby.—Your attempt to invalidate the author's solution of No. 850 is a failure. Look at the variations again.

B. B.—You will probably obtain a copy of Kling and Horwitz's "Chess Euclid" of Mr. C. Skeet, King William-street, Strand.

 M. KOLISCH.—The arrival of this distinguished professor is imparting a degree of vivacity to the chess coteries of the metropolis which they have not exhibited since the advent of the transatlantic amateur, Mr Morphy. He has already encountered successfully some of the chief players, British and foreign, now in London and arrangements are in progress for bringing about a match between him and the celebrated German player Harrwitz. There is every probability, too, that the suggestions we made last week will not be lost upon the committee of the forthcoming meeting at Cambridge, and that M. Kolisch will take part in the tourneys projected on that occasion.

THE ROYAL HUNT CUP. THE ASCOT CUP. THE QUEEN'S GOLD VASE.

THE ASCOT RACE PLATE.

THE ROYAL HUNT CUP (won on Wednesday by Cruiser) was manufactured by Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, and differs essentially from the others, both in form and utility, being a vase of silver, partly gilt, and ornamented in the Tudor style and in both high and low relief. On the cover of the vase is a figure of the huntress Diana, and the handles, which are very elegant, are formed by the heads of antlered deer; the bulb of the stem carries out the intention of the designer, Mr. A. J. Barrett, being still typical of the chase in its ornament, the heads of deerhounds. The chief artistic work lies, perhaps, in the panels of the cup, of which there are two, illustrating scenes in Shakespeare's comedy of "As You Like It"—first, Jaques and the wounded stag; and second, the "Forest of Arden." The base bears the Royal cipher and crown, and panels for the name of the winner. The form of the cup is at once elegant and novel.

THE ASCOT CUP (run for on Thursday, and won by Rupee) is a finely-modeled statue of Richard Cœur-de-Lion, thirty-one inches high, independent of the ebony base on which it is mounted. This work, manufactured by Messrs. Garrard, of the Haymarket, is the last but one executed by the late Edmund Cotterill, who for many years has been before the public as the designer and modeller of many important race prizes.

THE QUEEN'S GOLD VASE (run for on Tuesday, and won by Horror is a large and richly-chased Gothic tankard, twenty-one inches high, exclusive of the pedestal, with a group on the cover representing Henry III. being saved by his son, Prince Edward, at the battle of Evesham. It was manufactured by R. and S. Garrard and Co., of the Haymarket.

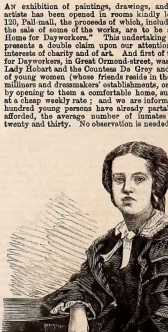
PORTRAITS OF THE ROYAL FAMILY OF SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

In connection with the Engravings of the Coronation Ceremony at Stockholm which have appeared in this Journal we here give Portraits of members of the Royal family of Sweden, which, with those of their Majesties already given, will complete the illustrious family group. The Queen Mother, Dowager Queen Josephine Maximilienne Eugenie, was the daughter of Eugene, the late Duke of Leuchtenberg. She was born on the 14th of March, 1807, and was married to the late King on the 19th of June, 1823. Princess Louise Josephine Eugene, the only child of their Majesties, was born on October 31, 1851. Prince Oscar Frederick, Duke of Ostergothland, a brother of the reigning Monarch, was born on the 21st of January, 1829. He is a Major General in the Swedish and Norwegian Army, and Rear-Admiral in the Navy. On the 6th of June, 1857, he married Princess Sophie Wilhelmine Marianne Henriette de



PRINCE OSCAR, DUKE OF OSTERGOTHLAND.

Nassau. This lady—whose portrait we also engrave—was daughter of the late Duke William of Nassau, and was born on the 9th of July, 1836. Princess Charlotte Eugenie Auguste Amelie Albertine, sister to the King, was born on the 24th of April, 1830. The younger brother of his Majesty, Prince Nicholas Augustus, Duke of Dalecarlia, was born on the 24th of August, 1831. He is a Major in the Horse Guards, in the Dalecarlian Regiment, and in the corps of Norwegian Chasseurs of the second brigade of infantry.

EXHIBITION OF AMATEUR ARTISTS.

An exhibition of paintings, drawings, and sketches by amateur artists has been opened in rooms kindly lent by Mr. Gambart, at 120, Pall-mall, the proceeds of which, including those derived from the sale of some of the works, are to be applied in aid of "The Home for Day-workers." This undertaking is one, therefore, which presents a double claim upon our attention—namely, both in the interests of charity and of art. And first of the charity. The Home for Day-workers, in Great Ormond-street, was established in 1858 by Lady Hobart and the Countess De Grey and Ripon for the benefit of young women (whose friends reside in the country) employed in milliners and dressmakers' establishments, or shops, during the day, by opening to them a comfortable home, supplied with books, &c., at a cheap weekly rate; and we are informed that upwards of two hundred young persons have already partaken of the benefits thus afforded, the average number of inmates having been between twenty and thirty. No observation is needed from us to enforce the usefulness of such an undertaking, to which we wish the fullest success.

In point of art the present Exhibition displays a marked and considerable advance upon anything previously within our experience of amateur performances, and speaks well for the general culture of art amongst the educated classes of society—a remark justified not only on the score of their executive merit, but the class of subjects represented.

Lady Marion Alford claims first and special notice for the charming treatment which she has bestowed upon the legendary subject, "A peasant boy daily worshipping at the shrine of the Virgin is rewarded by a vision, in which the Infant Saviour accepts his offering of Fruit, and the Virgin and attendant Saints, St. George, St. Andrew, St. Katherine, and St. Margaret, smile upon him." The design is full of motion and life, elegant in character; the incidents pleasing; the grouping graceful and naive—those of the young children in the foreground exceedingly so. The drawing correct, and the colour clear and pure and delicate. This is a work which exhibits mind and soul, and is highly creditable to the amateur-art of the country.

Mrs. Higford Burr shows a true feeling for ancient Christian art in the extremely nice handling bestowed upon the views of some of its most celebrated monuments, as "The Lower Church of St. Francis, Assisi," with its fine mosaics and sculptures; "Chapel painted by Simone Memmi," in the same church, dedicated to St. Katherine, St. Clara, St. Louis, and St. Francis; "Interior of the Sistine Chapel," with Michael Angelo's grand fresco represented in their centers; "Chapel in the Palazzo Riccardi, Florence, painted by Benozza Gozzoli, 1460," filled with elegant groups of angels, with gilt glories and background, all studiously reproduced from the original, &c.

The Hon. Mrs. Richard Boyle indulges an inventive fancy with great facility of execution in her elaborate pen-and-ink drawing, somewhat in the style of early German art, "Forest Shadows"—

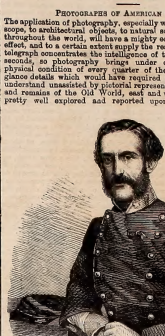
> To suffer woes which Hope thinks infinite,
> To forgive wrongs darker than death or night.



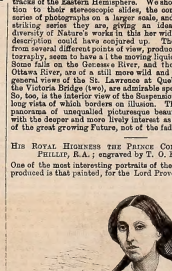
Her Majesty has evinced her appreciation of the talent indicated in this production by becoming the purchaser of it. Another work purchased by the Queen is Colonel Northay's masterly drawing of the "Old Gateway at Rotterdam, Oude Hoofd Paort."

Amongst the various landscapes and miscellaneous pieces are several of an order of merit which would do honour to the professional of established position. "Battersea; seen from the Shore of Crummash Lake," by Miss Blake, is full of genuine character, and executed in a nice tone of colour. "The Glamar," by the same hand, is pleasingly treated. Mr. George Jeayne's "The Princess Charlotte in Ordinary, Portsmouth Harbour," is spirited and truthful. So also may we commend "Street at Cairo," by Mr. W. Prinsep; "Temple of Castor and Pollux, Girgenti, Sicily;" "Lago Maggiore," and other Italian scenes, by Mr. Bridgman Simpson, Flex Grove; "Albano," by Earl Somers; "Harfleur, Normandy," by Major Owen, R.A.; "Head of Grazia," by the Marquis of Northampton; and "Snowdon," by Mr. N. H. Cheney. We are glad to observe the "sold" tickets pretty numerously appended.

FINE ARTS.

Photographs of American Scenery.

The application of photography, especially when aided by the stereoscope, to architectural objects, to natural scenery, to costume, &c., throughout the world, will have a mighty educational and civilising effect, and to a certain extent supply the results of travel. As the telegraph concentrates the intelligence of the world in a few brief seconds, so photography brings under our view the external physical condition of every quarter of the globe, supplying at a glance details which would have required hours of explanation to understand unassisted by pictorial representation. The chief cities and remains of the Old World, east and west, have been already pretty well explored and reported upon by the Architectural



PRINCE AUGUSTUS, DUKE OF DALECARLIA.

Photographic Association and a host of individual artists, but the great New World on the other side of the Atlantic has hitherto remained comparatively a sealed book; its grand natural features and marvels of structural contrivance being almost unknown amongst us. We have now to thank the London Stereoscopic Company for supplying the void, and presenting us with a series of views illustrative of American life and scenery, which, upon inspection, we can pronounce in many respects to surpass anything of the kind which has presented itself in the beaten tracks of the Eastern Hemisphere. We should observe that, in addition to their stereoscopic slides, the company have published a series of photographs on a larger scale, and a most interesting and striking series they are, giving an idea of the immensity and diversity of Nature's works in this her widest field which no verbal description could have conjured up. The Niagara Falls, taken from several different points of view, produced by instantaneous photography, seem to have a t the moving liquid volume of the original. Some falls on the Genesee River, and the Chaudier Fall on the Ottawa River, are of a still more wild and rugged character. The general views of the St. Lawrence at Quebec, of Montreal, and of the Victoria Bridge (two), are admirable specimens of photography. So, too, is the interior view of the Suspension Bridge at Niagara, the long vista of which borders on illusion. The entire series forms a panorama of unequalled picturesque beauty, which will be viewed with the deeper and more lively interest as it concerns the locality of the great growing Future, not of the faded Past.

His Royal Highness the Prince Consort. Painted by J. Phillip, R.A.; engraved by T. O. Barlow. Hayes.

One of the most interesting portraits of the Prince Consort hitherto produced is that painted, for the Lord Provost and Town Council of

PRINCESS EUGENIE, ONLY SISTER OF THE KING.

Aberdeen, by Mr. T. Phillip, R.A., which was exhibited at the Royal Academy last year. In this work the artist has endeavoured to go a step beyond mere portraiture, and to give his illustrious subject all the interest it could obtain from picturesque accessories appropriate to the national character of the respectable body for whom it was painted. Accordingly his Royal Highness is represented a full-length figure, in complete Highland costume, standing on an elevated ground, with Balmoral in mid-distance, and a fine range of mountains in the distance. A noble deerhound rests at his feet amongst the broom and heather. The carriage of the figure, one foot of which is slightly elevated, is easy and commanding, and the face is as remarkable both for the truthfulness of the likeness and the dignified repose in the expression. The engraving, in mezzotint, by Mr. Barlow, has been admirably executed, the result being one of the most satisfactory specimens of published portraiture that have recently appeared.

CROPSEY'S "AUTUMN ON THE HUDSON RIVER."

Mr. Cropsey, the American artist, has recently produced a very fine landscape, "Autumn on the Hudson River," which is now on view at Messrs. Thompson and Co.'s, 45, Pall-mall. The peculiar picturesqueness of North American scenery is especially exemplified in the following production, which, in many respects, departs from the ordinary conditions of landscape accepted in Europe. The site represented is near the town of Catskill, on the Hudson River, New York, where the river takes a noble bend, formed by the projection of the west point of the Catskill Hills, the eastern base being studded with steamers and other craft. The shore on both banks is mountainous, and covered with luxuriant foliage, which, at this season of the year, glistens in the brightest and warmest tints: the evergreen hemlock pine, the scarlet oak, the yellow birch, and the silver maple, all blended together in a gorgeous mass of colour. Here and there a tributary stream dancing over its uneven bed, or cascading in full volume, diversify the picturesque scenery, and the wildness mixed with indications of advancing civilisation and industry, presenting a combined effect impossible to describe. This fine picture will shortly be in the hands of Mr. T. O. Barlow for engraving.

THE BRITISH INSTITUTION.

EXHIBITION OF ANCIENT MASTERS.

The case of the British Institution suggests one further reflections upon a question we have more than once touched upon—namely, the Art-Exhibition arrangements of the metropolis. "The British Institution for Promoting the Fine Arts" was founded in 1805, under the patronage of the King, and with the Prince of Wales as Vice-President; its original objects being to encourage and reward the talents of the artists of the United Kingdom by the opening of a public exhibition for the sale of their works, and the distribution of premiums to the younger artists; and "to endeavour to form a public gallery of the works of British artists, by the most select specimens of each of the great schools." By the fourth by-law it was declared that "the British Institution, being desirous to promote and increase the beneficial effects of the Royal Academy, and by no means to interfere with it in any respect, a favourable attention will be paid to such pictures as have been refused admission by the Academy; and the British Institution will be shut up during their annual exhibition." The position of the Institution in the metropolis thus established were somewhat anomalous. It avowedly professed to accomplish its objects purposes for which the Academy had had no established forty years before; and yet it was so chary of interfering with the pecuniary interests of that establishment that its proposed exhibition (or works of British artists) was to be open only during the time that of the former was open. Now, since the establishment of the Institution the exhibitions of the Academy have though lately considerably extended, as regards the exhibition of works of art, have been found so inadequate to the purpose that several new and independent exhibiting societies have been formed—as the Incorporated Society of British Artists, the Association of Fine Arts, and the two Societies of Painters in Water Colours, the aggregate area of which far exceeds that of the Royal Academy and the British Institution put together, and the first two of which are severally larger than the latter. Moreover, all these new institutions are founded on principles more liberal to artists than those of British artists, and have, therefore, a more direct relation to the interests of art than the British Institution, which was created to act subordinately to the Royal Academy. Nevertheless, the British Institution, having been established under high patronage, and acting under the constant direction of an aristocratic body of governors, contrives to maintain a sort of prestige superior to independent exhibiting bodies, and little early spring exhibitions, though ultimately avoiding competing with the Royal Academy, operates very sensibly to the disadvantage of the Suffolk-street and Portland Gallery exhibitions, which are open during its term of operations, and are carried on completely of the self-supporting principle. So far as subscription purposes go, therefore, it may fairly be questioned whether the British Institution does not operate to the prejudice rather than the promotion of British art; and is that slightly the more to be bitterly complained of by many of the independent class of artists. What it may have done for the encouragement of the art of the United Kingdom by means of rewards and premiums we have no opportunity of judging; for it is a private body, and we are not aware that its accounts have ever been published. The projected "Public Gallery of the Works of British Artists, with a few specimen pictures of each of the great schools," has remained a dead letter from the beginning.

Meantime, a new feature of attraction begun to be introduced, which, if it did nothing for the promotion of living British art, tended in some degree to keep alive a taste for ancient masters, who could afford to take advantage of it, and which, managed with zeal and judgment, might be made a very valuable auxiliary to culture—we mean the exhibition of works of the ancient masters, and of deceased British artists, lent for the purpose by the collections of the nobility and gentry. But even here the enterprise is one which falls very far short of the requirement in quantity, whilst in quality the arrangement it is adopted to promote fails of the purpose which should be held in view. The gallery itself, which in dimensions nearly perhaps, a very fair realisation to the public requirements and art-treasures of the country at the beginning of the century, is utterly inadequate to show as it ought to do forty" of the Royal Academy are to represent the art-talent of the country; and nothing but the most judicious selection and classification could render an exhibition of such a character within much smaller restrictive or gratifying to the man of taste. And to that limit the shilling entrance seems to be the chief bar to keep the spectators very few and select, and it will become at once apparent that the noble and wealthy public are not disposed to trouble themselves by temporarily parting with their art-treasures with the generous intention of "promoting the fine arts" when neither their fellow-countrymen are rewarded with a very small result. We make these remarks because we are fully sensible of the importance of affording the public an opportunity of seeing the best works of the great schools of art, to which end the art-treasures of the country are, with few exceptions, amply available; but the present satisfactory and useful such an exhibition should be upon a much larger scale, and under a more liberal arrangement, than are now found in the little gallery at 52, Pall-mall.

The collection of works of ancient masters now on view is 194 in number, but too miscellaneous in character to admit of any attempt at an orderly review of it. In the place of honour over the chimney-piece is a portrait of Vandyke's King Charles on horseback, with attendant on foot, the property of the Countess of Jersey, on either side of it are small portraits of George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, by Mytens, and Philip Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, which illustrate in a striking manner the wide difference between the conventional painting and intellectual portraiture. We next come to a portrait of Giulio de Medici, the property of W. R. L. Fitzgerald, Esq., attributed to Raphael, but, as we think, without any sufficient authority. The head, painted in a subdued tone, with black barret cap, is superimposed against a blue sky and village distance, conventionally painted according to the hard style of the early Lombard and Florentine masters. Neither in character nor handling does this performance fall in with any of our notions of the great Roman, and it may, perhaps, be more properly attributed to the Bolognese Francia.

"A Dead Christ, with Virgin," &c., surrounded by angels, by Vandyke, and contributed by the Duke of Newcastle, is only noticeable as an example of the degradation which the most sublime subjects underwent in schools which the old religious fervour no longer influenced. The faces of the weeping women, their eyes red and swollen with tears, are of the most ordinary every-day life—even that of the Christ itself is commonplace—and the introduction of a fat boy in wings, crying piteously and rubbing his eyes, risks a recurring reflexion to the whole composition. Rembrandt is seen with great effect in "A Bandore-player," contributed by the Earl of Warwick;—such expression, such flesh tints, and so much made out of little embroidery! Where is the bandore, and hidden by the hat but dimly in the shade? Surely it is the triumph of mind over matter to produce light and colour as it were in the midst of gloom. From this effulgent creation it is almost painful to have to turn to the tame appearance of Curlo Dolce, by whom we have a "St. John" and a "St. Matthew with the Angel," the property of Samuel Scott, Esq.; and then, as a violent contrast to these, we turn upon a large, extravagant composition of the "Last Judgment" of Tintoret, "Moses Striking the Rock," by Leon Bassano, and "Lot and his family flying before the judgments of heaven," by Andrea Schiavone. Let us contemplate for an instant the wild confusion of the groupings, the extravagant contortions of the individual figures in the "Last Judgment," the grandeur, and then pass to the quietly painted "Three Marys at the Tomb," by A. Mantegna, the property of Lord Taunton, and from this travel over to the specimens of early Italian art, by the assistants of the lower portion of one of the side walls in the middle room, and then from these lift his eyes to the two large views in Venice, by Canaletti, who was famous for his treatment of the same subject, we have no less than five specimens, sent by Mr. A. Barker, Mr. Scott, and the Duke of Newcastle, and the reverential character given the kneeling Virgin and St. John, in the principal upper picture. Botticelli, the most eminent pupil of Fra Filippo Lippi, was more daring and less careful in his subjects than any of his time. "A Virgin and Child with Angels," the latter giving way to expressions of joy, is a characteristic specimen, exhibited by W. Davenport Bromley, must be pronounced a very beautiful specimen of his hand. The "Madonna della Child," by Sebastiano, the master of Michael Angelo, displays that fine character in the heads for which the artist is renowned, and a warmth and richness of colouring, particularly in the flesh tints, which, we do not find generally in the old Florentine school of this period.

In addition to the group of pictures we have, in accordance with usual parlance, spoken of them as of "early" Italian art; but it would be an error to suppose that they represented Italian art only in point of date, or, as many suppose, as distinctly comprised within the Pre-Raphaelite period. Lorenzo di Credi, for instance, was a contemporary of Raphael, surviving him by some ten or eleven years, and Botticelli died only five years before him. It might more correctly be said that they illustrate types of the art of the movement which had prevailed previous to the age of Raphael, and which prevailed still more, in his time wherever the influences which tended to such great results in the works of that mighty master of the Roman school were not felt.

We shall refract to this exhibition.

JAPANESE CURRENCY.

THE "Japanese difficulty" seems to be resolved into a question of currency. The chief complaints of the Japanese, as well as those of our countrymen, regard the coinage. It consists of gold, silver, copper, and bronze coins, and of the two last. The gold coinage is confined to silver itibous; the silver, to the bu and four-and-a-half copper mace, one of which is reckoned as worth one hundred iron cash. The Mexican dollar, for these coins is subject, is worth four itibous. The kobang is of nearly equal pure: it is valued at rather less than eleven Dutch ducats. Inquires rather more than fifteen ducats to make up the weight of a Mexican dollar, &c. 2½d. It was stipulated in the United States treaty that in all commercial transactions the Japanese should take bullion weight for weight, to be equal to foreign coins of equal description, an arrangement which the American dollar equal to the Japanese. In its real value is only by exchanging money at this rate, bullions were realised at from one dollar ninety cents to two dollars cents. The enormous profits which are forded was drawing away the specie from Shanghai, while the Japanese saw with dismay their gold disappearing. They limited the amount to be exchanged at the Japanese current treasury. Then came a discreditable but perfectly na-

RUPEE, WINNER OF THE ASCOT CUP.

SINCE Lord Exeter's "narrow blue stripes" were borne to victory by Galata in 1839, this cup has only twice fallen to the lot of the owner to wit, Beeswing and Rupee. The latter is a brown filly by Naboh from Bravery, a half-sister of the renowned Sauterne. She is not very big, and some think her a trifle lacking in length, but still she is very neat and smart-looking, and with a very taking Sweetmeat as a head. She commenced her career at Epsom, June 7, 1859, by running third to Rostea. At Ascot she separated Thormanby and Longbridge in the Biennial, but she met her former at Ely, better terms on the following Thursday in the New Stakes, and beat the future Ditcher without any to speak. She ran no more that season, and her next appearance was for the Oaks, in which she was fourth to Butterfly, Galata, and Gondolier. For Epsom running disappointed her stable not a little; and in the Gold Vase they had also the mortification of seeing her bolt into the furze, and leave Horror and Alarmist to fight it out. Having thus proved this exertion, she came quite fresh to the post the next day, and, as at least, she was entitled to make very short work of the Biennial over "the old mile," and was sold to the Earl of Stamford for upwards of £1000 and Hall the Dog Stakes. The venture was a successful one, as, after a most exciting finish, she reversed the Oaks flat, and beat a Doncaster St. Leger winner, and the much-vaunted Promised Land into the bargain. In the betting, was 7 to 4 yst The Promised Land, 3 to 1 agst Rupee, 5 to 1 agst Gamester, 7 to 1 agst Bentinck, 10 to 1 agst Alarmist, and 14 to 1 agst Mr. Merryman. The running was made by Weatherbound, who carried it on past the mile, and then retired. The Promised Land third, Rupee fourth, and Newcastle fifth, Gamester bringing up the rear. They ran in a body, with little variation, to the Swinley Corner, when the Biennial over "the old mile," and was sold to the Earl of Stamford for upwards of £1000 and Hall the Dog Stakes. The venture was a successful one, as, after a most exciting finish, she reversed the Oaks flat, and beat a Doncaster St. Leger winner, and the much-vaunted Promised Land into the bargain. In the betting, was 7 to 4 yst The Promised Land, 3 to 1 agst Rupee, 5 to 1 agst Gamester, 7 to 1 agst Bentinck, 10 to 1 agst Alarmist, and 14 to 1 agst Mr. Merryman. The running was made by Weatherbound, who carried it on past the mile, and then retired. The Promised Land third, Rupee fourth, and Newcastle fifth, Gamester bringing up the rear. They ran in a body, with little variation, to the Swinley Corner, when The Promised Land was seen in front, Weatherbound lying second, Rupee third, Butterfly and Magnum next. Some distance in the rear followed Newcastle and Gamester. Rupee and Butterfly next close order with The Promised Land to the distance, where they began to separate, when Weatherbound fell to a dead, four lengths between the second and third, bad fourth. An objection was lodged against the winner by the owner of Butterfly on the ground of a "jostle," but it was not sustained.

Rupee is engaged to run in the Ninth Bentinck Memorial against St. Albans. The Wizard, Tom Bowles, Trovatore, &c., and in the Stewards Plate at Stockbridge, in which she has to carry 7lb. extra.

WRECK OF THE "ATLANTIQUE" AT BRIGHTON.

THE terrific gale which blew on Saturday week was felt in its full force at Brighton, and two vessels—the Transit, of Shoreham, and the Atlantique, of Boulogne—were driven on shore. We see an Engraving of the wreck of the latter vessel, from a sketch taken on the Pier Esplanade by Mr. C. Nibbs, of Howard-place, Brighton. The following details of the disaster are from a local journal:—The wreck of the Atlantique, of Nantes, took place late at night, and, unfortunately, with the loss of two lives. The vessel had left Newhaven o'clock the vessel was seen driving towards the shore, until at length, just before 11 o'clock, she struck. During the height of the gale, she struck the beach at the back of the Albion Hotel, carrying away part of the gas pipe in front of the hotel, which turned over her. Captain Manby's apparatus was called into requisition, and rockets were thrown, by means of which a rope was thrown over the vessel in connection with the shore, and secured. The captain and some others threw themselves into the sea, and got safely to the shore. The remainder, however, was carried by the sea and drowned, his body being found not far from the spot about an hour afterwards. The vessel remained on the beach the rest of the ship and the exertions of those on the shore. The exhausted and the vessel remained on the beach the captain, five men, and a boy were taken to Mr. Payne's Marine Hotel, where they were prepared with every kindness shown them. The Atlantique was bound from Rouen to sea to Morocco with a cargo of gas coal. The vessel, which was considerably out of her course by the heavy gales of the previous Tuesday and Saturday, and the consequent rising tide, came on, Saturday, the 2nd inst., was forced helplessly on the Sussex coast.

WRECKS OF FISHERMEN'S BOATS AT FILEY.

DURING the storm of Whit-Monday several of the fishing-boats in Filey Bay were wrecked. At half-past seven a.m. the whole fleet, twenty-two in number, were observed to be standing towards the reef of rocks known as "The Brigg." It was at this time that the storm really commenced. The fall of the barometer, which the Times thinks should have been sufficiently warning to induce the coasters to reach a place of security (an impossibility in the case of vessels caught in the Bay of Filey, which have refused to take the gale), had not been unnoticed by the fishermen, who had been up all night on board their boats, taking every precaution to render them secure. A very heavy gale had blown from S.S.E. from 1 a.m. to 6 a.m., when the wind suddenly shifted, and from 6.30 to 7.15 a.m. there was a dead calm. The mercury showed symptoms of rising, and the gale which it had foretold was believed to be over, and, under this impression, many of the boats had gone on shore for the day and year, and the others were about to follow, when, suddenly, at 7.30, the hurricane burst out in all its fury. Before many of them could get down to the beach and launch their cobles it was at its height. Of those who got to sea many could not reach their own coast and were glad to get on board any two cobles being saved only by a rope veered from the leeward yawl by which they were towed on board—a most perilous circumstance, as this yawl was obliged to run out to sea, and was only saved by being this strongly manned. She had her sail torn to ribbons, and was in most perilous plight, everything swept off her decks by a sea, which also washed overboard and drowned a poor fellow who had been prevented getting out in the cobles. Ultimately twelve yawls were driven on shore, and a thirteenth was blown out to sea, her crew only being rescued by a passing boat; she was afterwards picked up, and towed into Grimsby, together her owners £100 for salvage. Of the yawls driven on shore, only one remains entire, the tenth almost so. The station from which our Engraving is derived was taken the day after the storm. Four boats are lying on the sands in the centre, two more completely broken up during the storm. Of the others, some had their sides and sterns stove in, others were dashed to pieces, and some have entirely destroyed.

By the telephone about eighty men, most of them with wives and families dependent on them, have been deprived of the means of earning a livelihood at a time when their preparations were most completed for commencing fishing on which they chiefly depend for the year. An appeal has been made through the newspapers on behalf of the sufferers, who are described as sober, steady, and industrious, and always ready in times of storm and shipwreck to risk their lives for those in danger, which has at times than any other in the kingdom. The Rev. Mr. Jackson, Vicar of Filey, and W. S. Cortis, Esq., M.D., of Filey, will be happy to receive subscriptions.

Filey Bay is one of the places recommended by the Royal Commission as a harbour of refuge. Had a harbour been constructed it is thought that none of these wrecks would have occurred, and many seafaring men would have been exposed to the fury of the storm would have been lying in safety.

THE VOLUNTEERS.—It was announced that the 2nd Metropolitan Brigade of Volunteers, consisting of the London Scottish and Irish, Queen's Westminster, Rifle Brigade, and Victoria Rifles, would march past the Park, and took up their position on the review-ground. The weather was most unpropitious, and from the, or some other cause, none of the above-named corps, with the exception of about fifty or sixty men from the West Middlesex and Worship Rifles, were present. The 1st Middlesex Corps, however, went through various evolutions, which lasted about two hours, and were performed in a manner which elicited general admiration.

Colonel T. W. Hamilton, C.B., of the Grenadier Guards, is about to be attached temporarily to the Legation at Berlin, as Military Commissioner at the head-quarters of the Prussian army.

NATIONAL DEFENCES.

THE prophets of universal peace have been accustomed to base their vaticinations on the effects of the application of the greatest of modern discoveries. We have been told that steam as a mechanical locomotive power is entirely inconsistent with ill-will and contest between nations, and that war must dissolve into the distance of that romance which we are in the habit of designating history. Unhappily, the genius of evil has not been extinguished by the strong breath of the mighty material influence of our day, and steam has been applied to warlike purposes with quite as much directness and strength as it has been to the arts and productions of peace. While it has created a new era in mechanics as addressed to the objects of common life, it has simply revolutionised the conduct of war and military affairs. Within a very recent period two great wars have been carried on by the aid of this invention, on a scale and under circumstances, whether as regards numbers of men, matériel, and duration of time in attaining the end in view, which are simply miraculous as compared with warfare as it would have been carried on even a quarter of a century since. Both in the Crimean and Italian campaigns long voyages were undertaken involving the conveyance by sea of enormous forces, and landing on distant shores have been completed, and, in one instance at least, the whole affair brought to a conclusion in a space of time scarcely exceeding that which would have been necessary for the transit of half the number of troops at the date when the expedition sent by Great Britain to Egypt was undertaken. In no country has a greater influence been exercised, in its relations to war and peace, by this change than in England. Until now our insular position, combined with our naval resources, was our obvious, as it was our trustiest, safeguard. During the wars in the early part of the century, when the strength of our Navy had attained an extraordinary development, it was equal to all the duties imposed upon it, and England laughed at the idea of invasion. Now we have the highest authorities, and among those who have been witnesses of both the past and the present eras, stating something more than a doubt that the sea and our ships of war are no longer to be absolutely depended upon for the defence of our shores. Not only because of the existing state of the Continental navies, but from the nature of their composition, it is questioned whether even a fleet of such magnitude as that which we possessed at the moment when we stood alone against the world in arms would be able to perform effectively the duties which would be imposed upon it in the event of hostile collision between this country and those nations with which, on the face of it, we should have to contend. Even if England had no greater external interests to defend than the countries which might be opposed to her, many within the Channel her only line of defence would, we are told, be a fatal error. Such a course of proceeding would involve the necessity of retaining in the Channel, for purely defensive purposes, a fleet equal to any which could be brought against it, not only by one, but by any probable combination of maritime Powers, and be in addition to the other fleets and cruisers which are required for the protection of our vast colonial empire, our military communications with distant dependencies, and our extended commerce and interests in every quarter of the globe. In this respect England is differently circumstanced from other European States; for, were an undue proportion of her fleet to be left in the Channel for home defence, the result must be that the navies of other nations would be proportionably set free, to the great danger of our colonies and the injury of a commerce which became of more vital importance with every succeeding day of national progress. The large standing armies and the extensive fortresses possessed by the great European Powers would, at the same time, supply the requirements of home defence to themselves. But even supposing a maritime supremacy equa to these enlarged necessities in a numerical point of view, the entire alteration in the system of naval warfare is to be taken into consideration. The introduction of steam as a motive power and something new, so shipy it may be called, has operated to our disadvantage, in diminishing to some extent the value of superior seamanship; while the extraordinary improvements in artillery in all its phases has led to a great increase in the power and combination of wood and iron which goes to the construction of a ship of war is likely to be of any permanent avail, and a naval action seems as if it were reduced to a question of the first broadside. Altogether the weight of argument seems to be to the opinion that, while the immense importance of the Channel as a first line of defence, and of a Channel fleet to maintain it, ought to be fully recognised, it would be mere foolhardiness to rely on that resource alone as an absolute defence against invasion. Something so, the problem of what is a complete system of self-defence presents itself for solution.

On one point every one is agreed, and that is, that our Navy should be of such magnitude and in such a state of efficiency that its very existence should act as a moral preventive check on any serious design for an invasion of this country. But it is probable that most of us will be inclined to agree that in the only really probable case of an aggressive attempt on this country—namely, the combination of all the maritime Powers of Europe, a state of things which is not only not improbable, but symptom, of a desire to organise which we have unquestionably—it is absolutely necessary to consider the means of meeting a hostile force actually landed on our shores. This occurrence implies a preparedness at once to defend our arsenals and dockyards, our depots of stores, on which everything else, either in time of peace or war, immediately depends, and the presence of a manœuvring force in the field. Foreign officers of distinction and experience have laid it down that any invasion of England would be hopeless which did not consist of upwards of 150,000 men, to take place in three distinct bodies at the same time, at different points, which must march simultaneously upon London This at once makes a demand of three British corps d'armée, of, say, 35,000 strong each; for mere vanity apart, and considering the size of the two English soldiers are composed, and the fact that they would be fighting on their native soil, there would be elements in the composition of such bodies of our troops as would compensate for the numerical difference between that amount of men and the 50,000 of the enemy which each corps would have to contend with. Then it would be necessary to man our arsenals sufficiently to resist any attack on them which might be attempted by a force or even a fifth corps of the enemy, under the circumstances of that temporary naval superiority which he must possess in order to have effected an invasion at all, and looking to the military capabilities of the nation as they would be regarded in the days of invasion, would be quite possible. Unless these points, so indispensable to any, the shortest, active and effectual resistance on our part, were in such a condition as to enable them to be defended with success by the comparatively small body of troops, composed of less perfectly trained men, such as the disembodied militia and local brigades of volunteers, it would be necessary to throw into them such a force of regular troops as would at once deprive us of those numbers of armies in the field which, as has been indicated, would be necessary to check an enemy's march upon London. It seems, then, to be a matter that can admit of no doubt that all our great dockyards, arsenals, and depots of stores, ammunition, and provisions, must be so far fortified, and so armed with the best artillery which modern science has discovered, as to enable them to hold their own against all comers, naval or military.

Admitting, then, to a certain extent, and to this extent only, the necessity for fortification, it is plain that, after all, our real and most positive dependence must be on men who can be handled as soldiers in the field. A very short time ago most of us would have been inclined to say that nothing less than 120,000 trained soldiers of the regular army, fit in every sense to take the field, could for a moment be considered sufficient. The magnificent spectacle which presented itself to the admiring eyes of thousands of the people of England on Saturday last has very much modified that opinion. It is not too much to say that, looking at the specimens of the volunteer force, the question will be remembered the whole country was represented, which presented themselves at the recent review, a week or two of training in brigades and divisions would be sufficient to make them capable of forming a part of an army in position in any field. It is not merely a casual and unprofessional opinion which is stated when it is said that a comparatively small body of regular troops marched into a threatened district might form that nucleus for turning the volunteer corps into an army which the Old Guard of Napoleon did, and which the corps d'élite of the present French army do to the rest of the forces In such a case there would be no longer a difficulty with regard to the numbers of trained and effective men that could be opposed front to front to any enemy in as many parts of the country as a landing could be effected. The volunteer body, as at present constituted, is not a force of irregular riflemen, but an army of 120,000 men, which only requires the same brief teaching of the manner in which large masses of troops act together as the great bulk of the soldiers of the line, as a general rule, have to do. The artillery arm is already sufficiently for manning the fortified places, which, it is clear, are necessary thus leaving as nearly as possible the whole of the Royal Artillery free for service in the field.

If all this be so, if there is any reality in the existing condition of things, the standing army, even in the numbers which we understand they comprehend within these id ands at the present moment, would be sufficient, in conjunction with the volunteers, to stand the first shock of any invasion which was so far successful as to have permitted the actual presence of hostile armies on the shores of England. The next question, however, that arises is an important one, and that is the question of reserves. Such a state of things as we have indicated cannot be dealt with as if the whole matter depended on a single battle fought, and won or lost, by us, as the case might be. There is no doubt that, in case of necessity, the existing volunteer force might be trebled; but, as regards its efficiency, time would be against the new levies. It is therefore advisable, and something more, that our old volunteers, the Militia, the reserve force which, be it remembered, would be drawn from quite a different class from that to which the volunteers belong, should be reorganised on a footing which would enable the whole regiments to be called out in any part of the country. This can only be done by restoring to the Militia its local character. Let it be a force the head-quarters of which are the centre of a district, and the recruiting for which is carried on in that district, and that the training, which should be periodical and, as we think, simultaneous all over the country, for obvious reasons, would not interfere materially with the ordinary avocations of the men who fill the ranks of that force. The Militia, under the present system of Militia is done away with the better. The force should resume its ancient character, or else let the existing regiments be incorporated with the Line, with which it is now assimilated in almost every regard, as the shape of several battalions. In considering this question as a whole, we are inclined to admit a suggestion which has recently been made for placing a line of forts round London, an operation which, it is calculated, would not cost more than a million of money, and this in the space of twelve months.

Altogether, we think we may venture to say that, with a little energy and a little care, the question of the land defence of the country may be settled satisfactorily. The great difficulty in the way has hitherto been in obtaining that which, after all, is the main element of the subject, and that is the existence of a sufficient body of trained men for service in fortifications and the field. The volunteer force, as at present constituted, has gone far to dispose of that point.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Prince Jerome Bonaparte, ex-King of Westphalia, and the last of the brothers of the Emperor Napoleon I., on Sunday last, at five in the afternoon. On page 641 will be found a portrait and memoir of the deceased Prince. The funeral of Prince Jerome is to take place in the chapel ardente at the Palais Royal till the day of the funeral, which, according to the Pays, is fixed for Tuesday next.

In consequence of the death of Prince Jerome all the guests of their Imperial Majesties left the Palace of Compiègne for Paris. Count Walewski returned there until the end of June. During July the Emperor and Empress will take up their residence at St. Cloud. The Emperor has presented his château of Fontainebleau. The visit to Nice and Chambéry is adjourned till the month of September.

The Moniteur of Tuesday contains a decree prorogating the Session of the Corps Legislatif until the 16th of July. It also contains the appointment of Count Walewski Minister for Foreign Affairs at Nice, in the room of M. Gaillard de Ferry, and the nomination of M. Fleury as Consul-General at Madrid, the latter gentleman at present holding a similar post at Barcelona.

The Chamber of Deputies has voted an extraordinary credit of 1,600,000f. for the laying of an electric cable between Corsica and Algeria.

The Moniteur of Thursday publishes the convention between England and France relative to the division of captures in China.

The Municipal Council of Paris has voted a loan of the city of 150,000,000f. (£4,160,000) to defray the expenses connected with the recent enlargement of the capital.

NAPLES.

The King is so overcome by the troubles that he has taken to his bed to be rid of them. Frightened to death, he promises the most liberal form of government that can be devised, but, like Louis XVI., he is unable to follow up his inspirations from Paris, states that the letter addressed by the Emperor Napoleon to the King of Naples was read on the 25th to the King's Council of Ministers, who, as disposed, was not present. After the contents of the Emperor's letter were known, the King sent for Prince Gallicry for Foreign Affairs at the Council—the adoption of a Constitution; a general amnesty to be granted; a total change of Ministry; Italian alliance with Piedmont: and Italian flag, with the arms of Naples, to be adopted. These resolutions were voted by a majority of nine against five. The Council then separated, and the Ministers repaired to their homes. Signor Torella was appointed to form a Government, and the statute directly. An agreement to be made with the King of Sardinia to subscribe the Napoleonic Violoncello. The Council of Ministers for Sicily, with a Royal Prince as Viceroy." The Patrie contains the following despatch from Naples, dated the 24th inst.:—"The King has accepted the Constitution which has been prepared on a liberal basis, and of which one condition is an offensive and defensive alliance with Piedmont. The Royal decision has been communicated to the diplomatic corps, and has been favourably received. The promulgation of the new Constitution will take place about the beginning of July."

The American and the Sardinian Ministers have made such effective remonstrances that the two ships taken whilst carrying the American flag are to be restored to their owners with an indemnity, and the "passengers," 900 Garibaldines, set free from the prisons of Gaeta.

It is stated that on the 19th inst. the Government dispatched three columns from Naples—viz., one to Basilicata, another towards Salerno, and a third to the Abruzzi. The Castle of St. Elmo had been fortified.

LATEST NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The following telegrams were received through Mr. Reuter's office yesterday (Friday):—

NAPLES, June 26.—In execution of the orders of the King the constitutional Neapolitan tricolor flag has been hoisted at Fort St. Elmo, and was saluted by the whole artillery of the forts.

PARIS, Thursday.—Despatches from Naples dated yesterday, the 27th instant, state that deplorable events had occurred there. The French Ambassador, Baron Brennier, while passing through the Strada di Toledo, when much agitation was prevailing, received several blows on the head from a loaded cane. He fell senseless, and was carried to his hotel. The assailant, Angelina, whom he received the necessary attention. Baron Brennier having counselled liberal reforms, the attempt on his life was attributed to his anti-reform party. It is hoped that his wounds would not prove serious.

AUSTRIA AND PRUSSIA.

A telegram from Vienna announces that, as a consequence of the interview of the Sovereigns at Baden, the Austrian and Prussian Governments have come to an understanding with regard to the reorganisation of the military constitution of the Confederation. The Prince Regent of Prussia has invited the Austrian Cabinet to send a military representative to the conference which will next assemble at Berlin to discuss the question in public service; and that the President and Secretary of War have left Vienna for Berlin, considering the topic of tenderers and the effects of awarding contracts during elections, deserve the reprobation of the House

The following correspondence of the New York Herald states that General Harney has been ordered to report himself to the Secretary of War, viz., Washington. That he has been relieved from his command on the Pacific coast of the United States. If this statement be correct, it removes the apprehensions entertained that a collision may be provoked by General Harney at San Juan.

CHINA.

The allied forces occupied Chusan on the 21st of April without opposition from the Chinese. The English forces were to leave Hong-Kong for the Peiho on the 15th of May. No answer has been received from the Chinese Government to the second communication from the British Minister. The Chinese are making extensive preparations for resistance. The rebel disturbances are over.

THE REVOLUTION IN SICILY.

THE news from Palermo is extremely scanty. Garibaldi is said to be planning an attack on Messina. This is stated to have been decided upon at a council of war held on the 21st. The demolition of Fort Castellamare has been decreed. The first division of the revolutionary forces has marched towards Catania, and another division towards Syracuse. The municipality of Palermo had sent an address to the Dictator requesting him immediate annexation of Sicily to the Italian kingdom. The Dictator replied that such annexation was his wish, that he was a great admirer of King Victor Emmanuel, and that the annexation would be accomplished by the people's vote, but that at present the annexation of Sicily alone would not be advisable.

Garibaldi's civil administration appears to encounter obstacles and difficulties more insuperable than those which opposed his military operations. Prince Torrearsa, who was so recently appointed to the chief post in the civil administration, has already resigned his office; and his resignation has been accompanied by that of other principal members of the Government.

A private letter written on board the Washington, conveying troops to Garibaldi that have since reached Palermo, with two other vessels, having a total of 2,000 men on board under Colonel Medici, gives an interesting account of the difficulties of the voyage and the perseverance of the men:—"Our departure (says the letter) was packed like herrings—1,400 on board this small steamer of 400 tons. On the first day they only got a scrap of bread. The next day plenty of food on board, but no getting at it. No one murmured: indeed, the patience and cheerfulness of the volunteers are beyond all praise. Some of them—many of them—are from the first Italian families, who have never known a hardship before. Here they are, obliged to lie down in their clothes, huddle together rolled up like balls. Many have to stand all night."

A pamphlet, with the heading "M'Mahon, King of Ireland," has been published by Dentu, of Paris, and is exposed in all the booksellers' window

The Journal of Geneva announces that Count de Persigny and Lord John Russell have agreed upon the convention of a European Conference for the adjustment of the question of Savoy.

The ex-King of Oude, having been deprived of the arrears of his pension by the Indian Council, and the Calcutta Government are bringing suits against him to enforce their claims.

JAPAN.—A series of despatches from Mr. Alcock, the English representative at Japan, arrived at the Foreign Office. The first three or four refer to the murder of the late Prime Minister of Japan, and the subsequent assumption of the Regent. While on his way to the palace he was attacked by a band of armed men, and cut to pieces. Six of his guards were killed and several dreadfully wounded. Six of the assailants were killed and fourteen wounded. Thirty suspected persons were arrested, but, on the evidence of his rank were released. The assailants themselves. An insurrection was threatened.

THE CHINA MISSION.—WRECK OF THE "MALABAR."—There is news of a serious disaster off Ceylon. The Malabar, with the two Chinese Princes, Prince Kung and Prince Yih, and Lord Elgin on board, has gone down in the harbour of Galle. The lives of the whole of the people were saved, but not a single article of property has been saved. We are informed by telegraph that the Malabar parted her hawsers in a gale of wind, bumped heavily on the rocks, and went down almost as she lay deeply imbedded in the sand.

The Chinese Ambassadors have left their credentials and papers. They were, however, to set sail for Hong-Kong on the 9th inst.

THE CIVIL WAR IN SYRIA.—A letter from Constantinople dated the 20th inst. says:—"Yesterday 2000 soldiers were sent to Damascus. The garrison of Damascus have committed acts of violence. The Governors of Damascus, Aleppo, and Smyrna have been deposed. The Christians received with joy the news that the Five Great Powers were instituting an inquiry into the recent disturbances, and that measures are always feared. The reserve cavalry of the army are emigrating en masse to the Lebanon. The Christian inhabitants of Aleppo are clamouring for protection. Hassan Bey has been appointed Governor there to investigate the recent inquiries. The Sultan's conduct throughout has given great satisfaction. Lord Lyons has left Pera for the first time for the recommencement for the eleventh time since first breaking out, but now appears to be out of solidship."

THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.—The Dane arrived at Plymouth on Wednesday evening, with news from the Cape to May 22. The Legislature was prorogued on a full organ. Addresses to the Governor in reply were voted at the Cape Town in the expected visit of Prince Alfred. Preparations for a Finance Committee has the Prince's right hand. The Governor's message on the subject of a loan to be been appointed to consider whether the Government should raise the money by loan or by taxation. Some method of direct taxation was carried on with the present session. Some method of direct taxation was expected. A motion to that effect was made in the House of Assembly for instituting a property tax to meet Government. The dissolution of the House was expected, to take place at the close of the Session. A census was ordered to be taken in March, 1861. The schedules contain seventy-four distinct queries, one of which is, How many pigs have you? The Convict Exhibition Bill had passed both Houses. The subject of more frequent mails to England had been brought before Parliament. A fortnightly mail was wanted. All the Kraal district natives had been shut up to prevent drunkenness. The population on the Kaffir border was very unsettled. A Dutch Reform Church Conference on doctrinal subjects had been held. The Church of England financial question was still unsettled. Major-General Bolton was dead. Nothing of importance from the Orange Free State.

The Countess died at Brighton on the 14th of March last, at the age of forty-eight. The will was executed on the 14th of February, 1852.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

GENERAL SIR ROBERT HARVEY.

GENERAL Sir Robert Harvey, of Moorehold House, Norfolk, C.B., K.T.S., K.U.S.A., a distinguished military leader of the Peninsular War, whose death has just occurred, was the representative of an ancient and honourable family of Harvey, of Combe Harvey, son of Mr. Lieutenant-Colonel Hugo Harvey, of Thorpe Lodge, Norfolk, by his wife, Frances, daughter of Sir Roger Kerrison. He was born on the 21st of February, 1793, and, after receiving a general education at home, he studied at Marburg, Leipsic, Heave Canal, and Valenciennes, and was appointed Foreign Foreign Language and a facility in learning which proved most useful to him in his military career. He was gazetted Ensign in 1808, and in March, 1809, he joined, as Captain Harvey of the 52nd, embarking for Lisbon to join the expedition which marched under Sir Arthur Wellesley. In the June of the same year, he became Deputy Assistant Quartermaster-General in Beresford's Portuguese force. At the head of the corps he then commanded, he joined Sir John Moore's convoys and horses forming parties during the cessions' siege of Cuidad Rodrigo, and was present at the battle of Busaco, on the 27th of September, when the British troops were engaged and carried off from the neighbourhood of Pezamosso, though guarded by 40,000 men, under Marshal Soldiers, a large number of prisoners, and 60 pieces of cannon. Captain Harvey and Harvey loaded fifty three country cars with the spoil. For these services he received the war medal, with two clasps, and was made a Knight of the Crescent, and Knight of the Tower and Sword. He was also made a Commander of the guerrilla force (who, strange to say, were for the most part greatly improved in his worth a knowledge of Spanish, and was made and an inscription engraven on the blade. Harvey was present at most of the Peninsular battles. At the second siege of Badajoz, he displayed great skill and ability in his care of the wounded and in establishing hospitals for them. He received, at the close of the campaign, a very flattering and honourable position. He was appointed by Marshal Beresford, the Commander-in-Chief of the Portuguese army, to attend, as one of the staff and organs of communication, on Lord Wellington, the Commander-in-Chief of the British army. Harvey was accordingly with the staff of the latter. At the close of 1814 he was in attendance on the Duke of Wellington, who was then lifted into Ambassador at Paris. Harvey was present at the first time to forward despatches to Lord Beresford, at Lisbon, intrusted them to Harvey, that he was to go forward with them to Madrid, and, after delivering a letter, from Paris to Lisbon, on horseback, in fourteen days—a feat nearly accomplished by any other equestrian, and one which was performed on an extraordinary character, considering the season of the year, the nature of the roads, and the fatigue endured and the hardships to be encountered. At the close of the Peninsular Harvey returned to England, and retired into private life in Norfolk. He married, in 1818, Miss Mary Ann Hoste, daughter of Dr. Hoste, Rector and Rector of Robert Hoste, Esq., of Wood, by whom he had three sons and three daughters. Of the latter two have died. The eldest son, Julius, to Major-General Ivor Stanley, C.B., Deputy Adjutant-General; Henry Churchman Long, Rector of Saxmundham, Norfolk. Colonel Harvey was made a Companion of the Bath, C.B. in 1815, and became a General the 11th of July, 1859. He was also Colonel of the 2nd West India Regiment, and of the Norfolk Artillery Militia. He was a member of the useful part in many acts and sciences. He was a member of the Royal Society and of the Royal Geographical Society. He was also one of the fellows and a member of the council of the Botanic Society, and he was also an original member of the Athenæum Club, and a member of the United Service Club. Sir Robert Harvey was one of the earliest to re-raise the military medal for the Peninsular war, which was first given to officers of the British Gas Light Company; he was also among the first and most spirited patrons of cricket. But Sir Robert was, perhaps, best known, and best declined it, preferring to bear only the honours his military career brought him. He received the honour of Knighthood of the Tower and Sword. Sir Harvey, Esq., who was born in 1816, and married, in August, 1845, Lady Frances Lascelles, daughter of Robert Earl of Harewood, and has a youthful family.

GENERAL MACKENZIE.

THE Mackenzie of Gairloch is the head branch of the "high chiefs of Kintail," and spring from the seventh Baron of Kintail's second son, Alexander Mackenzie, of Fairburn, who married a daughter of Hay and inducted courage, whose deeds of daring are still remembered in the Highlands of Scotland. The gallant General, the subject of this notice, who died at Inverness on the 15th inst., in his ninety-seventh year, was the fifth son of Alexander Mackenzie, of Fairburn, by his wife, the second son of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, third Baronet, of Gairloch, and Lady, his wife, daughter of the Right Hon. Sir John Dalrymple, Earl of Stair, of Gerrey, Esq. He was born in 1764, and entered the British Army in 1778, when he was appointed Ensign in the 73rd Regiment, which was raised by an invasion from the united fleets of France and Spain, which were then lying in the Channel. He was made Lieutenant in the 73rd in 1779; and in 1795 he joined the 76th Highlanders. From that period until 1814 he was in active service, and was present at the capture of the Cape of Good Hope, where Mackenzie was to be found. He went through the campaigns in Egypt, and in the West Indies, and was made Captain of Chelsham, by which he had an early son, Alastair Mackenzie, of Fairburn, who is a Captain and Lieutenant-Colonel in the 42nd Regiment. In 1809, he was made Eliza, daughter of George Hayley, Esq., the American Consul-General, and by her had a family of two sons and two daughters. The eldest son of General Mackenzie was grandnuncle of Sir Kenneth Smith Mackenzie, the gallant and generous Governor of Barbadoes. Mackenzie was at the time of his death the oldest officer in the British Army.

MR. G. P. R. JAMES.

GEORGE PAYNE RAINSFORD JAMES, Esq., late Majesty's Consul-General for the Austrian crowds of the Adriatic, and one of the most known and popular novelists of the day, was the son of Rainsford James, Esq., and the inventor of "James's Powder," and was born in London on the 9th of August, 1799. He was educated at Charterhouse School, where he is said to have distinguished himself by his love of literature. His early bent was not to a Government appointment being frustrated by the death of Lord Liverpool, in 1827, and of Lord Bexley, in 1830, who had promised him employment in literature entirely. Encouraged by the advice of Washington Irving and Sir Walter Scott, he published his first novel, "Richelieu," in 1829, and he was eminently successful, and may be regarded as the Alexandre Dumas of England. His next novel, "Darnley," appeared in 1830, "Rose d'Albret," in 1832, and immediate and very great success, and established his reputation as a writer of historical romances. His "Memoirs of Celebrated Women" are too numerous for us to record their names. Among them, "Memoirs of Mary Queen of Scots," "Life of Queen Mary," "Life of Burgundy," "One in a Thousand," "Marston Hall," "The Jacquerie," "Arabella Stuart," "Mr. James Wrote the scene also historical works, among which were "The History of Chivalry," "History of Charlemagne," "Life of Louis Napoleon," "Life of Alexander the Great," and the "History of Richard Cœur de Lion." As a complimentary tribute to his literary merit, Mr. James was appointed Historiographer to the Queen, and received upon him during the reign of William IV. A more substantial acknowledgment of his literary services was the post of Consul at Venice, which he held for some years. His labours as Consul, however, did not appear to have interfered with his literary pursuits, and the last work from his pen of American his service of note's was hardly interrupted. He was appointed on the 1st of May, 1858, and he held the appointment until 1860, when he resigned till he lamented disease, which occurred in Venice on the 9th inst., from an attack of apoplexy.

Mr. Robert J. Brough, well known as a writer for the stage and contributor to periodical literature, died on Wednesday week at Boulogne, where he had some days before been compelled by intense suffering to halt, on his journey from Venice to Llangollen. Mr. Brough was, we believe, about thirty-two years of age.

Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, on Monday, granted an injunction restraining the Great Northern Railway Company from dealing in coal.

The annual meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, on Monday, at the ordinary meeting of the members of this society was held at the house in Johnstreet, Adelphi, Sir Roderick Murchison, K.C.B., president, in the chair. The secretary read the annual report of the council, which set forth the progress of geographical science during the past twelve months. The year. The committee appointed to consider what would be the most desirable testimonial to be given to Livingstone, the African traveller, made its report, and recommended that of 528 vibrations per second for C, and that has been adopted by the Royal Academy of Musicians. The president of the council during the past year had been the Great International Exhibition of 1862. The receipts were £6,000 in excess of the expenses. February last, an appeal was made, and the fund had been raised to £3221,600, including the sum of £10 000, which his Royal Highness the Prince Consort, the president, had promised to guarantee. It was intended that a portion of the building should be devoted to a permanent character. The council felt that the foundation laid by a guaranteed fund warranted them in anticipating a decided success for the undertaking. The report then read a list of the prizes and medals which had been awarded for papers, &c., and the expenditure of £4567 17s. The balance-sheet showed an excess of assets over liabilities of £6,000 4s. 8d. The debtor side standing at £1629 14s. 5d., and the creditor at £4602s 9d. 8d.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON.

THIS talented and rising young vocalist was born in Glasgow. Having at an early age shown a remarkable love and capacity for music, and having received a musical education in her native city and in London, she went to Paris in 1856, and entered the Conservatoire, where she studied singing under M. Révial, acknowledged to be the first vocal instructor in Paris. The result of her studies and practice was such that, at the annual concours of the students of the Conservatoire, on the 25th of July, 1858, the first prize was unanimously awarded to her, and her success was described by all the principal Parisian journals as a deserved tribute to the talents and attainments of the youthful aspirant. The honour of premier prix at the Conservatoire is a passport to the Académie Impériale, or Grand Opéra, where she appeared with distinction; but, preferring to follow her profession in her own country, she came to London in the beginning of last year, and soon afterwards made her début in England at one of the concerts of the Philharmonic Society, a début the éclat of which was recorded by ourselves and the other musical critics of the press. A few weeks afterwards, being in Scotland, she received by telegraph the Queen's commands to sing at Buckingham Palace, which she did with the warm approbation of the Royal circle. Since the beginning of the present season Miss Thomson has been actively engaged in the duties of her profession, singing at the principal concerts, constantly rising in reputation, and beginning to take her place among the most accomplished artists of the day.

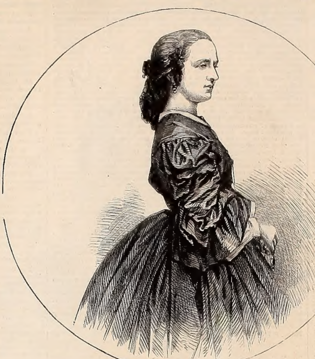
NATIONAL SPORTS.

STOCKBRIDGE produced, as it is wont, the best single-day's racing of the year. Cynic, with any odds against him, Dundee, and Diophantus all won their races, the two former cleverly enough, but the last hardly in a style to please his Derby backers; while poor Underhand had not the most earthly chance in either the Amport Stakes or the Steward's Plate. Dictator, by The Cure, of whom some strong Epsom anticipations had been formed in the North, delighted his friends at Beverley, where Bumby appeared in the racing-saddle for the first time since his accident. Newmarket July, during which Mr. Simpson's yearlings are to be sold, occupies Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. Folkestone and Walloon are the principal public performers in the July Stakes, and Cynic, Folkestone, Copernicus, and Diophantus in the Chesterfield. Earl Stamford's £200 Plate on the Wednesday has a worthy entry of eighty-eight, including Stampedo, Cock-a-Hoop, Duneany, Seclusion, Musjid, Folkestone, Brown Duchess, Lifeboat, and Adrasta (the 1100 guinea yearling), which is also engaged in a 300-sov. match against Polyolbion the same day. The Carlisle meeting, which has nineteen acceptances for its Cumberland Plate, and £100 worth of prizes for its wrestling, is to be held on Tuesday and Wednesday; and Worcester Summer, whose list shows a fine Coventry Stakes entry—to wit, King of Kent, Folkestone, Parasite, Walloon, &c.—comes off on Thursday and Friday.

The cricket fixtures for next week comprise sixteen of the University of Oxford v. England on Monday; and The Household Brigade v. I Zingari on Thursday,—at Lord's. The Monday's match at The Oval is, The Gentlemen of the Surrey Club v. Essex, and that of Thursday, The Gentlemen of England v. The Players. The All England Eleven are matched against Twenty-two of York, at York, on Monday; and The Gentlemen of Sussex v. The Gentlemen of Hants, is the Brighton issue of the same day; while Canterbury, as a preliminary to the Royal Agricultural Show festivities, has a return match on Thursday between Kent and the Marylebone Club and Ground.

Wednesday and Thursday are the Belfast Regatta days, and on Saturday The Clyde Model Yacht Club has a Corinthian match at Hunter's Quay.

THE FARM.



THE Norfolk show found Lord Walsingham head in Southdowns, with Lord Sondes not far behind; and Mr. H. Aylmer asserting his supremacy in Leicesters against Messrs. Sexton and T. Brown, the latter of whom has made a great advance. Lady Pigot and Mr. S. Gooch sent some of the best prize shorthorns, and the Earl of Leicester's Devons and Lord Sondes' polled cattle wore the prize ribbons. Her Ladyship was also successful with the cart mare and foal she won with at Dorchester, and, although Mr. Barthropp was just beaten by Mr. Crisp for the cart-sire prize, he won that for the two-year old colts and two and three year-old cart fillies; and Captain Barlow was consoled for the defeat of Revenge by the prize of the best saddle or harness sire. We omitted to mention last week that the great show at Paris was divided into twenty-five categories, for which 398 prizes were given of the value of £6240, besides gold, silver, and bronze medals for first, second, and third. The nationality of the show was least shown in its pig classes, as out of 237 specimens all save thirty-two were English. Among the twenty-three asses no less than £280 was divided, but some of the specimens were so valuable for mule breeding; that, on dit, in one or two instances 600 gs. was refused.

The Suffolk show, at which the Hackneys will be a great feature, is to be held at Framlingham on Wednesday, near the ruins of the old castle. Thursday will be Mr. Jonas Webb's thirty-fourth tup-letting at Babraham, and on the same day Mr. Strafford holds a sale of part of Mr. Bolden's herd at Springfield, near Lancaster. The fame of the Third Grand Duke and the prolific character of the Waterloo tribe, will make this one of the most important shorthorn gatherings of the season. Only six females of the tribe were sold at Kirklevington, and they averaged £59 10s. apiece.

There are seventeen female Waterloos among the twenty-two cow and heifer lots, and one more to add. It is just seven years since Mr. Bolden got his first Waterloo, and, exclusive of losses, he has bred more than thirty from two cows, and many are now in calf to third Grand Duke, the sire of four out of the six bulls for sale. Prince Imperial, a remarkable combination of Bates and Booth, through second Grand Duke and Bride Cake and Crown Prince, and his son Cannon from Waterloo 16th, will be put up. We believe that Mr. Anthony Maynard and Mr. Torr are almost the only other possessors of the Waterloo tribe, and old Waterwitch has increased and multiplied at Aylesby to the extent of thirty-five females and nineteen bulls and steers.

We hear of two more Prince Talleyrand bull calves, white and roan, at Mr. Ambler's, from a Grand Turk heifer and the dam of Lady Blanche, which distinguished herself at Dublin and Warwick last year. The German Government have purchased the young bull Vice Chancellor from Vivid out of this herd, and Pilot, a choice boar of the white breed. Their commissioner has also selected some shorthorn yearling bulls from Sir Charles Tempest's herd, as well as pigs of the larger breed from Mr. W. B. Wainmans's, of Carr Head, near Skipton, and the whole were dispatched, along with some Ayrshire bulls and heifers, by steamer from London a few days since. The recent French exhibition has shown that if we only keep up our present character for careful breeding we shall never lack an influx of foreign customers to our homesteads, and here is a strong collateral proof.

We recently gave a sketch of the Royal Agricultural College, Cirencester, the summer session of which closed on the 20th inst., when the usual prizes were awarded to the fortunate competitors. Mr. Holland, M.P., the chairman of the managing committee, in addressing the students, adverted to the present prosperous condition of the college, and the advantages to be derived from the sound and practical instruction given by the professors and masters, and took occasion to express the high confidence entertained by the committee and all interested in the college in the management of the Principal (the Rev. John Constable). In acknowledging the remarks of the Chairman, the worthy Principal bore testimony to the exemplary conduct of the students—conduct worthy of gentlemen, and for which he wished thus publicly to thank them. He was most anxious to be rather on a friendly than an official relation with the students, and the occasions were rare in which he had to assume the face of the Principal—a face no more pleasant to himself than to them. College diplomas were awarded to Mr. W. E. Ivey, of Hobart Town, Tasmania, and Mr. E. Dixie, of Middleton-square, London. The examination-papers comprised questions in agriculture, geology, chemistry as applicable to agriculture, surveying and drawing, veterinary pathology and anatomy, and natural philosophy, which form the leading subjects of instruction. We are glad to hear that numerous entries have been already made for the ensuing session, and that the college is now so well established.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

I. B., of Bridport.—Be good enough to forward your present address.

W. S. L., Sligo.—A player must be ill-informed upon chess laws to assert that, in the position questioned, a King could take the Bishop. The merest tyro in the game knows that a piece does not lose its protecting power by being "pinned." You win, of course, upon both points.

W. C. R.—Your suggestions as to Problem No 850 have been submitted to the author. In No. 851 you will find that if Black take the Knight his adversary administers check with the Bishop at K R 7th, not at Q 5th.

A LOVER OF CHESS, Melbourne.—Thanks for the specimens of Australian play. They are evidently the work of inexperienced hands, but the termination of the first, on White's side, affords great promise of future excellence. We should be glad to hear some account of the Melbourne Chess Club, which was established under the presidency of Sir George Stephen.

The tallest man in France has just expired, near Rouen, at the age of seventy-one, being M. Charles Gruel d'Indreville, of Nesle, Normandouse, who founded, and for many years carried on, some very extensive glassworks at that place. His stature was nearly 7 ft. 6 in., English, and his body was stout in proportion.

The Viceroy of Egypt has given orders that a scientific expedition should be organised, to observe the approaching total eclipse on the line of totality in Africa.

LITERATURE AND ART.

MOST bookworms are familiar with the pamphlet of the episcopal savant which commenced with a disquisition on the virtues of tar-water and ended in an abstruse theological controversy. Acting on a similar principle, we do not see why we should not make every topic of the day—from the annexation of Savoy to the inspection of coal-mines, subserve those purposes of literature and art which we have most at heart, and the fewer apologies are therefore needed for devoting at least a dozen words to the magnificent volunteer review of Saturday last. Of course we were there; and it is our duty to add our quota to that meed of thanks most gratefully bestowed on Mr. Cowper for the ample accommodation given to the press. The gallery placed at the disposal of the Fourth Estate was the most successful edition of "Cowper's works, bound in boards," that we have lately seen, and its comforts were highly appreciated by a select band of pen-and-ink wrights, who, although they are sometimes denounced as "those fewwows who scwibble" by military exquisites, had a considerable amount of work cut out for them by the review: having just to sit and look at it for about six hours and then to sit and write about it for six hours more. The journalists have been twitted with not forming a volunteer corps of their own, and the "Press gang" has been suggested as a graceful and appropriate title for them; nor could the command of such a body be better bestowed than on the renowned "Pen of the War," whose martial lineaments, by the way, beamed among the more exalted spectators on Saturday last. But then, if the journalists were all marching shoulder to shoulder, and looking straight ahead in accordance with the dictates of military discipline, who, we should like to know, would officiate as the Xenophon or the Tacitus for next day's paper? However, Literature was not wholly unrepresented among the rank and file who passed in review before her Majesty in Hyde Park. The most prolific dramatist of the day marched at the head of the Whitehall company, and a vivacious and chatty essayist appeared in the panoply of an Ensign in the Post Office corps of the Civil Service Brigade.

In its artistic aspect the review gave us a birdseye view of "all the talents" of the easel concentrated in the Artists' Corps, commanded by Lord Bury. The great Pre-Raphaelite, John Everett Millais, was recognised at once by the aristocratic company and warmly applauded. Indeed, the Artists divided curiosity throughout the day, with the Ambassadors from Morocco, whose bronzed countenances, snowy burnouses, and extraordinary poupaches made them the observed of all observers.

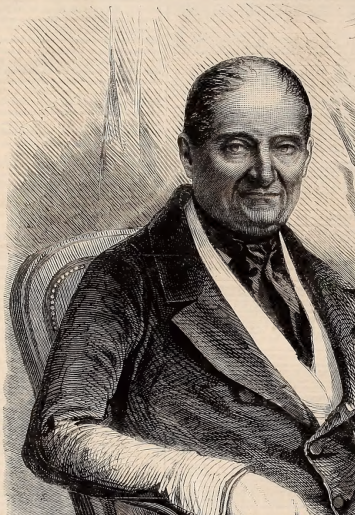
But we are warned off the premises of personality. We hope it is no hanging matter to mention an honourable British artist by name; but these are parlous times, and a recent flagrant example shows how dangerous it is to talk familiarly of authors and artists in their habits as they live. The Saturday Review lately thought it worth while to disinter a mass of wretched rubbish mixed with spiteful lies about eminent literary Englishmen which had appeared in the columns of the New York Times under the specious title of "Echoes from the London Clubs." We disdain to give additional currency to the miserable cancans which the transatlantic "cad" or his London correspondent presumed to indite concerning Mr. Thackeray, Mr. Dickens, and, in particular, concerning the amiable and accomplished gentleman by whose firm is published the Cornhill Magazine. Had the Saturday Reviewer known or chosen to know anything about American manners he would have been aware that the London correspondence of the American press is, almost without an exception, a farrago of the paltriest gossip mingled with the foulest lies. Sensible men laugh at and despise these absurdities and these untruths, and the fools and knaves who indorse them; but we cannot help thinking that an English journal which assumes to be respectable and which takes up such kennel literature as this, and, while affecting to deplore, positively gloats over its existence, acts, at best, but the part of Crabtree to the Sir Benjamin Backbite in this Yankee "School for Scandal."

It is our melancholy duty to notice the death of another hard-working member of the press. Mr. John Philip Doyle, the editor of one of the popular weekly journals, is now no more. After struggles which but few literary men can understand, Mr. Doyle was beginning to attain eminence, not only in his own profession, but in that of the Bar, to which he had also become affiliated. He had every chance of distinction as an advocate in the criminal courts. He was an Irishman, and a notable example of a class of warm-hearted, generous, and educated men who are continual denials to the assertions of the malevolent and obscure that Irish merit is depreciated or Irish friendship undervalued in this metropolis.

The interesting excavations at Wroxeter still continue, and some of these days we may possess a museum of Roman antiquities culled from our English Pompeii which may rival the Museo Borbonico at Naples. Tesselated pavements, antique pottery and glass, coins, and artisans' tools continue to be dug up. Perhaps the excavators will come at last on some wall-scribblings recalling the graffiti of Pompeii. Only imagine a caricature of Caligula depicted as suspended from the forca! It is with infinite regret we hear that the works of excavation proceed but slowly, and that the committee are hampered in their operations by the want of funds. Surely the Wroxeter enterprise is one to which Government assistance should be promptly and generously extended. It is to the full as useful and interesting to rescue the relics of Roman civilisation from superincumbent crops of turnips and mangold-wurzel as to spend thousands of pounds and years of time in clearing away the dust from, and transcribing the obsolete pandects of, de Brehon laws.

We see that a collection of papers by the late Douglas Jerrold is announced. The book bears the odd title of "The Brownrigge Papers." No scandal against Queen Elizabeth, or Mother Brownrigge, christened Elizabeth, we hope. Publishers' rumours also point to a forthcoming work of fiction by Mr. Blanchard Jerrold, the son of the great wit and comic dramatist. Then, we are to have an "official" life of Robert Stephenson by Mr. John Cordy Jeaffreson, of "Novels and Novelists" celebrity, which, if it be only a tithe as good as Mr. Samuel Smiles's life of George Stephenson, will still be admirable reading.

Of course Mr. Charles Reade can't do anything like anybody else, not even in the composition of a book title. Was there ever a queerer name for a novel than the "Eighth Commandment"? Considering the French parentage of a novel Mr. Reade once wrote for the London Journal, this designation from the Decalogue might have been with more propriety applied to "White Lies." But by this time all Mudie's subscribers will have broken the "Eighth Commandment," or, at least, have cut its leaves.



Mr. Frith, the Royal Academician, ought to abandon megilp or copal as media, and paint wholly in gold-size. The prices his pictures bring are positively astounding. The other day, at Christie's, Mr. Frith's pleasant and picturesque but not by any means first-rate picture of "Coming of Age in the Olden Time" was sold for £1750, or guineas, we forget which. Another and much slighter work from his facile pencil brought 800 guineas. On the other side of the water the mania seems to be just now for old china, and not for pictures. At the Hôtel des Ventes three vieux Sèvres vases, enameled in bleu du roi and adorned with paintings of Bacchanals and Bacchantes by the famous Boucher, were put up at 25,000 francs (£1000), and after a sharp competition were knocked down to the Marquis of Hertford for 63,000 francs (£2520).

We conclude with a commendation of the Exhibition of Works of Decorative Art which has been lately opened at the fine old hall of the Worshipful Company of Painters and Painterstainers at Queenhithe, and in which the excellent principle has been carried out of affixing to the works exhibited the name of the artisans who designed and executed them.

JEROME BONAPARTE.

HIS Imperial Highness Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte, a Prince and a Marshal of France, formerly King of Westphalia, and Prince of Montfort, was a man of no ordinary stamp, and has held a prominent position even among the greatest of the mighty dynasty to which he belonged. He was the fifth son of Charles Marie Bonaparte, by his wife, Maria Letitia de Ramolino, "Madame Mère" during the Empire, and was the youngest brother of Napoleon I. He was born at Ajaccio on the 15th of November, 1784, and was the following day christened "Geronimo," or Jerome, by which, in common with those of his house in succession to the Empire, he latterly added the additional name of Napoleon Jerome; and was but four years old when his family were compelled, as the persecutors of the party fault to leave Co rsica and take refuge on the Continent. Jerome was then taken to France, and his earliest teacher there was Mdme. Campan, afterwards the able governoress of the Imperial school for ladies at St. Cyr. In 1793 he went to the College of Juilly. Whilst he was studying there the full splendour of his brother's career had begun, and was already dazzling the world. The coup d'état of November, 1799, known as the 18th Brumaire, made Napoleon First Consul, and virtually Dictator and Sovereign of France. Jerome's first active part in the political fortune of his race was naval. He was 1799, at the very time of the 18th Brumaire, appointed a midshipman.

In the following year he became Lieutenant on board a frigate. He served in the expedition against St. Domingo, under the command of General Leclerc, his sister the Princess Pauline's husband, by whom he was sent to France to announce the successful disembarkation of the troops. Having accomplished this mission, he re-embarked on a cruise of observation before the island of Martinique; but he was forced by the English to abandon his surveillance and put into the port of New York. It was in this city that he married Miss Elizabeth Patterson, the daughter of a rich planter of Baltimore. The Spanish Envoy asked the hand of the young American for Jerome, the Consul of France signed the marriage contract, and the Abbé Caroli, the principal Catholic Bishop of the United States, celebrated the nuptial ceremony, which took place on the 24th of December, 1803. This marriage, contracted without Napoleon's assent, displeased him, as he contemplated a higher connexion for his brother, and he declared it null and void, on account of Jerome's minority. The Pope, however, would not consent to the issue of this marriage being regarded as aught else but legitimate. The young wife, brought as far as Amsterdam in the ship Erin, was not allowed to enter France; she went immediately to England, and took up her abode in the environs of London, where she shortly afterwards (July 7, 1805) gave birth to a son, who, unlike Napoleon, the only fruit of this unfortunate union, Sir Bernard Burke, in the just-published second series of his "Vicissitudes of Families"—in his account of the Bonapartes (and where can there be greater vicissitudes than theirs!)—thus speaks of the first-born of Jerome and Elizabeth Patterson, of Baltimore, was a lady of station and fortune in the United States, of Irish extraction, sister of Robert Patterson, Esq., the first husband of the late Marchioness Wellesley, and grand-daughter of old O'Carroll of Carrollstown, the original signers of the declaration of American independence. Her son by Jerome is now resident, I believe, in Baltimore.

THE LATE PRINCE JEROME BONAPARTE.

After having undergone a temporary disgrace, Jerome, now a Prince of the newly-founded Empire, was sent by the Emperor, to ratify the end of the year 1805, to claim from the Dey of Algiers a number of Genoese subjects held in slavery by that Potentate. He accomplished this mission most successfully. Having become captain, he went in charge of a squadron of eight ships of the line to Martinique in 1806, and on his return was promoted to the rank of Vice-Admiral. In the following year he left the naval service to undertake the command of an auxiliary corps of Bavarians and Würtembergers, at the head of which he occupied the province of Silesia during the Russian campaign. On the 14th of March, 1807, after the peace of Tilsit, he was named a General of Division; on the subsequent 12th of August he married Princess Frederica Catherine Sophia Dorothea of Frederick, late King of Würtemberg; and on the 1st of December was placed by Napoleon upon the throne of Westphalia, a kingdom which had been created on purpose for him. In his capacity of King he showed himself to be something more than the simple lieutenant of Napoleon: he applied himself with energy to the fulfilment of his duties; he restored the finances of his kingdom, reformed several abuses in the Administration, introduced religious liberty, and embellished Cassel, his capital. His conduct, however, was rather too independent to always obtain the approbation of the Emperor, who, on several occasions, summoned him to Paris to remind him of the obligation which the possession of a throne imposes. In 1812 he was called to the command of a corps-d'armée composed of German troops, and distinguished himself in the engagements at Otrowno and Mohilew. In October, 1813, being forced to retire before the Russians, Jerome rallied a few French detachments and returned to Westphalia, which he quitted hurriedly on learning the result of the battle of Leipsic, and in 1814 he rejoined at Munich his princess, whom he tenderly loved, whose affection remained undiminished throughout her husband's days of adversity; he afterwards resided at Trieste and Naples, and returned to Paris in the month of April, 1815. During the Hundred Days he assisted at the ceremony of the Champ de Mars, as well as at the sittings of the House of Peers, in which he took his place as a French Prince. He received a command in the Belgian campaign, and signalised himself at the battle of Waterloo. He was wounded in the struggle at Hougoumont, and only abandoned the field when every hope of success was lost. He came back with Napoleon to Paris.

Upon the Emperor's second abdication Jerome left Paris secretly on the 25th of June, and contrived, after having wandered for some time in France and Switzerland, to rejoin his wife in Würtemberg, where the allied Powers allowed him to remain, under a promise to live unostentatiously, and not to take any of his fellow-countrymen into his service. His father-in-law, King Frederick, however, wanted to separate him from his wife, Queen Catherine, but her affection would not permit this, and then Frederick made the devoted couple live as quasi prisoners in his castle of Ellwangen. In 1816 Jerome's father-in-law conferred upon him the title of Prince of Montfort, and allowed him and his consort to depart his realms. Jerome and Catherine, as Prince and Princess of Montfort, during many years resided either at the Château of Baümbourg, near Vienna, at Trieste; or at Florence, where Jerome had a palace. On the 28th of November, 1835, Catherine died: her death was deeply felt by Jerome: and the splendid alliance of his daughter in 1841 with Prince Demidoff hardly roused him from his sorrow.

Prince Jerome had, on his personal responsibility, petitioned, the 18th of April, 1847, the French Chamber of Deputies to allow him to return to France. This petition, after a most exciting debate, was rejected by so small a majority that Louis Philippe and his Government must needs yield. Jerome was restored to the rights of a French citizen, and had permission to inhabit Paris. He settled there towards the end of 1847; and his return, marking the then weakness of Louis Philippe's power, was the sign of some mighty change about to occur, and was, in fact, the prologue to the recueil of the Imperial throne. Jerome welcomed with joy the Revolution of 1848, which put an end to the long proscription of his family, rallied round him the old Bonapartists, and employed all the means in his power to ensure the triumphant election of his nephew as President of the Republic. Napoleon III. showed his gratitude to his uncle for this devotion by appointing him at first to the Governor-Generalship of the Hôtel des Invalides (December 17, 1848), and by conferring upon him, on the New Year's Day of 1850, the dignity of Marshal of France, for having twice commanded in chief—Jerome and at Waterloo. Shortly after the coup d'état of 1851 he was called to the presidentship of the Senate, formally reinstated in his rank of French Prince, and provided with a military establishment, a civil list, and the national residences of the Palais Royal, of Villers-le-Bel, and of Meudon. In the absence of the Emperor Napoleon III. he used frequently to preside over the Council of Ministers; and during the recent war in Italy his High ness was ever present on such occasions to give the Empress the benefit of his sage advice.

By his first marriage, with Miss Patterson, Prince Jerome had but one son, Jerome, who, as mentioned above, resides in Baltimore, where he has married an American lady, Miss Susanna Gay, and leads a life of modest tranquillity in the midst of agricultural pursuits. Prince Jerome by his second marriage with the Princess Catherine of Würtemberg, had two sons—Jerome Napoleon Charles, Count of Montfort, who was born on the 24th of August, 1814, and died at Florence in May, 1847; and Prince Napoleon Joseph Charles Paul, General of Division, who was born at Trieste on the 9th of September, 1822, and married, on the 30th of January, 1859, the Princess Clotilde of Savoy, daughter of the King of Sardinia, and one daughter, Mathilde-Letitia-Wilhelmina, now so well and popularly known in Paris as the Princess Mathilde, who was born at Trieste on the 27th of May, 1820, and was married in 1841 to the rich Russian Prince Demidoff. Since the restoration of the Bonapartes her Imperial Highness inhabits Paris, and on all grand occasions graces the Court of her cousin Napoleon by her presence, her amiability, and her talents. Prince Jerome died, after a lingering illness, on the 24th inst., at his seat of Villegenis, near Paris.

FINE ARTS.

SCULPTURES IN IVORY.
BY BARON DE TRIGUETI.

We have been very much pleased with some sculptures in ivory by Baron de Triqueti which are now on view at Messrs. Colnaghi's, Pall-mall. The most important of these works in a wax, in bronze, with bas-reliefs in ivory, representing "The Dreams of Youth and of Maturity." The first idea of this subject is very original, and it is carried out with great poetic fervour and artistic skill. The designs are four in number, and represent respectively the Young Girl, the Youth, the Man of Labour, and the Man of Thought. The visions of the young girl, a graceful, sleeping figure, are of the happy future when communications and the duties of maternity are mingled with the still surviving pleasures of childhood, represented by a group of sporting children, admirably executed. The dreams of the youth are of love suggested by the whisperings of a young girl, who stoops over his head, of the industrious pleasures of the field, of glory, and of all impersonated by fleeting figure, full of vigour and power. To the man off labour, sleeping soundly after the day of toil, the vision is one of abundant harvests—success and fortune to reward his exertions; the Genius of Labour, seated in stately repose, displays emblems of abundance, greeting his sawings with Petrarch's words, "Beato in Seguo." The man of thought is typified in the poet, who, sleeping beneath the statue of Fame, sees his dreams realised and crowned by his great predecessors, Homer, Virgil, Sappho, and Dante. Exalted, sentimental, as sentiment, in the words of Dante—

In tanto voce fo per me udita
Ch'amor l'allisuno poeta

whilst, to qualify this excited aspiration, the figure of Genius at his feet recalls to him the sufferings inseparably attached to great destines. These bas-reliefs, which show so much thought and invention, are composed in a masterly manner, and carried with an exactness and softness of handling worthy of the best age of sculpture. In the same room are three pieces of ivory sculpture in the round, which show even superior excellence. "The Dying Cleopatra" is one of the most impressive bits, most exquisitely wrought out we ever met with. The Queen, upon whom the poison has begun to work with fatal effect, reclines in an arm-chair of antique form; from the left hand and arm, now involuntarily relaxed, falls the basket of figs in which the asp had been concealed; whilst the right, with a faint expiring convulsive effort, grasps the edge of her robe. Upon the whole, this subject has been treated with most perfect classical taste and masterly execution. "First Love" is a subject taken from Ovid's "Metamorphoses," b. iv.:—

Nescia quid sit amor, sed erubuisse decitat and represents a young female who knows not yet the blandishments of love, listening unsuspectingly to the addresses of a pert young Cupid, and "blushing all unconsciously" at the fervent and flattering appeal. This group, though the work is yet unfinished, evinces the unmistakable genius. The remaining sculpture, "A Faun Playing the Cymbals," is most spirited in conception and faultlessly executed. We may speak of these works as worthy of the especial notice of connoisseurs of blight art, though we doubt whether any price they are likely to realise can repay the amount of time and labour bestowed upon them.

NEW PRINTS.

Although the present unsatisfactory state of the copyright law has operated very seriously to the discouragement of specialist in engraving, the publishers have not been altogether idle. Messrs. Hunt, Graves and Co., for example, produce a goodly array, in various styles, which we must briefly notice. First in importance, on account of its historical character and of the position which the original occupies, is Mr. Cope's fine fresco, though rather German in character, of "The Pilgrim Fathers Landing from Shallop, Kneeling before they Worship God on the Shores of Leeds, which has been admirably engraved by Knight. Next we notice an engraving by Atkinson, after Sir Joshua's impressive picture of "Louis XVII. in the Temple," never before done adequate justice to by the engraver. In the present version the genius and character of the original are admirably realised. Dobson's beautiful child-group, "Reading the Psalms," the original of which is in the possession of Miss Burdett Coutts, has been worthily represented and generally appreciated in the line-engraving executed of it by Cousins. An engraving after a companion has just been issued in an engraving of the same artist's well-known subject, "The Fairy Tale," admirably executed by a young and rising engraver named Chant. In this work the intensely engrossed expression in the face of the reading child is inscribably beautiful, and a judicious taste has been exercised in the exclusion from the engraving of the groups of figures in the far inner set, which, however amusing in effect, marred the quiet sentiment of the picture. "The Ayrshire Lassie," engraved by Cousins, after Faed, comes as an appropriate companion to the same artist's well-known "Highland Mary." Nowhere is the fine intelligence of Newton when a youth, seated in a rolling attitude, wrapped in contemplation, painted for the late Mr. Vernon, better seen, and when the progress of years has been engraved in mezzotint, with most perfect success, by J. T. Atkinson. To conclude: in portraiture we have Grau's fine and speaking full-length of the late Earl of Derby, admirably produced by Bromley, and Pearce's portrait of Captain M Clintock, the last and most successful hero of north-western exploration, engraved by Davis.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 30, 1860.

PARLIAMENT has not had much business of an exciting character, before it; but when the Report on the Proceedings of Conference by the Lords with Money Bills comes on for discussion it may be presumed that some spirited debate will arise. Mr. Coucily, an Irish Conservative member, availed himself of an opportunity of a fierce attack upon Lord Cathlia, the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, for some of his appointments, and Mr. French followed on the same side, and declared that the Viceroy lowered the dignity of his office by having "theatrical performers" and "horse-tamers" to his table—alluding, we presume, to Mr. and Mrs. Keas, and Mr. Rarey. A good many people have the entrée to the Castle who bear much less respectable characters, and talk much less respectable English, than those guests. Sir Richard Bethell threatened to withdraw his valuable Bankruptcy Bill because the House came to a vote adverse to the ancillary schemes of compensation, but reconsidered the question. The bill for protecting the children engaged in bleaching and dyeing factories from the cruel operations practised upon them has been violently resisted by a small section, but proceeds, favoured by the humane instincts of an assembly of gentlemen who, as Mr. Edwin James well said, do not think that children were sent into the world only to be used up in manufactories. The report on precedents, to which we have alluded, is understood to be from the pen of Mr. Walpole, with modifications, and to have been approved by all the members of the Committee except three, Lord John Russell, Mr. Gladstone, and Mr. Bright. It is not supposed that any kind of "collision" will be result, though the House of Commons will probably show itself sufficiently and constitutionally jealous of its own rights.

His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has performed his first public act. On part of the site of poor Vauxhall some schools, including a school of art, for the benefit of the parish of St. Mary-the-Le, have been projected, and the Prince consented to lay the first stone. This his Royal Highness did on Wednesday, in the presence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, three bishops, the 19th Surrey Rifles, and a very large audience. The speech was extremely short and simple, and in good taste, and it need hardly be added that the son of Queen Victoria delivered it with the best grace of diction.

We need not in this place do more than note that the review of the household guard of England, to the number of 5,000, of whom London and its adjacent districts furnished 13,226, took place on Saturday. Never before did such a ceremonial testify to the wearer of a crown how profoundly a people loved and venerated the institutions of which that crown is the symbol. The day was the grandest in the modern history of England. Not as a mere sight, for though that was imposing, the absence of gay uniforms and of the excitement of firing made the spectacle far less effective than would have been the display of a few Adelaide Gallery guns.

The marshaling of 18,000 armed men, mustering of their own free will, and at their own cost, and as representatives of thousands on thousands more ready to do soldier's duty in defence of Queen and country, was a sound and significant

Who that shared it ever can forget
The emotion of that spirit-stirring time!

When murder and treachery fail, and Garibaldi is amusing the throne, by a constitution, the republican it will be very moment, and hang those who shall have been deluded into taking office under it. Such has been the advice of the priests to King Bomba, and a most liberal Constitution is proffered to his Holiness and Sicilians. If they can read the history of their own time as not to recall the fact that the King's father did exactly the same thing under pressure, and that men still live who have been ruined in body and in goods by the promises which he delivered from the sanctuary of Gaeta, they must be hard to reason with them. But it is impossible to suppose them so fatuous. The game is up, and this is merely the last resource of a despairing tyrant. The Neapolitans will not be even accept a Constitution at the hands of the blood-dyed hands. Let them clear away the hateful race of Bourbons, and then deliberate for themselves as to their next form of Government. Those who would help them may like to know that there is a treasurer in London who is appointed by General Garibaldi to receive English subscriptions for the cause of liberty. This is Mr. Ashurst, of 6, Old Jewry. Contributions to that fund will help the Italians to a better Constitution than the best of any King.

Lord Elgin and his brother Ambassador, the Baron de Gros, have been wrecked, the Malabar being driven upon the rocks of Gallo by a fearful storm. All the baggage and bullion went to the bottom; but, happily, no lives were lost, and the noble Ambassadors of England and France will have resumed their voyage. The English have taken possession of Chusan. Whatever is done will have to be done thoroughly, as we cannot be content with not expeditions to keep the Chinese ports open, and it is to be hoped that Lord Elgin, who is esteemed an excellent man, but rather given to be convinced by other opinions than his own, will not allow himself to be talked into withdrawing a single soldier from China until the road to Pekin is as open to Englishmen as the road to Windsor. The Indian news is not very important, but Sir Hugh Rose has assumed his command, and Lord Clyde was at Calcutta, preparing for his homeward voyage. The ovation he will receive here should be worthy the services of India, at present we hear of nothing in store for him but a Colonelcy, such as was given the other day to a Prince's private secretary.

Her Majesty and his Royal Highness the Prince Consort, accompanied by the youthful members of the Royal family, purpose, according to present arrangements, to leave Buckingham Palace on the 7th inst. for Osborne.

THE COURT.

The Queen held a Court yesterday week, when Sidi Mohammed il Shameo, Ambassador from the Emperor of Morocco, and Hadjee Abdenhaman all Augee, Envoy, had an audience, introduced by Lord John Russell. The Prince Consort, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, visited the National Gallery in the morning. His Royal Highness inspected the Hon. Artillery Company in the afternoon, whilst the Prince of Wales visited the French Exhibition in Pall-mall. Professor Henslow concluded a course of lectures on botany, in the presence of the Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, Princess Alice, and other members of the Royal family. In the evening the Queen gave a State ball, to which a party of 1921 were invited. Her Majesty wore a black silk dress with a deep flounce of black Nottingham lace, trimmed with lilacs and green leaves, and ornamented with diamonds, and a head-dress composed of a wreath of lilacs and green leaves and diamonds. Princess Alice wore a dress of white tulle over a rich white glacé, studded with pansies and bows of black velvet. The head-dress was formed of pansies and diamonds; ornaments, diamonds. The Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz wore a dress of white tulle with silver. The stomacher, necklace, and earrings, of diamonds. The head-dress was composed of a tiara of diamonds, heartsease, and silver wheat-ears. Princess Mary of Cambridge wore a pink crape dress covered with a tunic of Brussels lace, trimmed with bouquets of pink flowers and silver cord; the corsage to correspond; a pearl and diamond stomacher, and a tiara of diamonds and pink flowers.

The Queen went on Saturday afternoon to review the Volunteer Rifle Corps in Hyde Park. The Prince Consort presided in the evening at a dinner at the Trinity House, of which corporation his Royal Highness is Master. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Alice, the Prince of Wales, and the Count of Flanders, honoured the Italian Opera with her presence in the evening.

On Sunday the Queen and the Prince Consort, the King of the Belgians, the Prince of Wales, Princess Alice, Prince Arthur, and Princesses Helena and Louise, attended Divine service in the private chapel, Buckingham Palace. The Rev. Henry Drury, Chaplain to the House of Commons, preached.

The Queen and Prince Consort, accompanied by the Prince of Wales, Princess Alice, and the Count of Flanders, left for Aldershott on Monday, where the Royal party was joined by the Duke of Saxe-Coburg. The King of the Belgians left Buckingham Palace on a visit to the Duchess of Kent at Frogmore.

There was a grand review on Tuesday afternoon at Aldershott, followed by a sham fight. Twenty thousand troops were on the ground. The Queen and Court returned to Buckingham Palace in the evening.

On Wednesday the Prince Consort, attended by Earl Spencer, Major-General the Hon. Charles Grey, and Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. D. De Ros, left Buckingham Palace at half-past twelve o'clock for Oxford, and attended a meeting of the British Association, at which Lord Wrottesley was appointed President of the Association in succession to his Royal Highness. The Prince Consort returned to Buckingham Palace at half-past seven. The Prince of Wales, attended by Major-General the Hon. R. Bruce, Colonel the Hon. Sir Charles Phipps, and Lieutenant-Colonel Keppel, went in the afternoon, shortly before four o'clock, to lay the first stone of the new School of Art at Vauxhall. The Queen had a dinner party in the evening at Buckingham Palace. The company included the King of the Belgians, the Duchess of Cambrdige, Princess Alice, the Prince of Wales, the Count of Flanders, the Duke of Saxe-Coburg, the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Princess Mary, Prince Victor of Hohenlohe, &c.

On Thursday the Queen received the Duke and Duchess D'Aumale at luncheon at Buckingham Palace. The Prince Consort went to the Provident Institution in St. Martin's-lane; and afterwards presided at a meeting of the Royal Commission for the Exhibition of 1861. The Prince of Wales rode out on horseback; and the Queen, accompanied by Princesses Alice and Beatrice, drove out in an open carriage and four. In the evening her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Alice, the Prince of Wales, and the Count of Flanders, honoured the performance of the Royal Italian Opera with her presence. The Prince Consort, with the Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, went to the Haymarket Theatre.

PRINCE OF WALES' VISIT TO CANADA

We understand that the arrangements for the visit of the Prince of Wales are now completed, and are as follows:—

His Royal Highness will start from Devonport, upon the 10th of July, in her Majesty's steamer Hero, Captain C. H. Seymour, which will be accompanied by her Majesty's steamer Ariadne, Captain E. W. Vansittart, and her Majesty's steamer Flying Fish, Captain C. W. Hope.

The Prince will be attended by her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, his Grace the Duke of Newcastle; the Lord Steward of her Majesty's Household, the Earl of St. Germans; his Royal Highness's Governor, Major-General the Hon. R. Bruce; and the Equerries in Waiting, Major Teesdale, R.A., and Captain Grey, Grenadier Guards; and Dr. Acland, his Royal Highness's physician.

The Prince of Wales will first land at St. John's, Newfoundland, then visit Nova Scotia, and thence proceed to visit New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and will reach Quebec by route of the St. Lawrence. He may be expected at Montreal about the 23rd of August, and the opening of the Victoria Bridge will take place a few days later.

His Royal Highness will represent her Majesty upon this important national occasion, and will hold Levees and receive addresses in the capitals of the different colonies. It is intended that the Prince should visit the principal towns in both Canadian provinces.

On his return from the western districts it is intended that his Royal Highness should drop all Royal state, and assume the title of Lord Renfrew, under which he has before travelled upon the continent of Europe. His Royal Highness will visit some of the most important and interesting localities of the United States.

It is understood that the President, Mr. Buchanan, having, in an autograph letter to the Queen, expressed his personal desire to receive the Prince at Washington, his Royal Highness will pay him a visit in that city, and that his Royal Highness has also accepted an invitation from the city of New York.

His Royal Highness may be expected back in this country about the middle or end of October.

The Queen will hold a Privy Council this day (Saturday) at Buckingham Palace.

THE PRINCE OF WALES AND THE LAMBETH SCHOOL OF ART.—The foundation-stone of a School of Art, to be erected on the site of the old Vauxhall Gardens, was laid on Wednesday afternoon by the Prince of Wales. It was the first time his Royal Highness had taken the principal part in any public ceremonial of this kind. Amongst the company were the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of Bath and Wells, Winchester, and Chichester, Earl Granville, the Earl of Shrewsbury, Sir William Dunbar, Bart., M. P., Sir Charles Napier, M.P., Mr. John Locke, M.P., Mr. Alcock, M.P., Mr. Roupell, M.P., Archdeacon Sinclair, the Archdeacon of Surrey, Lord Kingsdown, Mr. Hubbard, M.P., Mr. G. Cubitt, M.P., Archdeacon Bentinck, Mr. H. Cole, C.B., Mr. G. Godwin, Mr. R. Redgrave, Mr. C. W. Dilke, and many clergymen. His Royal Highness arrived at four o'clock, accompanied by Sir C. Phipps, Colonel Bruce, and Lieutenant-Colonel Keppel. A guard of honour was formed by the 19th Surrey Volunteers, under the command of Captain Truman and Lieutenant Smithers. The band of the Scots Fusilier Guards was also in attendance. An address explaining the plan and objects of this institution was read by the Rev. R Gregory, Incumbent of the parish of St. Mary-the-Less, and chairman of the committee. His Royal Highness, having received the address, made the following reply:—"Gentlemen, I thank you very sincerely for your address, and for the gratifying terms in which you allude to my presence here to-day. Although I have hitherto refrained from taking part in ceremonies of this nature, it has afforded me much pleasure to accede to your request, and thus to associate myself with an undertaking the objects of which you have so well described and with which I most heartily sympathise. Permit me, then, to tender to you my warm congratulations upon the success which has already attended your zealous and judicious exertions in behalf of those who could not otherwise have obtained the advantages which this institution is intended to confer, and to express my earnest hope that the results, both as regards the individuals immediately benefited and the public at large, may exceed your most sanguine expectations." Special prayers were intoned by the Rev. G. W. Herbert, four collects being read by the Bishop of Winchester, after which the Prince of Wales, having received the trowel from the architect, placed the stone, saying, "In the faith of Jesus Christ we place this foundation-stone, in the name of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost. Amen." The Bishop of Winchester pronounced the benediction, and the National Anthem was sung by the choir of the church and the visitors. His Royal Highness left the ground amidst very hearty cheering.

THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION.—The annual meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science commenced on Wednesday, at Oxford, by a grand gathering of savans and others in the Sheldonian Theatre, one of the ornaments of this ancient city. The theatre was well filled. Fully one-third of those present were ladies. Among the savans in the semicircle were Sir David Brewster, Lord Wrottesley, Dr. Whewell, Professor Phillips, Professor Sedgwick, Mr. W. Grove, Q.C., the Bishop of Oxford, Dean Liddell, Dr. Acland, and Professor Walker. Shortly after four the great doors were thrown open, and the procession entered. Immediately after the University Bedels came the Prince Consort, President of the Association; next came Lord Derby, Chancellor of the University; then Dr. Jeune, Master of Pembroke College, and Vice-Chancellor; and finally some members of the Prince's suite. His Royal Highness on entering was greeted with prolonged applause, which he repeatedly acknowledged. After taking his seat in the chair, he rose and very briefly addressed the assembly, expressing a hope that the interests of science had not suffered in his hands, and paying a graceful compliment to his successor in the presidency. Lord Wrottesley, having been duly installed in the chair, delivered his address.

MUSIC.

The chief musical event of the week has been the ORPHEONIST FESTIVAL at the Crystal Palace—a festival of the nature of which the public in general, and our readers in particular, are already in some measure informed. It is an occurrence of more than musical interest; it has a further interest both political and social, for it has led to an increase of acquaintance, mutual cordiality, and good feeling, between the people of France and England. Three thousand persons, all belonging to the middle and industrial classes of society, and gathered from every part of France, even its remotest provinces, have visited our metropolis, received a kind welcome, and are now about to return home, where they will spread extensively, in their domestic and social circles, ideas of the character, manners, and feelings of the English people which will tend to destroy many ignorant prejudices, and strengthen the bonds of peace and amity which already unite the two most powerful nations of the world.

We need not tell our readers that the Orphéon is a society established for the cultivation of choral music in France. But its sudden rise, literally from nothing, to its present magnitude, is so striking as to be well worthy of notice. It has been in existence about fifteen years, and owes not only its being, but its wonderful growth, to the unaided exertions of a single individual.

Fifteen years ago France had no choral music; that vast branch of the art remained uncultivated. The celebrated Wilhelm—whose method of popular instruction Mr. Hullah has imported so successfully into England—had laboured to form choral classes in Paris and other parts of France, but had laboured in vain. Such was the state of things when an obscure provincial musician, M. Delaporte, organist of the Cathedral of Sens, conceived the idea of following up Wilhelm's views with greater energy. Giving up everything—family, friends, and position—he began a course of wandering through the country, visiting the smallest towns and villages, asking everywhere for the means of organising choral classes and unions. For a long time he effected nothing; and it was not till he had laboured for three or four years with indomitable perseverance that he succeeded in accomplishing a union of a few small choral societies. That union was the germ of the Orphéon. The tree thus planted grew with marvellous rapidity. Under the constant exertions of M. Delaporte, societies were founded in all parts of France. At the present time the number of these societies amounts to eight hundred; and the number of the Orphéoniste, or members of the Union, exceeds forty thousand. Persons of high rank and distinction are connected with it in the character of honorary members; but the great body of the union consists of persons belonging to the industrial classes, and it is stated that during the last five years the Orphéon has contributed about £80,000 sterling to the various beneficent funds throughout the country. The great choral meeting of between six and seven thousand of its members at the Palais de l'Industrie, in March, 1859, made an immense impression on the Parisian public, and suggested to the managers of our Crystal Palace the festival which has now taken place.

The three thousand members of the society chosen to be its representatives on this occasion arrived in London on Saturday and Sunday. The Crystal Palace Company had made great exertions to give as much éclat as possible to the festival. The great Handel orchestra in the central transept of the building was elegantly and appropriately decorated, the tricolour being everywhere introduced, with many emblems significant of good understanding and good feeling between England and France; and the flags and banners belonging to the numerous societies which collectively form the great body denominated the Orphéon, many of which were very rich and handsome, contributed greatly to enliven the scene.

On the morning of Monday, the day of the first performance, the strangers were at the palace betimes, and, for two or three hours before the concert began, were busily engaged in running all over the building, looking at the many objects of interest which it presented, and chatting and laughing together with all their national vivacity. They were generally young men, mostly from the southern provinces; smart, dapper little fellows, very neat in their attire, and altogether pleasant and prepossessing in appearance. Before three o'clock, at which hour the performance began, they were all mustered in the orchestra, which they completely filled. Down in the front, the famous band of the Imperial Regiment of Guides (whose former visit to the Crystal Palace is still remembered) were conspicuous in their splendid uniforms of scarlet and gold. M. Delaporte, the energetic founder of the society, wielded the conductor's bâton; two sub-conductors were stationed at certain distances on either hand, so as to be able to repeat his beats and thus give the time to the remotest parts of the orchestra; and M. Baptiste, the organist of St. Eustache, Paris, presided at the organ.

The music performed on this occasion was of a kind very different from that to which we are accustomed to hear at choral concerts in this country—the grand, profound, and solemn works of Handel and the great ecclesiastical composers. The French possess no such music of their own, nor have they imported it from Italy, Germany, or England. The music performed at this festival was of a comparatively light description. There were few sacred compositions; the pieces for the most part being what we call part-songs, or simple melodies harmonised with corresponding simplicity on patriotic or warlike subjects. The concert on Monday opened with "God Save the Queen," sung with great spirit and seemingly con amore. There were only two pieces of sacred music, a hymn by Besozzi and a part-song by Kreutzer, both of them good, solid harmony, and very well sung. The things which produced the greatest effect were two military songs, Kücken's "Chant du Bivouac" and De Rille's "La Retraite." They were sung with great precision, and with a fire and spirit which electrified the audience. They were tumultuously encored. These and other pieces of a similar kind were sung without any instrumental accompanment, and the perfect manner in which these three thousand voices sustained the pitch showed the admirable training they had undergone. The choral pieces were intermingled with overtures and other pieces, played by the magnificent band of the Guides.

The second and third performances, on Tuesday and Thursday, were very similar to the first, and indeed consisted chiefly of repetitions of those pieces which had produced the greatest effect. Of the conclusion of the festival and its results, so far as known, we shall give some account in our next Number.

MADAME LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON gave a grand concert at Willis's Rooms on Friday, the 22nd. This lady has been this season one of the brightest stars of our concert-rooms and one of the greatest favourites in the best musical circles. The rooms, consequently, were overflowing with fashionable company. The entertainment provided by the fair bénéficiaire was exceedingly refined and elegant. Her own performances were Donizetti's fine trio, "Alma infida," with Messrs. Solieri and Cimino; Schubert's beautiful melody, "Marguerite," which she sang with exquisite grace and expression; the old French air, "Ah, vous dirai-je, maman," with the variations of Adolphe Adam, her performance of which is a marvel of light and brilliant execution, and never fails to be vehemently encored; and, lastly, Mr. Frank Mori's pretty ballad, "Where art thou wandering, little child?" in which she showed herself a complete mistress of our English ballad style, singing the melody with perfect simplicity, and uttering the words with that clear and expressive elocution which is one of the greatest beauties of vocal music. Mdme. Lemmens would be an immense acquisition to the English musical stage; and, indeed, it is currently reported that she is to be a member of the English Opera Company which Mr. Smith, of Her Majesty's Theatre, is said to be forming. But we have reason to believe that this rumour is without foundation, and that she has no intention to adopt the theatrical branch of her profession. In addition to Mdme. Lemmens' own performances several vocal pieces were sung by Mdme. Sainton-Dolby, Miss Augusta Thomson, Signori Solieri, Cimino, Belletti, and M. Lefort. M. Lemmens, who is celebrated in Belgium (his own country), France, and Germany, as a great performer on the organ, played two pieces on the harmonium, the concert-room substitute for that instrument, from which we could imagine what effects he could produce on the instrument itself. The only other instrumental piece was a solo on the violoncello, played by Piatti, with that beauty of tone and finish of execution for which he is unrivalled.

The concerts of the MUSICAL UNION will terminate on Tuesday next, for which day, "The Director's Matinée," being the last subscription concert of the season, Mr. Ella has put forth a most attractive programme, which, in addition to the names of Hallé, Lubeck, and Strauss, includes that of the charming and favourite vocalist Mdlle. Artôt. The Musical Union has had a most brilliant and successful season.

THE THEATRES, &c.

HAYMARKET.—On Saturday a new three-act drama, by Mr. Edmund Falconer, was produced, entitled "Does he Love Me?" The occasion was the benefit of Miss Amy Sedgwick, for whom the piece has been written, and who supports the heroine. The action is upon the Elizabethan model, wherein two sets of characters hit upon the same expedient for similar ends, and thus produce a comedy of errors which it is hard to explain. The heroine is an heiress, Miss Vandeleur (Miss Amy Sedwick), whom her father has resolved upon marrying to the Viscount Mowbray (Mr. Howe), who, in return for her fortune, which he needs for the disbursement of divers mortgages on his estate, is willing to bestow on the lady a title. Now, all this is in the fair way of business; but the lady is not quite satisfied, and desires to be certified of the fact questioned in the title of the play—Does he love her? She must have a decided answer to this interrogatory. An accident gives the direction to her plans. Entering diffidently by the French windows from the garden, she is mistaken by the housekeeper, Mrs. Comfort (Mrs. Wilkins), for her attendant, Miss Melrose (Miss Bulmer), and is determined to favour the notion. Accordingly, she introduces her companion as Miss Vandeleur, and describes also her character in no very favourable terms. On the other hand, the Viscount is also provided with an humble friend, Mr. Everton Leigh (Mr. E. Villiers), who performs the same service for them; and thus the two high contracting parties make each other's acquaintance as their own dependents. The result is that they love one another, and, after perplexing everybody else, confess to their mutual identity, and concede willingly to the family arrangement. We say nothing of the inherent improbabilities in the plot; they belong to this class of pieces by right of stage custom. Miss Sedgwick sustained the character prepared for her with great vivacity, and indicated the impulsive energy of a romantic maiden with much force and decided colour. Mrs. Wilkins's part was also well suited to her talents and appearance. Nor has Mr. Howe any reason to quarrel with his part. Mr. Buckstone is provided with a capital rôle, one Bubble, the lawyer's managing clerk, and who tries in vain to relieve the plot of its confusion, only increasing it by his awkward explanation. This character is so much in Mr. Buckstone's vein that he has chosen the piece for his own benefit, which comes off about a fortnight hence.

ADELPHI.—On Monday "The Flowers of the Forest" was reproduced for the first time this season. It was very well received by the audience, and admirably acted.

SURREY.—This theatre has reopened for the summer season under the direction of Mr. J. Kerschner. On Monday week Mr. John Douglass appeared in his celebrated character of Ben the Bootswain, to give the speculation a fair start. Last Monday the American tragedian, Mr. Procter, appeared as Macbeth. Opera is performed on alternate nights. With such aids we trust that the experiment will be successful.

STANDARD.—An American comedian, Mr. Gardiner Coyne, has for the last fortnight tried his talents here in Irish character. His brogue is that of Dublin, not of Cork, and therefore comparatively new to our stage. His songs are distinguished by feeling. Mr. T. C. King, the tragedian, surpassed his efforts last week in "Don Cæsar de Bazan"; and during the present Mr. Edward Stirling has come to his assistance in his own drama of "The Legacy of Honour," originally produced at Drury Lane.

PAVILION.—Mr. James Anderson continues to star at this new theatre, and on Monday sustained the character of Richard the Third, in which he was assisted by Miss Marriott, who performed the Queen. "The Lady of Lyons" has also been represented. The introduction of the legitimate drama to these boards is of course an experiment. But it promises well, and is highly creditable to Mr. Douglass.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Colonel Haythorne, of the 1st Royal Regiment, has been appointed Adjutant-General of the Army in India, in succession to Lord Longford.

Lieut.-General Thomas Dyneley, C.B., Peninsular and Waterloo officer of the Royal Artillery, died on the 21st inst., aged seventy-nine.

General Sir Hopton Stratford Scott, K.C.B., expired at his residence, Woodville, near Lucan, on Monday.

A circular has been issued from the Horse Guards announcing that soldiers are not required to salute the officers of the civil departments of the War Department.

Admiral Fanshawe was invested with the insignia of a knight commander of the Order of the Bath by her Majesty, at a private audience at Buckingham Palace on Thursday week.

Tuesday's Gazette contains an order by her Majesty in Council, dated the 7th of March, 1860, laying down maritime regulations for carrying on the war with China in the event of hostilities commencing.

The Channel Fleet, after being moored for rather more than a fortnight in the beautiful basin of St. Margaret's Hope, Firth of Forth, weighed anchor last Saturday and took its departure for Yarmouth roads.

The Hon. Artillery Company were inspected yesterday week by the Prince Consort, Captain General and Colonel of the corps. His Royal Highness expressed his satisfaction at the steadiness of the movements, and at the marked improvement in the efficiency of the corps.

Barracks for 1000 men are being constructed at St. George's Bay, Malta. The work has been commenced under the directions of Captain Bland, Royal Engineers. We understand that the plan selected is a double row of one-storied buildings, with colonnades for the object of coolness; and that the estimated cost is £8000.

THE ROYAL REVIEW AT ALDERSHOTT.—A grand review took place at Aldershott on Tuesday, under the most advantageous atmospheric circumstances. The camp was astir early; most of the troops were in position soon after ten o'clock, and by eleven the whole force was on the ground. The infantry were drawn up in columns, about the centre of the valley, on the wide level; the artillery and cavalry just on the rise of the opposite range of hills, and far away to the right—almost as far as the eye could perceive them. The spectators occupied the height on the camp side of the hollow. Her Majesty and suite left the Royal Pavilion at half-past eleven, and arrived on the ground at a quarter to twelve. She was on horseback, and wore a scarlet habit, with hat and plume. She was accompanied by Prince Albert, the Prince of Wales, Princess Alice, and a numerous staff of officers and officials. The Duke of Cambridge and his staff were already on the field. Her Majesty rode along the front of the infantry, round the left flank of its line, and returned along the position of the cavalry and artillery to a point about the centre of the ground. Most of the carriages and spectators on the hill descended to the level, and took their place behind the Royal escort. The whole of the troops then marched past, the batteries of the Royal Horse Artillery leading; they were followed by the cavalry, lancers, and hussars, and Pontoon Train; then the infantry, in companies, each regiment headed by its band; the 1st battalion of Rifles; and, closing the march, the Land Transport Corps. The review commenced at twelve o'clock, and terminated soon after one. All the regiments in the camp were on the field; the total force of the three brigades of infantry, the brigade of cavalry, and the artillery and engineers is above 20,000 men. Immediately after passing her Majesty, the troops moved rapidly to the extreme right, and took up their positions to repel the supposed attack. Some of the force disappeared among the hills; but a strong body of infantry formed across the entrance of the valley, with cavalry and artillery on the opposite hill. It was more than half an hour before the enemy advanced: then the skirmishers opened a light, straggling fire, soon followed by distant artillery; the guns were invisible among the hollows, and their position could only be marked by the clouds of smoke rising above the trees. The tide of battle appeared to roll inward, the firing growing heavier as it approached, till the whole line, stretching across the heart of the valley, kept up a continuous roll of musketry, which was sustained for for nearly an hour; at times it slackened or ceased on one part of the line, but was opened on another that swept round the end of the opposite height, out of sight of the spectators. On the other slope of this ridge, and on its crest, there was more artillery, which opened rather late in the operations. There was some more firing from this point, till three o'clock, when the conflict ceased; soon afterwards her Majesty left the field, and the troops retired to their quarters. Their appearance as they crossed the ground, in five or six different lines, was one of the finest sights of the day. At half-past four her Majesty left the Farnborough station in a special train for London.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

On a certain day in last week a member for an Irish county, who bears a title peculiar to Ireland, and which implies neither peerage, baronetage, nor knightage, and which, being interpreted, signifies, we believe, something in the nature of hereditary princedom, presented a remarkable petition. It set forth as its primary prayer the restoration of the Parliament of Ireland. Before the sitting, which had just begun when this petition was brought forward, had concluded there was good reason on the part of many persons fervently to join in the supplication which it contained. As if at once to remedy a grievance which it declared—namely, that Irish business did not meet with its due share of attention in the Imperial Parliament—the House sat until four o'clock in the morning, solely occupied with an Irish measure; and certainly the scene which accompanied it was highly characteristic, and gave the dull, prosaic Saxons whose physical energy enabled them to go through it an excellent specimen of the mode in which a Legislature sitting in Dublin would, we will not say conduct, but disport, itself. Not that the Irish members are funny or comic in themselves: they are not even humorous, and, as to witty, Heaven save the mark! It is their mission as a general rule to be laughed at, not with—an oft-repeated but a very notable distinction. This time, however, they had their revenge. They caught an English member under circumstances which somehow or other one is not accustomed to associate with the national section of the House to which he belongs; and, exhibiting that sense of humour which consists in repeating a thing which in its inception is good in the sense of being droll, they went on with him in a manner very much resembling that which the street boys adopt when they shout out, on passing volunteer riflemen, "Who shot the dog?" It chanced that the member in question had delivered himself of certain opinions with regard to a clause in the bill before the House in an uncertain manner as regarded his argument, and a confusion of language and idea, which was caught up at once, and which, if worked for the time which good taste allots to a joke, and, above all, to something like a practical joke, the noise and laughter would have been legitimate enough. But when, on the sitting down of each person who spoke, there were loud calls like those by which a favourite opera-singer is greeted after a successful bravura for this gentleman, and he, taking the compliment au pied de lettre, gravely responded, and, in compliance with the obvious demand, repeated as nearly as possible word for word the speech he had delivered at first, and when this happened six or seven times at an hour which was nearer three than two in the morning, sober people will be apt to inquire whether it would not be as well to insert a provision in the next Reform Bill that no Parliamentary proceedings shall take place after dinner?

Well, as if by consequence, and as the effect, of the petition above alluded to, the devotion of the time of the House to what, for want of another and a better word, we will call Irish affairs, thus inaugurated, has been continued during the past week. At day sittings, bills wholly and purely relating to Ireland have fluttered and been tossed about in shuttlecock fashion, and strictly more Hibernico. This, however, has not been all, for on Tuesday there was a grand field-day of Irish Parliamentary volunteers. A distinguished (in a certain sense) member, animated and inspired by the excitement which is to be caught in a variety of ways from the gratulatory festivities of a wedding breakfast, and who, craftily and with reason, contrived to mark distinctively the circumstances in which he had participated during the morning by wearing a white favour prominently in his coat, actually impeached the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. The disquisition on, and the definition of, what are insults to Ireland was in a manner—we will not say what manner—interesting, and a fine study was afforded of the anatomy of Irish grievances. To be sure, one did not very clearly understand the exact relations of cause and effect, as presented with curious infelicity and striking illogicality (if there is such a word) in the discussion which took place. It all seemed to resolve itself into a complaint of the wrong man in the wrong place, or else that everybody had not got into places; and the most clear idea that one carried away was that somebody had not been created Lord Chancellor of Ireland because somebody else had been unduly made Lord Lieutenant of Londonderry. Certainly there could not be a better person to pierce through the cloud of an Irish debate than the present Chief Secretary for Ireland, who has had engrafted on a cold and unimpassioned temperament, and a kind of two-and-two-make-four intellect, a legal training in the first place, and a political training of the severest Peel school in the second, and therefore has culminated into the most perfect specimen of a Doctrinaire extant in public life at this moment. He answers all the Irish inconsequence as if he were arguing a demurrer, and with a quarter of an ounce of dry fact will pound all the imaginative statements of members for outraged counties in the sister kingdom into extinction. This subject was ignominiously terminated by the tumultuous negativing of a motion which implied an amount of active villany on the part of poor Lord Carlisle, which no one that ever looked at him could for a moment suppose him capable of attaining to, even if he were to try; and, most significant sign of all, even the mover did not utter the usual Parliamentary cry in its favour which is comprehended in the word "Ay!" The very next question was also Irish; but this time the matter was serious, and the discussion decorous; but it added to the strength of the case which we have been endeavouring to make out against the allegations on which the petition above mentioned for the restoration of the Parliament of Ireland was founded. There has been an immediate practical refutation of the assertion that no time is given in the United Legislature to Irish affairs.

In other respects the proceedings of the House of Commons have been somewhat colourless. To be sure the Government has been placed in a minority once or twice, but there has been nothing vital. It would be a failure of duty, however, if we were to pass over the episode of the Bankruptcy Bill on Monday night. It is to be understood that the Attorney-General has produced a measure for the amendment of the laws of bankruptcy and insolvency, which in its principles and main provisions has met with universal acceptance, and suggestions for the modification of the details of which he has met in such a conciliatory spirit, and with such a readiness to adapt the bill to the widest requirements of legal and commercial practical sense, that it only awaited the opportunity of a discussion in Committee to go swimmingly on to perfect legislative fruition. This opportunity at last occurred on Monday evening. Readers of debates are aware that there is in the House a gentleman on whom the mantle of Joseph Hume seems to have fallen, but, ill-shaped and ungainly as was that garment when it left its former owner, its cumbrousness and angularity are still more developed on its present possessor. The member for Evesham always displays a faculty for nibbling at matters connected with finance and expenditure; a keenness for sniffing the faintest scent of what he calls jobbery, which often results in creating, when nothing in his peculiar line is actually in existence; and, in fact, he exhibits just that quality which is illustrated in the old saying that a retired smuggler makes the best custom-house officer. This Parliamentary detective thought the time had arrived when he should run amuck against the abuse which is comprehended in the word "compensations," but, with singular infelicity, he selected the very worst occasion for vindicating a principle with which no one is inclined to quarrel. In the Bankruptcy Bill no new "compensations" are created, but a provision is made by which certain former compensations granted by Acts of Parliament, which, relatively speaking, are of no great amount, and which are in progress of dying out, are shifted from the shoulders of the suitors of the Bankruptcy Court, the money being taken directly out of the pockets of creditors, who by the mere fact of their coming into that court assume the characters of heavy losers, and placed on the Consolidated Fund. This was a part of the reform in the present law which is now inoperative, mainly because the expenses of the court swallow up all, or nearly all, the assets of estates, and therefore it constituted a main ingredient of the principle of the bill. Looking, then, to the fact of the Attorney-General being defeated on a division on this point, and if, as we suspect, stung and mortified at defeat coming from the quarter whence it originated, a feeling in which we heartily sympathise with him, that able functionary would have been less than human if he had not indignantly declared his intention of giving up the bill. His feeling must have been akin to that which we may suppose would have rushed to the heart and brain of the engineer who constructed the Eddystone Lighthouse if he had seen that stately edifice topple over into destruction merely because a ferret had been burrowing at its base.

In the House of Lords there has occurred a remarkable event, although viewed from a certain point of view it is but a small one. It is probably not generally known that the eldest son of Lord Campbell has recently entered the House of Peers, on succeeding to a barony which was conferred on his mother some years before his father attained to the peerage; and, but for the fact of Lord Campbell holding the office of Lord Chancellor, he would be a younger peer than his own son. Lord Stratheden, who was known in the House of Commons as Mr. William Campbell, in the course of his legislative career as a representative of the people, did not address the Lower Chamber more than once or twice; but, owing to a peculiarity of voice, gesture, and style, he made an impression which was remarkable, though not in the sense that he would probably have desired. Very soon after he took his seat in the House of Lords he put some notices on the paper, and one of them, after floating about for a week or two, came on last Monday. It was something about the slave trade and Mozambique; but, whatever it was, the Government thought it necessary to oppose it; but, lo and behold! when a division came on, it was found that the Ministry, suffering from that abnormal condition in which they are placed in the Lords, were absolutely about to be beaten, and Lord Stratheden was on the point of being guilty of Parliamentary parricide by putting his father and his colleagues in the minority. But, unlike the ancient Roman, Lord Campbell forgot the Minister in the parent, and voted with his son and against the Cabinet of which he is a member. Having beaten the Government, Lord Stratheden evidently believed that he was about to be "sent" for by the Queen, for he took the chief seat on the Ministerial bench, as if anxious to try at once how he would demean himself thereon. The House of Lords has got into such an eccentric mood that one is not shocked at its sympathising in action with a marked eccentricity in the person of one of its newest members.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

British Consulship at Mozambique.—Lord Stratheden moved an address praying her Majesty to be graciously pleased to appoint a Consul at Mozambique, with a view to promote the interests of commerce and the execution of the treaties between Great Britain and Portugal upon the slave trade. The noble Lord contended that, since the British Consul quitted Mozambique in 1858, the slave trade had greatly increased, and was now carried on almost without let or hindrance under the colour of emigration.—Lord Wodehouse, upon the part of the Government, opposed the motion; not because they were not fully alive to the importance of all questions connected with the slave trade, but because they thought there were better means of discouraging it than that advocated by the noble Lord.—Lord Brougham fully agreed that one of the most effectual methods of putting down the slave trade would be to teach the natives the value of legitimate commerce; but contended that the residence of a Consul would materially facilitate that result.—The Duke of Somerset opposed the motion; and Earl Granville advised its withdrawal.—Lord Stratheden, however, persisted, and the motion, on a division, was carried by 11 to 6.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill.—On the bringing up of the report of the Committee of the House on bankruptcy and insolvency salaries, Sir H. Willoughby submitted that it was not desirable to increase the charges resting upon the Consolidated Fund for compensations, and moved the omission of the word "compensations" from the report.—The Attorney-General said the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill created no new compensations, and that all those to which it did refer must be regarded as penalties which the country had to pay for former errors and mismanagement.—Mr. Barrow supported the amendment.—After remarks from Colonel French and Mr. Hadfield, the House divided, and adopted the amendment by 111 to 98—majority 13.—The Speaker having put the resolution as amended, the Attorney-General said the decision of the House affected the whole bill so seriously that he should postpone the next order of the day—for going into Committee on the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Bill.—Mr. Malins regretted the decision of the House, but applauded the resolution taken by the Attorney-General, since the amendment was a violation of the principles of honour and integrity, which could hardly have been carried if hon. members had known on which side they were voting.—Mr. Bright said the withdrawal of the bill would occasion great disappointment to the trading classes, and advised the Attorney-General to take at least one day before he decided upon adopting that course.—Mr. Bouverie concurred in the advice given by Mr. Bright, and suggested that the compensations should be charged upon the fund of the Court, in the same way as at present.—The Attorney-General said if the charge were not transferred, the whole bill must be recast. He would, therefore, give the House an opportunity of reconsidering its decision by taking another division on the question of the amended resolution; and if that decision confirmed the one just arrived at he saw no other course which he could take than that of postponing the bill.—The debate was, after some further discussion, adjourned till Thursday, the order of the day for going into Committee on the bill being also postponed.

The Ecclesiastical Commission Bill.—The adjourned debate on the second reading of this bill was resumed by Mr. G. C. Bentinck, who supported the amendment moved by Mr. Selwyn at a previous sitting, that the bill should be read a second time that day six months.—Mr. Howes also opposed the bill, on the ground, among other objections, that it perpetuated the stipendiary character of the incomes of Bishops and Deans.—Mr. Malins objected that more business would be thrown by the bill upon the commissioners, who had already more upon their hands than they could properly attend to.—Lord J. Russell defended the bill, the object of which, he said, was to effect a more equitable distribution of church revenues by appropriating the excess of incomes from capitular estates to the augmentation of small livings. He admitted that the sale of church lands and an investment of the proceeds in the funds might produce more ample revenues, but contended that such a course would deprive Bishops, Deans, and Chapters of that solid stake in the country which it was so desirable for them to possess.—Mr. S. Estcourt objected to some of the provisions of the bill; but thinking it undesirable to go to a division, recommended that the amendment should be withdrawn; and Mr. Selwyn having assented to this course the bill was read a second time.

Miscellaneous.—The House went into Committee on Excise and Assessed Taxes Acts, and fixed the amounts to be charged for game licenses, according to the amended scheme of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Tithe Commutation Bill was read a third time and passed; the Spirits Bill passed through Committee, and the Oxford University (No. 2) Bill, and the Refreshment Houses and Wine Licenses (Ireland) Bill, were read a second time. Some further progress was made in Committee with the Mines Regulation and Inspection Bill. The Inland Bonding Bill was read a third time and passed, and the Union of Benefices Bill was read a second time. Several other bills were advanced a stage.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The Ecclesiastical Courts and Registries (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Ecclesiastical Commission Bill.—The Archbishop of York moved the second reading of this bill, explaining that its object was to amend the existing law so as to make it incumbent upon the commission to provide spiritual instruction for districts from which they derived revenues, before applying those revenues to the purposes of other districts.—The Earl of Chichester opposed the bill.—Earl Granville suggested that, as there was a more comprehensive measure on the same subject before the other House, the bill under discussion should be postponed for the present.—Earl Grey expressed a hope that the bill should not be postponed, unless the Government would promise to support it if the other bill did not pass.—After a long discussion, the bill was read a second time, with an understanding that the Committee should be postponed until the bill before the other House was disposed of.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

There was a day sitting, devoted to the further discussion in Committee of the Tenure and Improvement of Land (Ireland) Bill, progress being made as far as the 27th clause.

At the evening sitting, the Lord Advocate brought in the Refreshment Houses and Wine Licenses (Scotland) Bill, which was read a first time.

Irish Appointments.—Mr. Conolly moved as follows: "That this House, having regard to certain appointments made by the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, is of opinion that fitness has not been primarily considered in these appointments. That this House is further of opinion that the incautious and inconsiderate use of the prerogative of the Crown is prejudicial to the public service." The hon. member, who disclaimed all intention of casting any reflections upon the private character of Lord Carlisle, accused that noble Lord of having violated all the rules of propriety in appointing Mr. Lyle Lord Lieutenant of Londonderry, and asserted that a deeper or more deliberate insult than was comprehended in that appointment was never passed upon the free magistracy of a free country; while the whole policy of the Lord Lieutenant was, he said, devoted to the carrying of Whig elections, and establishing his Government on the odious system of patronage and jobbery, as evidenced in other appointments of a similar character.—Mr. Gregory acquitted the Government from all blame in the appointment of Mr. Lyle, although he believed a better appointment might have been made.—Mr. Cardwell, in opposing the motion, said the charge against the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, so far as the appointment of Mr. Lyle was concerned, had been twice justified and explained—once in that House and once in the other; and that the complaints made in the other cases referred to were equally groundless.—Colonel French supported the motion, contending that no Irish Viceroy had ever been more unpopular or less respected than the Earl of Carlisle, who had entirely failed to maintain the dignity of the Crown, or to sustain the lustre of his office.—Mr. M'Mahon expressed his opinion that the office of Viceroy of Ireland ought to be abolished.—After some remarks from Captain Archdall and Mr. M'Cann, Mr. Horsman vindicated the high principles upon which the Earl of Carlisle made his appointments and conducted his Government generally, asserting his conviction that there was no part of her Majesty's dominions where there was less official jobbery than in Ireland.—The Attorney-General for Ireland and Lord Palmerston having also defended the conduct of Lord Carlisle, the motion was negatived without a division.

Distress in Ireland.—Mr. Hennessy moved an address, praying her Majesty to direct that steps might be taken to relieve the distress prevailing in Erris, and other parts of Ireland. In the district of Erris, he said, there were 900 families in a state of complete destitution—many of them suffering from dysentery and fever arising from famine—being principally small farmers, and others to whom the Irish Poor Law did not apply, although they would be comprehended within the letter of the English Poor Law if it existed in Ireland.—The O'Donoghue seconded the motion.—Mr. Cardwell admitted the prevalence of great distress in the district of Erris, contending, however, that it had been relieved to such an extent by local aid that the workhouse, which was capable of accommodating 600 inmates, had never been inhabited by more than 125 paupers at the same time; and, consequently, that the case was not one which called for any extraordinary interference on the part of the Government.—After a discussion, in which Lord Fermoy, Mr. Brady, Mr. M'Evoy, Mr. Clive, and other members took part, the House, dividing, negatived the motion by 84 to 49—majority 35.

The Militia.—Mr. S. Herbert, in asking leave to bring in a bill to amend the laws relating to the militia, pointed attention to the fact that the militia force of the country, although it had attained a high degree of efficiency, had so dwindled down in point of numbers as to fall altogether below the amount at which it was required to stand by law. He accounted for this partly from the feelings occasioned by the frequent embodiment and disembodiment of regiments, and partly from the numerous enlistments which took place out of the militia into the line; and, while he admitted the desirability of increasing from such a source the strength of the regular Army, he asserted the necessity of maintaining the militia itself upon a substantial footing. Premising that he was not an advocate for its reorganisation, he detailed the recent administrative changes effected in connection with that force, and then went on to state the objects of the bill which he sought leave to introduce. These were to give power to unite regiments in maritime counties for the purpose of forming artillery corps; to provide buildings for the permanent staff; and to regulate the mode and time of training; to increase the force in Scotland an Ireland in the same proportion in times of danger as is now the case in England. The right hon. gentleman also referred to some other changes which were intended to be introduced, but for which no provision was made in his bill.—Colonel W. Patten intimated his cordial approval of the proposed changes, as well as of those which had already been effected by the Government.—After remarks from Lord Enfield, Colonel Gilpin, Colonel Dickson, and General Upton, leave was given to bring in the bill.

Miscellaneous.—Mr. Clive obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the Local Government Act; and Sir G. C. Lewis to bring in a bill to make better provision for the Prevention of Corrupt Practices at Parliamentary Elections. The Locomotives Bill was committed, and the House disposed of the other orders of the day.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The Labourers' Cottages (Scotland) Bill passed through Committee.

The Bleaching and Dyeing Works Bill.—This bill having been committed, Sir H Cairns moved an amendment on the first clause, with the object of exempting from the operation of the measure works in which the bleaching or dyeing of linen, linen yarns, or cambric only is carried on. After some discussion the amendment was adopted, on a division, by 190 to 48.—Mr. A. Egerton moved an amendment on the same clause, the success of which would have destroyed the principle of the measure, by making it a twelve hours instead of a ten hours bill. Another long discussion followed, which resulted in a division, and the rejection of the amendment by 256 to 42. The several clauses of the bill were then agreed to, a proposed new clause being under discussion when the Chairman was ordered to report progress.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

The Sunday Riots in St. George's-in-the-East.—Lord Dungannon gave notice that on Friday, the 6th of July, he would call attention to the subject of the serious riots in St. George's-in-the-East—more particularly of those that occurred on the 17th and 24th of June—with the view of considering what more effectual measures could be adopted to put a stop to them.

The Builders' Strike.—In reference to a petition presented by Earl Grey on the subject of the strike of the workmen in the building trade, Lord Brougham took the opportunity of deprecating the conduct of the men in endeavouring to induce others to join them in their determination to obtain from their masters a reduction of the hours of labour each day. The noble and learned Lord said, though workmen were at liberty to combine together to obtain better wages or a diminution of their daily labour, they were acting most illegally and mischievously by intimidation or using compulsory means to induce other men to leave their employment.

The Adulteration of Food and Drink Bill was read a third time and passed.

Harbours and Breakwaters.—The Marquis of Clanricarde moved for the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire how far it may be practicable to afford better shelter for shipping upon our coasts than is at present afforded by the adoption of some plan for the construction of breakwaters and harbours less costly and better adapted for certain localities than the system of solid masonry hitherto in use, and whether any such plan appears likely to be also serviceable for the improvement of our national defences.—The Duke of Somerset observed that the subject had been already inquired into by various Committees of both Houses of Parliament, from time to time, without any very definite result. The most eminent engineers were found to differ in opinion from each other upon almost every scheme proposed. He therefore saw no great advantage to be gained by such a Committee as was now proposed.—The motion was ultimately withdrawn.

Evidence in Cases of Misdemeanour.—Lord Brougham brought in a bill to enable persons charged with misdemeanour to give evidence on oath in their own behalf, and, in the event of their committing perjury, to be indicted for that offence.—The Lord Chancellor approved of the principle of the bill, which was then read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

New Member.—Mr. Getty took the oath and his seat on his election for Belfast.

Sicily and Sardinia.—Sir R. Peel gave notice of his intention, on the motion for the adjournment of the House to-morrow, to call the attention of the House to the rumours which prevailed in reference to the annexation of Sicily to Piedmont, and to ask the noble Lord the Secretary for Foreign Affairs whether he had received any intimation that, in the event of such annexation being effected, some new demands for an extension of territory were likely to be made by France. It was also his intention to inquire whether it was true that her Majesty's Government had signified to the Government of Sardinia that the present aggressive policy of Sardinia was viewed by Great Britain with indifference.

European Forces (India) Bill.—Sir C. Wood moved the second reading of this bill.—Mr. A. Mills moved an amendment—that the bill be read a second time that day three months. He considered the bill defective and unsatisfactory. In his opinion the present state of things had worked satisfactorily in India for upwards of a century, and therefore it ought not to be disturbed. The abolition of the local military force as proposed by the bill would entail upon India an additional burden of £200,000 a year. The bill would also violate the rights of the Indian officers which had been guaranteed to them by the India Bill of 1858. He denounced the measure as most dangerous and unconstitutional, and urged upon the House the propriety of repealing it.—Sir E. Colebrooke seconded the amendment.—After a discussion, which occupied the House until nearly one o'clock, Mr. Rich moved the adjournment of the debate.—Upon a division the motion for adjournment was negatived by a majority of 262 against 83.—Mr. Danby Seymour then moved the adjournment of the House.—Lord Palmerston resisted the motion.—Another division having taken place, the motion for the adjournment of the House was negatived by a majority of 229 against 51.—Mr. Hennessy then moved the adjournment of the debate.—Lord Palmerston said, as it was evident the minority, though small, were determined to delay the progress of the bill, he would not resist the motion of the adjournment until the following evening (Friday).—General Peel advised Mr. Hennessy to withdraw his motion of adjournment and allow the bill to be read a second time: it might be further discussed upon the next stage.—Mr. Horsman and Mr. A. Mills declined to assent to the second reading until the papers upon the subject, which were ordered to be printed in March last, were laid upon the table.—Sir C. Wood, in reply to Sir C. Napier, said the Government were not responsible for the production of those papers. The printer of the House was the only person responsible.—Another division was insisted upon, when the motion for adjournment was again negatived by a majority of 190 against 43.—Mr. A. Mills having moved the adjournment of the debate, Lord Palmerston said, in deference to the convenience of the Speaker, he would assent to the adjournment of the debate to the following (Friday) evening.

On Monday morning the Lancefield Cotton-spinning Factory, Centre-street, Tradeston, Glasgow, was totally destroyed by fire. The loss in stock, buildings, and machinery is estimated at £8000, which is nearly covered by insurances.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

KING'S COLLEGE HOSPITAL.—The twenty-first anniversary festival of this charity was held in the hall of King's College, on Thursday, under the presidency of the Bishop of Winchester. The hospital has no endowment, and is entirely dependent for support upon voluntary contributions and legacies. From the report it appears that since its foundation in 1839, 429,532 poor persons have received the benefits of the charity, of whom 25,131 were in-patients, and 395,791 out-patients, and 8610 poor married women were attended at their own homes. During the past year 35,959, of whom 1485 were in-patients, have been relieved. About 500 patients are daily seen by the physicians and surgeons. This vast amount of relief is administered at a cost of about £6000 a year. The annual subscriptions only amount to about £1500, so that the charity is every year dependent for the sum of nearly £4500 upon the free gifts of friends. The new hospital, which has been erected at a cost of nearly £100,000, every shilling of which has been contributed by public benevolence, is nearly completed. One half of the new building is already occupied, and the other half will be ready for the reception of patients by the end of the present year. The nursing department is conducted by the ladies and nurses of St. John's Training Institution for Nurses. Funds are urgently needed to meet the current expenses. The subscriptions announced in the course of the evening amounted to nearly £2000.

CITY ORTHOPÆDIC HOSPITAL.—The anniversary festival of this institution took place on Wednesday evening at the Albion Tavern, under the presidency of Mr. Joseph Fry. There were 819 patients under treatment during the past twelve months. A debt of nearly £600 materially cramped the usefulness of the institution. The subscriptions announced amounted to £750, including a donation of £20 from Sir Stratford de Redcliffe, who was prevented by indisposition from taking the chair.

LICENSED VICTUALLERS' SCHOOL.—The fifty-fourth annual festival of this institution took place on Wednesday at Cremorne Gardens, the spacious Ashburnham Pavilion being turned to account as a dining-hall. Nearly 1600 persons sat down to dinner. The list of subscriptions was headed by the Chairman with a donation of 50 guineas. The firm of Whitbread and Co. subscribed the sum of 100 guineas, and several members gave 10 guineas each, raising the amount from their establishment to 220 guineas. The total receipts were £1461 18s., and this sum was very nearly increased to £2000 by collections made at the tables.

THE LONDON HOME.—This institution, which has been established for the praiseworthy object of affording the highest scientific assistance to women of a respectable position in society, but of limited means, who may be suffering from a special but very distressing class of maladies, has just completed its second year; and its first anniversary dinner was held on Wednesday evening at St. James's Hall—Mr. H. H. Jolliffe, M.P., in the chair. Subscriptions amounting to £477 10s. 6d. were announced by the hon. secretary.

Mr. Alderman Abbiss and Mr. Abraham Lusk have been elected Sheriffs for the city of London for the ensuing year.

The annual ball in aid of the Scottish charities of the metropolis came off with great éclat on Monday evening at Willis's Rooms.

The Lady Mayoress has issued cards of invitation for a fancy dress ball, at the Mansion House, on the evening of Thursday, the 5th of July.

The house of Mr. Harrison, baker, at Mile End, was burnt out early on Wednesday morning. A woman and a boy were saved by a fire-escape conductor; but Mrs. Knightsbridge, an old woman, was burnt to death.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE QUEEN'S CORONATION.—Thursday was the anniversary of her Majesty's coronation, the ceremony having been performed by Archbishop Sumner, in Westminster Abbey, on the 28th of June, 1838.

THE ROYAL SOCIETY FOR THE PROTECTION OF LIFE FROM FIRE.—The anniversary of this society was held yesterday week in the Council Chamber, Guildhall—the Lord Mayor in the chair. The report states that the society's fire-escape stations number seventy-two, situated at distances of half a mile apart, in almost unbroken lines of succession from north to south, and from east to west, extending in the former instance from Holloway to Peckham, and in the latter from Poplar to Kensington. The fire-escape forces number seventy-six men, with four inspectors. During last year 524 fires were attended to, and ninety-four lives were saved by their exertions. The society's rewards, to be presented to persons who have distinguished themselves in different parts of the country, comprise four silver medallions, two clasps to former medallions, forty-five testimonials, and several pecuniary rewards. The balance-sheet shows an amount of £7338 received in subscriptions and donations during the past year, including a donation of ten guineas from her Majesty. The expenditure has amounted to £6175, and out of the balance in favour of the society £500 has been invested to meet contingent expenses. The society's reward was presented by the chairman to a number of men who had distinguished themselves by their promptitude and exertions in saving life.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.—In Hyde Park, on Wednesday, a gentlemanly-looking man, apparently a foreigner, discharged a pistol at his head, but, the bullet not taking the desired effect, he shot himself a second time, and then drew some sharp instrument across his throat, and fell dead. On the deceased's person was found a letter respecting some female who was alleged to have died at the hands of her husband at a house in Oxford-street. A policeman went in consequence to the house; and, on forcing open the door of the room, the woman was found lying on the floor, having had her head separated from the body. The head was found in a cupboard, and some of her limbs had been cut as with a saw. The occupier of the house said that the man and woman had been in his house only about a week, and that he had not seen anything of either of them since Saturday.——On Tuesday morning a man jumped from the centre parapet of Blackfriars-bridge and immediately sank. His body has not been found.——On Thursday afternoon the House of Lords, which was sitting, in conjunction with the Common Law Judges, to hear appeals, was frighted from its propriety by a sudden yelling. An Indian, who was standing amongst the spectators, drew a small Indian knife across his throat. The wound, however, was not dangerous.

CRICKET.—The University of Oxford v. University of Cambridge: On Tuesday, at Lord's Ground, this match was resumed from the previous day; Cambridge proved victorious, with three wickets to go down, as will be seen by the annexed result. Score:—Oxford, first innings, 59; second innings, 57. Cambridge, first innings, 76; second innings, 41.

Surrey v. Sixteen of Cambridge University: This match was commenced at the Oval on Thursday week, and brought to a conclusion the following evening in favour of Cambridge by 42 runs. The score is as follows:—Cambridge, first innings, 89; second innings, 77. Surrey, first innings, 34; second innings, 90.

Marylebone Club and Ground v. Rugby School: This match was played on Wednesday, at Lord's, and terminated in favour of Rugby. The following is the score:—M.C.C., first innings, 33; second innings, 78. Rugby, first innings, 73; second innings, 39, with a loss of three wickets.

AQUATICS.—At Henley Regatta on Tuesday, Trinity College, Cambridge, won the Grand Challenge Cup, beating the London Rowing Club, after a neck-and-neck race to the bit of straight water, when they shot ahead in the most extraordinary manner, and won by four boats' length. Four of each of the same crews pulled also for the Stewards' Challenge Cup, with like success.

A letter from Coburg says:—"Preparations are being made for the reception of Prince Alfred of Great Britain, who will shortly arrive here, and live alternately at Coburg and at Gotha. The reigning Duke not having any children, Prince Alfred, his nephew, is his presumptive heir."

At the South Kensington Museum last week there were 11,842 visitors. On Monday, Tuesday, and Saturday (free days), there were 4148; on Monday and Tuesday (free evenings), 4209; on the three students' days (admission to the public 6d.), 2081; students' evening (Wednesday), 174; Thursday evening (Female School of Art conversazione), 1230.

THE VANSITTART CASE.—The Norwich magistrates on Monday resumed the inquiry into the charge preferred against the Rev. Canon Dalton, a Roman Catholic priest, and the two Messrs. Beha, of conspiring to assist in keeping Master Wm. Henry Vansittart from the care of his father, after he had run away from school. The matter excited great interest, the court being crowded throughout the proceedings. Master Vansittart was the first witness examined, and in his evidence entirely contradicted that which he had given on the former occasion in regard to having been enticed away from school by an Italian priest with a slouched hat and a long cloak; saying that although he had met such a person at Rackheath, the only conversation that took place was, that the latter said, "Good morning." He had never met him at Brighton. He left Rackheath of his own accord, because he had some Catholic notions. He went to Canon Dalton's, at Norwich, by himself, and told him he wished to be a Catholic. He then took him to the Beha's, where he was found. The Rev. F. H. S. Hodson, Rector of Rackheath, under whom Master Vansittart had been placed, deposed that on missing the boy he went to Norwich, and ultimately Canon Dalton gave information which led to his discovery. The inquiry was very lengthy, but finally the Mayor, in consideration of the difficulties of law and evidence connected with the case, dismissed it; but at the same time expressing an opinion that the Bench considered the conduct of Canon Dalton was exceedingly reprehensible, in that, knowing the boy had clandestinely left a school where he had been placed by a Protestant parent, he did not advise him to return, but, on the contrary, did what he could to facilitate his leaving school.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

THE long-expected Russian loan for £8,000,000 in a 4½ per cent stock, at 92, has been issued. The contractors intimate that there will be a sinking fund of 1½ per cent per annum; that no deposit is required on application; that 10 per cent must be paid two days after allotment; and, further, that the whole amount will be required by the 17th of December, on which day a payment of 22 per cent must be made. From the last payment, however, the half-yearly dividend may be deducted. The notification states that the amount is required to pay off certain bonds which were handed to the Government on the occasion of the failure of the last 3 per cent loan. Scarcely any transactions have taken place in the scrip, which may be nominally quoted at par to ½ premium. The fact is, that the price demanded is too high to tempt speculators to invest.

The supply of money in the general discount market still continues very moderate, owing to the heavy amounts recently paid into the Exchequer. The demand for accommodation having been steady, very full rates of discount have been paid out of doors. In Lombard-street, first-class short bills have been done at 3¾ to 4; three months', at 4; four months', at 4½ to 4¾; and six months', at 4½ to 5 per cent. The scarcity of money has had considerable influence upon the Unfunded Debt, which has been done at 2s. to 3s. dis.

The total imports of the precious metals have been very large—namely, about £800,000. A portion has been disposed of to the Bank of England, and the remainder is in the market for sale. The supply of gold now on passage from Australia is valued at £624,000.

The foreign exchanges have become rather less favourable, but throughout the Continent money is still very low in price. At Paris, Berlin, Amsterdam, and Brussels it may be had at 3; at Vienna, 4; and at Frankfort and Hamburg, 1¾ per cent. At those quotations, however, very little prime paper is offering.

The amount taken out by the present steamer for India is only £23,920; but, owing to the loss of the Malabar at Galle, the silver shipments by the next packet are expected to be very large.

The new Sardinian loan of £6,000,000 will be offered at Turin, in July, at about 80.

At the half-yearly meeting of the shareholders of the South Australian Land Company a dividend at the rate of 7 per cent was declared. The dividend of the Canada Company is £4 per share.

The amount necessary to be raised this year for French railway purposes —£12,000,000—has been apportioned. The annexed are the totals taken by each line:—

Paris and Orleans	£3,350,000
Paris, Lyons, and Mediterranean	3,231,003
Eastern of France	1,170,000
Southern of France	1,801,000
Western of France	1,089,000
Ardennes	1,165,003
Dauphiné	279,000

The dealings in the shares of the newly-formed companies have been only moderate:—Ocean Marine Insurance have realised 1¾ to 1⅞ prem.; Thames and Mersey Marine, 1 to 1⅛ prem.; Universal Marine, par to ¼ prem.; London and Provincial Marine, ⅜ to ¼ discount; and London and South African Bank, ⅝ to ⅛ dis.

Owing to some rather large sales of Reduced and New Three per Cents, and, consequently, to an increased supply of stock in the market, Home Securities have been very inactive throughout the week, and prices have had a drooping tendency. On Monday the Reduced and New Three per Cents were done at 93¼ 92⅞ 93; Consols, for Account, 93⅜; India Debentures, 96½ ¼; Ditto, Bonds, 8s. dis.; and Exchequer Bills, par to 5s. prem.; India Five per Cent Rupee Paper sold at 97¼ 97; Ditto Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 102½ 102. The fluctuations in prices on the following day were trifling; nevertheless, the market was very flat:—Bank Stock left off at 229; Reduced Three per Cents, 93⅛ 92⅞; New Three per Cents, 93⅛; Long Annuities, 16⅝; India Five-and-a-Half per Cent Paper, 102¼; Ditto Debentures, 1858, 96½; Ditto Bonds, 12s. to 8s. dis.; Consols for Account, 93¼ ⅜; Exchequer Bills, par to 3s. prem. On Wednesday the dealings generally were much restricted:—Bank Stock closed at 229; Reduced Three per Cents, 92⅞ 93; New Three per Cents, 93 92⅞; India Five per Cent Paper, 96¾ ½; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cent 102¼; Ditto Debentures, 96⅝; Ditto Bonds, 7s. to 11s. dis.; India Five per Cents, 104½; Consols for Account, 93⅜ ⅛; Exchequer Bills, 2s. dis. to 3s. prem. On Thursday dealings generally were limited:—Consols touched 93¼ ⅜; Reduced and New Three per Cents, 92⅞ 93⅛; Bank Stock, 229; India Five per Cent Paper, 96¾; Ditto, Five-and-a-Half per Cent, 102; and Exchequer Bills, par to 4s. prem.

A very moderate demand has prevailed for all Foreign Securities. The tendency of prices has been decidedly drooping, yet no material change has occurred in them, compared with last week. The leading quotations are as follows:—Brazilian Five per Cents, 99; Brazilian Four-and-a-Half per Cents, 1858, 87¾; Ditto, 1860, 87½; Ecuador New Consolidated, 11½; Ditto Provisional Land Warrant, 4; Dutch Four per Cents, 101¼; Mexican Three per Cents, 21; Grenada New Active Three-and-a-Half per Cents, 14¼; Ditto Deferred, 4; Portuguese Three per Cents, 45½; Russian Five per Cents, 108¾; Russian Three per Cents, 64⅛; Spanish Three per Cents, New Deferred, 37⅞; Ditto, Passive, 18½; Ditto, Committee's Certificates of Coupon, not funded, 4½; Turkish Old Six per Cents, 77⅞; Ditto, New, 60⅝; Turkish Four per Cents, 102½; Venezuela Three per Cents, 24½; Ditto One-and-a-Half per Cents, 12¼.

Joint-stock Bank Shares have ruled steady as regards prices, but the business doing in them has been very moderate. Agra and United Service have marked 80; Australasia, 65½; Chartered of India, Australia, and China, 20; English, Scottish, and Australian Chartered, 16½; London Chartered of Australia, 23 ex div.; London and County, 35½; London Joint-stock, 33; London and Westminster, 60½; Oriental, 43½; Ottoman, 18; Provincial of Ireland, 88¾; Ditto, New, 33; Union of Australia, 42½; and Union of London, 24¾.

Colonial Government Securities have been in steady request, at full quotations:—New Brunswick Six per Cents have realised 108¾; New South Wales Five per Cents, 1871 to 1876, 100¼; Ditto, 1888 and upwards, 100⅝; Nova Scotia Sterling Debentures, 109; and Victoria Six per Cents, 107¾.

The Miscellaneous Market continues inactive, but without leading to any change of importance in prices:—Anglo-Mexican Mint Shares have marked 14½; Copper Mines of England Seven-and-a-Half per Cent Preference, 25½; Crystal Palace, 32; Great Ship, ⅝; London Discount, 4½; London General Omnibus, 1½; Mediterranean Extension Telegraph, 4½; Peninsular and Oriental Steam, 74; Ditto, New, 31½; Red Sea and India Telegraph, 19½; Royal Mail Steam, 51½; South Australian Land, 35½; Van Diemen's Land, 9½; Victoria Docks, 101½; Birmingham Canal, 94½.

The directors of the Great Western Railway of Canada have intimated that they are unable to pay the half-yearly interest upon the ordinary bonds of the company.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, June 25.—Although only a limited supply of English wheat was on sale in to-day's market, the demand for both red and white qualities ruled heavy, and prices were 1s. to 2s. per quarter lower than on Monday last. In foreign wheat—the show of which was good—very little was passing, and the quotations were almost nominal. Floating cargoes, however, sold at extreme rates. There was a slow inquiry for barley, at last week's currency. Malt was unaltered in value, but sales progressed slowly. The oat trade was heavy, at quite 1s. per quarter less money, owing to an enormous influx of supply from abroad. Both beans and peas were steady in price, but the value of flour was barely supported.

June 27.—Nearly all kinds of produce were taken off slowly to-day; but, compared with Monday, no quotable change took place in prices.

English.—Wheat, Essex and Kent, red, 50s. to 59s.; ditto, white, 50s. to 62s.; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 49s. to 58s.; rye, 30s. to 31s.; grinding barley, 28s. to 30s.; distilling ditto, 30s. to 31s.; malting ditto, 3(?)s. to 36s.; Lincoln and Norfolk malt, 55s. to 67s.; brown ditto, 48s. to 49s.; Kingston and Ware, 60s. to 68s.; Chevalier, 68s. to 70s.; Yorkshire and Lincolnshire feed oats, 21s. to 25s.; potato ditto, 27s. to 29s.; Youghal and Cork, black, 20s. to 23s.; ditto, white, 22s. to 27s.; tick beans, 37s. to 39s.; grey peas, 36s. to 38s.; maple, 38s. to 41s.; white, 36s. to 39s.; boilers, 40s. to 41s. per quarter. Town-made flour, 50s. to 54s.; town households, 44s. to 47s.; country marks, 40s. to 45s. per 280 lb.; American, 27s. to 32s. per barrel; French, 37s. to 44s. per sack.

Seeds.—We have no change to notice in the value of any kind of seed. On the whole, the market is steady for the time of year.

Linseed, English, crushing, 54s. to 58s; Calcutta, 48s. to 49s. 0d.; hempseed, 38s. to 40s. per quarter; coriander, 14s. to 15s. per cwt.; tares, 7s. to 8s. per bushel. English rapeseed, 63s. to 66s. per quarter; linseed cakes, English, £9 10s. to £10 10s.; ditto, foreign, £9 10s. to £11 0s.; rape cakes, £5 0s. to £6 0s. per ton; canary, 46s. to 52s. per quarter; white clover, ditto, 84s. to 90s. per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 8½d. to 9d.; of household ditto, 6½d. to 8d. per 4-lb. loaf.

Imperial Weekly Averages.—Wheat, 57s. 0d.; barley, 34s. 7d.; oats, 27s. 5d.; rye, 38s. 9d.; beans, 45s. 10d.; peas, 41s. 4d.

The Six Weeks' Averages.—Wheat, 54s. 0d.; barley, 35s. 7d.; oats, 26s. 9d.; rye, 37s. 9d.; beans, 47s. 5d.; peas, 40s. 7d.

English Grain Sold last Week.—Wheat, 105,421; barley, 1036; oats, 3183; rye, 43; beans, 2589; peas, 333 quarters.

Tea.—The public sales held this week have gone off somewhat steadily. China qualities have realized previous rates, and Assam have advanced 2d. per lb. Privately, the demand is very inactive.

Sugar.—The transactions in most raw sugars have been to a full average extent, at late quotations. West India has sold at from 34s. to 44s 6d.; Madras, 32s. to 45s.; and Penang, 36s. 6d. to 44s. per cwt. Several floating cargoes of Havanna have changed hands at extreme rates. Refined sugars are in fair request, at 52s. per cwt. for brown lumps.

Coffee.—Only moderate quantities have been on offer, and they have mostly sold at quite last week's quotations.

Rice.—In the value of this article very little change has taken place; but, to force sales, lower rates must be submitted to. The stock is only moderate.

Provisions.—We have very little change to notice in the value of any kind of butter, but the demand is very inactive. Limerick is selling at 100s. 104s.; and Carlow, 104s. to 110s. per cwt. Bacon has further advanced 2s. Bladdered lard is quoted at 68s. to 84s., and kegs, 70s. to 72s. per cwt. Hams continue steady in price.

Tallow.—The market continues steady, at 52s. 9d. for P.Y.C. on the spot, and 52s. 9d. to 5[illegible]s. for delivery during the last three months.

Oils.—Linseed oil is steady, at 28s. 0d. to 28s 9d. per cwt. on the spot. Most other oils rule about stationary. Spirits of turpentine, 32s. 6d. to 34s. 6d.; rough, 8s. 9d. per cwt.

Spirits.—There is only a moderate inquiry for rum, at about late quotations. Proof Leewards, 1s. 7d. to 1s 8d. per gallon. Brandy is held at full prices; but the demand is by no means active. Grain spirit as last advised.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 to £5 5s.; clover, £4 to £5 6s.; and straw, £1 8s. to £1 16s. per load. Trade firm.

Coals.—Best house coals, 18s. to 18s. 6d.; seconds, 17s. to 17s. 6d.; Hartley's, 15s. 3d. to 16s. 3d.; and manufacturers' 13s. to 15s. 6d. per ton. Ships at sea, 210.

Hops.—Although the plantation accounts are by no means favourable the duty is called £170,000 to 175,000. Most kinds of hops move off slowly, at last week's quotations.

Wool.—English qualities are still very firm in price. In foreign and colonial qualities very little is doing, at late rates.

Potatoes.—The few old potatoes on offer are held at from £100 to £170 per ton. New qualities are steady, at from 8s to 16s. per cwt.

Metropolitan Cattle Market (Thursday, June 28).—Our market, to-day, was but moderately supplied with beasts. Prime breeds were in steady request, at very full prices. Otherwise, the beef trade was heavy, at late rates. Sheep—the show of which was tolerably good—commanded a fair inquiry, at Monday's currency. We have to report a dull sale for lambs, at the late decline in value. The supply was tolerably good. There was a fair sale for calves, at full prices. The numbers were moderately extensive. Pigs and milch cows moved off slowly, but without change in value. Per 8lb. to sink the offal:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 4s. 2d. to 4s. 4d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 8d. to 5s. 4d.; prime large oxen, 5s. 2d. to 5s. 4d.; prime Scots, &c., 5s. 4d. to 5s. 6d.; coarse and inferior sheep, 4s. 0d. to 4s. 4d.; second quality ditto, 4s. 6d. to 4s. 10d.; prime coarse-woolled sheep, 5s. 0d. to 5s. 2d.; prime Southdown ditto, 5s. 4d. to 5s. 6d.; large coarse calves, 4s. 6d. to 5s. 0d.; prime small ditto, 5s. 2d. to 5s. 6d.; large hogs, 4s. 0d. to 4s. 6d.; neat small porkers, 4s. 8d. to 5s. 0d.; lambs, 5s. 0d. to 6s 6d.; suckling calves, 20s. to 23s.; and quarter-old store pigs, 22s. to 30s. each. Total supply: Beasts, 1050; cows, 130; sheep and lambs, 11,200; calves, 450; pigs, 330. Foreign: Beasts, 240; sheep and lambs, 1500; calves, 293.

Newgate and Leadenhall.—The supplies of meat are moderate, and the trade is heavy, as follows:—Beef, from 3s. 4d. to 5s.; mutton, 3s. 8d. to 5s. 4d.; lamb, 5s. to 6s.; veal, 4s. 4d. to 5s.; pork, 4s. 2d. to 5s. per 8lb. by the carcase.

REVIEW OF THE VOLUNTEERS BY HER MAJESTY IN HYDE PARK.

THE grand review on Saturday last was in every respect a triumph. Another such a sight has not been seen in our days. We have had, indeed, brilliant military displays, but none so perfectly national, none that combined elements of such peculiar and stirring interest, as this great pacific demonstration. The moral significance of the whole is summed up in the one fact of its being a volunteer movement. Those fine bodies of trained men that marched to the ground on Saturday with a precision that delighted professional critics knew nothing whatever of military discipline a year ago. At most, twelve short months, and in many cases little more than half that number, have sufficed to convert a hundred thousand busy citizens into effective soldiers. The sudden creation of this great national army is a miracle which the love of "England, home, and duty" easily works amongst a brave and patriotic people. It expresses the stern but enthusiastic attachment which true liberty inspires. The mere whisper of danger to the land that enjoys it, and the institutions in which it is embodied, has profoundly moved the whole nation. It has summoned bands of volunteers in every part of the country to the unaccustomed discipline of arms; and, were danger imminent and threatening, the same impulse would multiply their number tenfold. This is the meaning of the demonstration of Saturday. It was the fête-day of constitutional freedom; and everything conspired to render its proceedings worthy of the occasion.

As a mere spectacle nothing could be finer than the appearance of the Park at the mustering of the volunteers. The day was of the best possible kind for outdoor activity and enjoyment—bright and cheerful but not too brilliant, bits of blue sky chequering the masses of cool, grey clouds that moved slowly across the sky, and a pleasant breeze tempering the heat and giving freshness and elasticity to the air throughout the day. Then the arrangements on the ground were most picturesque. The actors and spectators inclosed the open spaces of the park so as to turn its beauty to the best account. They were arranged in a vast oval amphitheatre, or long ellipse, lying north and south, the eastern line being a crescent of gaily-dressed spectators, and the lonnger western line covered with masses of the volunteer troops in position, each line having as a background a noble screen of wood. The intervening space was brightened with moving uniforms and animated with martial music; while all round surged the great tide of the many-voiced and ever-moving multitude.

ASSEMBLING OF THE VOLUNTEERS.

From one o'clock up to three p.m. the march of the volunteer regiments into the park was continuous and unbroken. From the various railway stations, and from the extreme suburbs, east, west, north, and south, they advanced upon Hyde Park as a centre in accumulating lines, each regiment preceded by its band. Among the first to arrive was the Honourable Artillery Company of London, headed by its mounted corps, under the command of Captain Jay. From the precision with which this fine body of men marched it might almost have been mistaken for one of the Household regiments, whose uniform is very similar. Next came the Huntingdonshire Mounted Rifles, with the Duke of Manchester at their head. The 1st Surrey Mounted Rifles, a troop of fine, soldierly-looking fellows, came into the park about the same period. The Civil Service corps, headed by Viscount Bury, marched in together with the Artists' (38th Middlesex). For nearly two hours there was a constant succession of battalions arriving on the ground, stretching away in long black, grey, and scarlet columns, and marching in excellent style. It was quite impossible to take an accurate note of the arrival of the separate corps. The Berkshires formed a strong battalion of nearly 600 strong; the Birmingham and Coventry force numbered about the same. The west-country men—a splendid set of fellows—were 800 strong. Swarming in from the north side came companies from Bristol, Gloucester, Stroud, Bath, Warwick, Sleaford, Reading, Windsor, Newbury, Abingdon, Maidenhead, Wokingham, Oxford, Bridport, Burlington, Northampton, Aylesbury, Trowbridge, Derby, Burton-on-Trent, Manchester, Nottingham, Sheffield, Worcester, and the northern and western districts. The Lancashire contingents excited great attention, as well from their numbers as from the remarkable steadiness and precision of their marching. Manchester alone contributed almost as many as the city of London. The Nottingham regiment was also very noticeable—the Lincoln green, so much brighter than the ordinary rifle uniform, giving them a peculiar character on the ground. Another corps which excited more than ordinary interest was the Victoria Rifles. This is the only corps which had an existence at the time when the volunteers were reviewed in 1803. The City of London Volunteers, with Lieutenant-Colonel Hicks at their head, entered the park amidst the "hurrahs" of the multitude. Before three o'clock the whole of the line between the north and south sides of the park was occupied by volunteers, massed in contiguous columns, with arms piled. The Brigade-Majors had by this time picketed the spaces allotted for each of their battalions by means of small flags of various colours, and now every corps fell into its appointed position. There were two divisions, the first formed of six brigades, one of mounted volunteers, one of artillery, and four of infantry. The second division consisted of four brigades, all infantry. The signal to fall in having been given, the effect of the line thus formed was very imposing. On the extreme right was a red mass, consisting of the Mounted Huntingdonshire, the Engineers, and the Artillery corps. In the centre a grey tint prevailed, and on the left was a dark mass formed of the Surrey and other regiments, whose uniform was of rifle green.

At half-past three o'clock the Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by Lieutenant-General Sir J. F. Love, commanding the first division, and Major-General Lord Rokeby, commanding the second division, rode up to the front and inspected the whole line preparatory to the DEPARTURE OF THE QUEEN FROM BUCKINGHAM PALACE.

Her Majesty, as we learn from the Court Circular, quitted the palace shortly before four o'clock for Hyde Park. A numerous retinue of military officers in uniform escorted the Queen to the review. Her Majesty was seated in an open carriage and four, and by her side sat his Majesty the King of the Belgians, habited in his uniform as an English Field Marshal, and wearing the decoration of the Order of the Garter. Opposite to the Queen and King in the carriage were Princess Alice and Prince Arthur, the young Prince wearing the Highland dress. The Prince Consort, in a Field Marshal's uniform, and wearing the ribbon of the Order of the Garter, and the Count of Flanders, wearing a handsome Belgian uniform, dark blue with gold appointments, rode on the right of the Queen's carriage. The Prince of Wales and Prince Jules of Holstein-Glucksburg, the former wearing a Colonel's uniform, and the latter habited in a foreign uniform, rode on the opposite side of her Majesty's carriage. The Queen was preceded by a party of Life Guards, her Majesty's Aides-de-Camp, the Queen's Equerries, the Adjutant-General to the Forces, the Quartermaster-General to the Forces, and the Military Secretary, and also by other military officers.

Immediately after the Queen's carriage rode Viscount Combermere. His Lordship wore the uniform of his regiment, the Life Guards, and carried his gold stick of office as the Commander of the Household Regiment in Waiting. The veteran Viscount wore over his cuirass the ribbon of the Order of the Bath. The Marquis of Ailesbury, Master of the Horse to the Queen, and Lord Alfred Paget, Clerk Marshal, also rode behind the Queen's carriage. A second Royal carriage and four, also open, followed, containing his Royal Highness Prince Leopold, her Royal Highness Princess Helena, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge, and her Royal Highness the Hereditasy Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg Strelitz. The young Prince appeared in the Highland dress. The Equerries in Waiting on the Queen and the Prince Consort attended on each side of the carriage. A third open carriage and four contained her Royal Highness Princess Louisa, her Royal Highness Princess Mary of Cambridge, and Mr. Sidney Herbert, Secretary of State for the War Department. The Hon. General Grey and Lieutenant-Colonel Keppel rode on horseback on each side of the carriage. The Ladies in Waiting and Lord de Grey and Ripon followed in another carriage. The Lords Lieutenant of counties, wearing their distinctive military uniform, had assembled near the principal gate of the Palace, and followed in the procession, together with some military officers and several foreign staff officers, the Royal cortége being closed by a numerous party of Life Guards.

THE INSPECTION.

As soon as the guns announced the Queen's entrance to the park the Duke of Cambridge, with the officers of his staff, rode across the ground to receive her Majesty, and fell into the Royal procession immediately in front of the Queen's carriage. The progress of the Royal cortége along the line of the galleries formed a very beautiful spectacle. Pausing at the Royal standard to contemplate the coup d'œil, her Majesty was saluted by the whole line presenting arms—a movement which was executed with the greatest precision. The Royal cortége first proceeded in the direction of the left of the line, but afterwards changed its course and drove to the extreme right, from which point her Majesty commenced her inspection, proceeding at a slow pace and observing with interest the appearance and characteristics of the different corps. As her Majesty passed along, each brigade successively saluted by presenting arms; but at this time there was no other recognition of the Royal presence on the part of the volunteers, who strictly preserved a soldierly silence. The crowds behind the line, as well as the spectators on the northern and southern sides of the park, near the right and left of the volunteerrs, however, cheered vociferously while her Majesty was in their vicinity.

The inspection being completed, the procession returned to the Queen's standard, in front of which her Majesty's carriage drew up. The united bands of the regiments of Foot Guards now advanced from the rear of the line (where they had performed some martial music during the Royal inspection) to a position opposite her Majesty's carriage. Here they formed a glittering centre, on the left of which the General Commanding in Chief and the officers of his staff subsequently arranged themselves—the Lords Lieutenant of counties occupying the right. At twenty minutes to five o'clock the bands struck up, and so admirably were all the arrangements carried out, that without any delay the van of the volunteer army advanced in quick time in open columns of companies, preceded by the Duke of Cambridge and his staff, who wheeled off as soon as they had passed the Queen's carriage.

The Mounted Rifles of Huntingdonshire, under the command of the Duke of Manchester, came first. Their uniform of scarlet with white facings was not particularly handsome, but their horses were capital, and the men themselves stalwart troopers. The next were the Surrey Mounted Rifles, who bore the appearance of light cavalry, and were greatly admired. The 1st Middlesex Mounted Engineers, commanded by Captain Macleod of Macleod, followed. These wore scarlet uniforms, with their rifles slung behind them. They were thoroughly soldierlike in appearance, and looked up to any work. The mounted troop of the Hon. Artillery Company came next, with their two guns. They were under the command of Captain Jay, of Regent street. The infantry companies of the same honourable corps followed their guns. Accustomed as this corps is to parade manœuvres and such active duties as peace affords, it was no matter of surprise that their march was pronounced faultless. These successors of the ancient Train Bands of London carried the only colours that appeared on the field during the day. Next came the Middlesex Engineer Volunteers, a crack corps of highly-intelligent gentlemen in connection with the Brompton Schools of Art. They wore a uniform of scarlet with white facings, and a shako and feathers, and had evidently been drilled with great care and success. The 32nd Middlesex, better known as the "Six-foot Volunteers," led by Captain the Hon. T. Bruce, closed the rear of the opening brigade. The size and height of the members of this corps drew much attention, and their noble appearance was increased by their handsome uniform of scarlet with black facings. These sons of Anak were greeted with universal applause.

The Artillery Brigade, under the command of Colonel Tulloch, with Lieutenant-Colonel Morris, C.B., R.A., as Major of Brigade, now advanced—1000 strong—with blue uniform and red facings. These artillery regiments were formed into two battalions, the first composed of those belonging to the county of Kent (1st), Gravesend (5th), Blackheath (9th), Plumstead and the Royal Arsenal and Dockyard of Woolwich (10th and 14th), to the number of 500; the second of various counties on the seaboard, the 1st Gloucester (Bristol), 1st Sussex (Brighton), 6th Cinque Ports (Hastings), and the 2nd Durham (Marchioness of Londonderry's, Seaham), numbering in the aggregate 500. The Kentish men looked as if they could well maintain the honour of the old badge of the White Horse, with its well-known motto of "Invicta Kent." The Seaham corps, commanded by Earl Vane, was particularly noticeable in the 2nd battalion. Lady Londonderry has raised it on her own estates, from her own tenantry; and, from the spirit and intelligence they exhibit, these men are a credit to her Ladyship and to the country.

Now came the first infantry brigade, under the command of his Grace the Duke of Wellington, and Major Hume, Assistant-Inspector, as Major of Brigade. The first battalion comprised the eight companies of the 1st Middlesex, known as the Victoria Rifles, and the Harrow and Kilburn regiments, the 16th and 18th of the same county. The Duke rode at the head of the Victoria Rifles, of which corps he is the Colonel. The first battalion numbered 600 600 men, and was particularly distinguishable by its very tasteful uniform of dark green with black facings. This battalion was commanded by Major Whitehead. The 2nd battalion was commanded by Lord Radstock, and showed the first of the grey uniform with dark blue facings, which the Government Board so strongly recommend. The 9th and 13th regiments use different facings—the Hampstead black and red, and the Highgate green, the latter regiment having adopted the Garibaldi high-peaked and broad-brimmed head covering, which imparts to it a curious, Savoyard appearance, not pre-eminently soldierlike. This battalion counted 600 men. The 3rd battalion comprised three Middlesex regiments—first, the 11th (St. George's), which claims relationship with former volunteers, dresses very smartly in dark green, heavily braided with black, and marches in a superior style; next, the 12th (Barnet); and, lastly, the 13th (Paddington). This battalion was commanded by Colonel Charles Hugh Lindsay, late of the Grenadier Guards, and mustered 600 men. In the 4th battalion, under Major Biggs, Middlesex again changes its colour for grey, in the 20th (Euston-square), and 29th (St. Pancras), to resume the green again with the 37th, and the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Hertford. The Middlesex regiments marched well, but the Watford and St. Albans were exceedingly regular in the step, and steady.

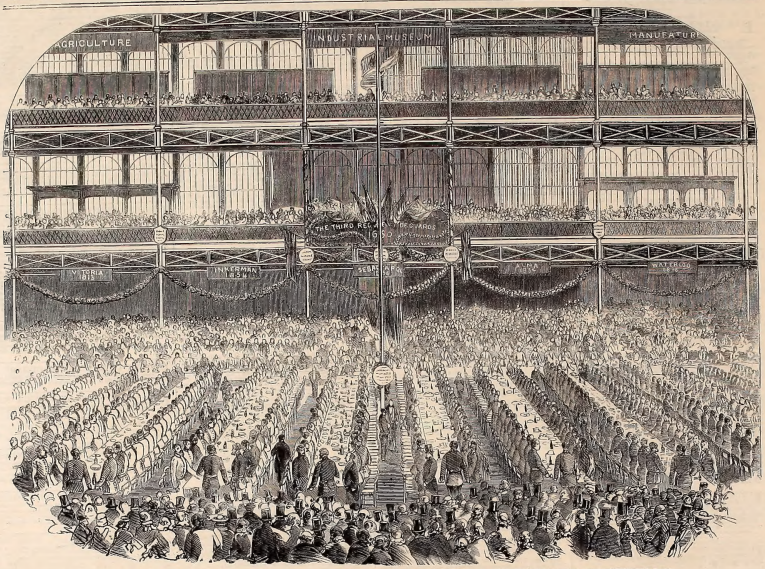
The 2nd brigade now advanced in a dark, lowering mass of 2400 men, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Hicks. The first two battalions were constituted of the 1st and 2nd battalions of the City of London Volunteers, each 600 strong, under Major Close and Captain and Alderman Rose. To these were added the 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th, the 26th, 39th, and 40th Middlesex, and the 2nd City of London forming a 3rd battalion, under Major Ralph Grey, M.P., and a 4th battalion, under Lieutenant-Colonel Walker, formed by the 2nd and 3rd Tower Hamlets, the 33rd Middlesex, and the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, and 7th Essex. The London regiment was remarked by all as showing more than a commonly creditable result from good drilling and painstaking attention on the part of young men who have by no means too much time to bestow upon their military education. They marched with a regular and steady gait, and maintained an unswerving line. The Essex regiments were heavy in their appearance, but showed no deficiency in their marching. The 26th Middlesex (Custom-house officers) were particularly noticed as a thoroughly active and efficient corps, sturdy and steady as a rock. The advance of the 3rd brigade, commanded by Viscount Raleigh, with Major Nelson for its Brigade-Major, was observed with much interest. The 1st battalion was formed alone by the regiment of which Viscount Ranelagh is himself Colonel, the 2nd Middlesex (Walham-green), numbering upwards of 700 men. They did justice to the extreme care and attention his Lordship has bestowed upon them, and were welcomed, as was their gallant Colonel, with cheers, and rewarded with liberal applause. Major Lord Bury led the 2nd battalion, mustering 400 men, and composed of that distinguished corps, the 21st Middlesex (Civil Service), and another not less known to fame, the 38th Middlesex (Artists). The "Civil Service" are actually as competent as any line regiment, and were applauded for their marching; and in "The Artists" Captain Millais marched by the side of Full Private Holman Hunt. The 3rd battalion, of twelve companies, 950 men, was made by the 22nd Middlesex (Queen's), known as the "Westminsters," under the command of Lieut.-Colonel Lord Grosvenor. This regiment marched past with great precision, and kept a firm and unwavering front. They were followed by the 4th battalion, the already famous 23rd Middlesex (Inns of Court). A finer body of men could scarcely be picked out from the whole kingdom. Their Lieutenant-Colonel, William Bagenal Brewster, wore his Crimean medals; and the whole regiment of 600, in their grey and scarlet uniform, and plain brown belts, bore a manly, sturdy appearance.

Lord Elcho's 4th brigade, headed by his Highlanders, in grey kilts, came up to the tune of "Bonnie Laddie," and with volleys of cheers and applause, testifying the strong prevalence of a regard for the Scottish regiments that prevails in English society of every grade. The light grey dress, the plaided bonnet, with the cock's feather, and the general spirited and dashing look of the London Scottish Regiment (15th Middlesex) won general approbation. The 1st Surrey, under Lieutenant-Colonel Macdonald, formed the second battalion of this brigade, and amply justified by its soldierly appearance and firm solid marching the general opinion that the Surrey regiments are second to none in the field. This battalion, with the other regiments, the 2nd, 4th, 6th, 8th, 9th, 11th, and 12th, under Colonel Campbell, late E.I.C.S., and the 7th, 10th, 19th, and 21st, under Major Beresford, exceeded 1500 in number. Specially noticeable in this brigade also was the 19th Middlesex, the corps of the Working Men's College. Their step was as regular and their front as accurate as if it had been ruled by a line. This was the last battalion of the first division, which had occupied forty minutes in passing before her Majesty in quick time.

The second division, led by Major-General Lord Rokeby, was headed by several Essex regiments and two battalions from the county of Kent. The Gloucestershire and east-country regiments constituted the second brigade of this division, under the Marquis of Donegall, with the addition of the 28th Middlesex or London Irish Volunteers, whose approach, with Captain Lord Otho Fitzgerald at their head, excited much attention; and her Majesty, who, with the King of the Belgians and the Royal children, had risen from their seats on the first appearance of the mounted Huntingdonshire corps, showed her appreciation by remaining standing until the regiments from Derby, Stafford, Burton-on-Trent, and other places in the midland counties had defiled past the Royal carriage. Wine so good ran out pure to the very lees, for the Cheshire corps, which brought up the rear, was such an one as might have formed the van of an imperial army.

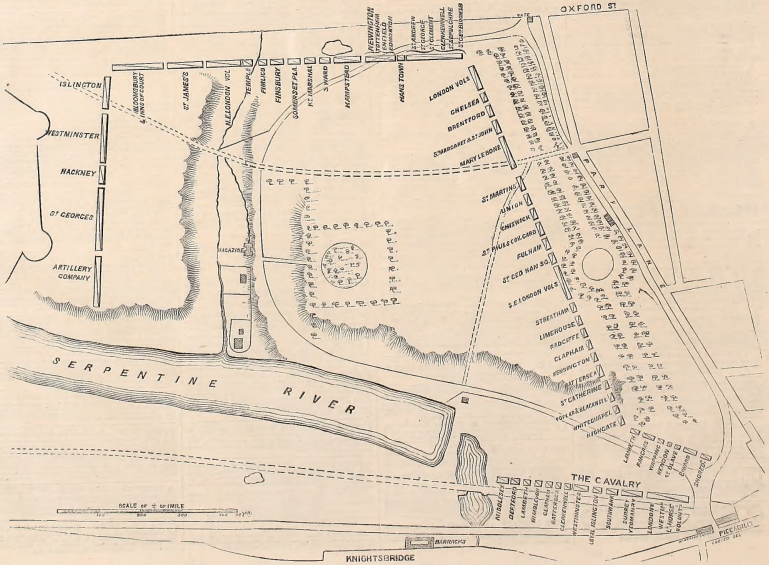
It was now twenty minutes to six o'clock, and within a few minutes after the last battalion had marched past the whole of the troops were back in their alignement. So exactly was this accomplished that it is said none of the battalions were more than two paces from their original position. The bands now marched back to the rear of the line, and the Lords Lieutenant having drawn up in the vicinity of the Royal carriage, the Duke of Cambridge, with his staff, rode forward to the front of the line, which, at his Royal Highness's command, advanced in battalions of columns towards her Majesty. After marching about sixty paces a halt was called, and the troops simultaneously saluted her Majesty by presenting arms. At this moment the united bands struck up "God Save the Queen," which was the signal for an irrepressible burst of cheering from the whole volunteer body, which was echoed and re-echoed by the spectators on every part of the ground. The excitement now was very great, the troops placing their shakos upon their bayonets, raised them aloft, and waved them exultingly in the air for several moments, producing a scene of general enthusiasm which will not be forgotten by those who witnessed it. Before the cheers had subsided her Majesty summoned the Duke of Cambridge to her carriage and expressed her high gratification at the whole proceedings of the day. The official signification of approval and thanks was conveyed by his Royal Highness to the commanders of volunteer corps, who obeyed the order of "mounted officers to the front!" and by those gallant gentlemen to their officers and men. The Royal procession re-formed, and, amid renewed cheers, took its departure in the same order and direction by which it had arrived.

The exact number of volunteers under arms in Hyde Park on Saturday was, according to the official returns, 18,450, of which number the metropolitan corps supplied 13,226.



The Duke of Cambridge has issued a general order expressing her Majesty's great satisfaction with the manner in which the volunteers acquitted themselves at the review on Saturday. The order also descants on the loyalty and patriotism which the volunteers have manifested.

THE FUSILIER GUARDS' FETE AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.



THE officers of the 3rd Regiment of Scots Fusilier Guards gave a dinner on Wednesday week to the non-commissioned officers and men at the Crystal Palace, in celebration of the two-hundredth anniversary of the raising of the regiment. The first battalion, consisting of 734 effectives, left Pimlico station at 12.30; and about the same hour the second battalion, numbering 767 men, proceeded from London-bridge. Both battalions, on arriving at the entrance to the Crystal Palace, formed line, and, preceded by their band, marched to the terrace in front of the central transept, where they dispersed until the bugle call to dinner brought them again into line. During the interval between their arrival and the hour fixed for dinner the men amused themselves by walking over the palace and grounds with their friends. At twenty minutes to three o'clock the bugle summoned them, and from the balcony could be seen redcoats advancing from all parts of the grounds. On they came until the two battalions were again made up, and then each formed line at either side of the entrance to the palace, and when word was given by Colonel Ridley, the acting commandant, both battalions entered and took their places at the tables, which were laid out in the transept. There were fourteen tables running the entire length of the transept for the men, and at the top tables sat the non-commissioned officers and sergeants, of whom there were upwards of sixty. Sergeant John Smith, second battalion, presided. The fare was excellent and abundant; and a bottle of sherry was supplied to every three men, and a pot of beer to each. In the centre of the transept the British standard waved over the tables, and on each side were hung banners, on which were inscribed the names of the fifteen great battles in which the regiment did honour to itself and immortalised British valour. In the rear of the tables were two raised platforms. The one to the right was appropriated to the officers, their ladies, and friends; and that on the left to the directors and the general public. On the Handel orchestra, in front of the great organ, the wives and children of the men, numbering about three hundred, were accommodated, with a large number of visitors, and the several galleries facing the transept were also fully occupied. Shortly after dinner was over his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge entered the transept, dressed in plain clothes, and his appearance was the signal for a burst of cheering as spontaneous and hearty as ever greeted Royal Duke. Some loyal and other toasts having been given and enthusiastically received, the men left the palace and proceeded to the grounds, where they spent the remainder of the day in various athletic sports.

REVIEW OF VOLUNTEER CORPS IN HYDE PARK BY GEORGE III.

As a pendant to the Engravings of the Volunteer Review on Saturday last we give the plan of a review of volunteer corps in Hyde Park by King George III. on the 4th of June, 1799, his Majesty's birthday. The particulars of this review were given in our last week's Number, under the heading "Relics of the Past." A few remarks, therefore, in connection with the annexed engraving will suffice at the present time. The right wing, under the command of Lord Heathfield, consisted of twelve regiments of cavalry, extending from the east end of the Serpentine River to Hyde Park-corner. The centre, commanded by Major-General Ludlow, was occupied by twenty-nine battalions of infantry, covering the ground between Hyde Park-corner and Cumberland-gate. In the left wing, under Major-General D'Oyley, were twenty-five corps of infantry, occupying the whole north line of the Park, and the west side, as far as Serpentine River. The whole line consisted of near twelve thousand men, highly appointed, under the general command of Lord Harrington. It is worthy of remark that the Royal Pimlico had an auxiliary corps in the field, consisting of 200 artificers and peace officers, with one large and two small fire-engines. These were enrolled to do duty with the corps, in case of fire.

NEW BOOKS, &c.

Now ready, price 10s. 6d.,

ELKERTON RECTORY, being Part the Second of "Twenty Years in the Church." By the Rev. JAMES PYCROFT, B.A.

"The refined drollery and quiet satire which run through the narrative remind one of Sidney Smith. Few absolute novels are half so captivating, and we earnestly recommend it."—St. James's Chronicle.

"We ask a fair and candid reading for this work, of a most healthy tone, which ought to circulate by thousands of copies through the length and breadth of the country."—Bell's Weekly Messenger.

"We cordially recommend the book to all who would understand the difficulties of clerical life. It gives us a very high opinion of the self-denial and heroic patience of pastors."—Exeter Post.

"We have, indeed, risen from a perusal of this work with mind aroused and gratified by his skilful pictures of men and manners, and raised and improved by the efficacy of his moral lessons."—Bath Herald.

"The cheerfulness of an educated and well-balanced mind throws a genial light and warmth over the whole book, and renders its perusal no less attractive than suggestive and improving. We seldom have laid down any work with so lively a feeling of sympathetic esteem towards its author."—The Press.

CHAPPELL'S FOREIGN MODEL PIANOFORTE, price Fifty Guineas. This instrument has (unlike the ordinary Cottage Pianoforte) Three Strings and the fullest Grand Compass of Seven Octaves. It is strengthened by every possible means to endure the greatest amount of wear, and to stand perfectly in any climate. The workmanship is of the best description; the tone is round, full, and rich; and the power equal to that of a Bichord Grand. The case is of the most elegant description, in rosewood; the touch elastic, and the repetition very rapid. Every possible precaution has been taken to ensure its standing well in tune. Chappell and Co. especially invite the attention of the public, the profession, and merchants, to the Foreign Model, feeling assured that no Pianoforte, in all respects comparable, has hitherto been made in England at the same price. Every instrument will be warranted, and (if desired) exchanged within twelve months of the purchase.—50, New Bond-street, London.

HARMONIUMS at CHAPPELL'S. — The HARMONIUM by ALEXANDRE is the only instrument of the kind that remains in tune; from the simplicity of its construction is but slightly affected by changes of weather, and is alike calculated for the Church, Chapel, School, or Drawing-room.

Compact, portable, and efficient, combining a wide field of observation with extraordinary defining power. In sling-case, 3½ guineas. Sent free on receipt of Post-office order to W. and J. Burrow, Great Malvern, Worcestershire.

SPORTSMEN and GENTLEMEN of the ARMY and NAVY.—S. and B. SOLOMONS, Opticians, 39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly, opposite the York Hotel. Portability combined with great power in FIELD, RACECOURSE, OPERA, and general out-door day and night powerful Waistcoat-pocket PERSPECTIVE GLASSES, weighing only four ounces each, containing 12 and 18 lenses, constructed of German glass, will show distinctly a person to know them at 2½ and 3 miles. They serve every purpose on the Racecourse and at the Opera-house. Country scenery and ships are clearly seen at 8 to 10 miles. They are also invaluable for Shooting, Deerstalking, and Yachting. Her Majesty's Coast Guards are making use of them as day and night glasses. The term for them are powerful and brilliant telescopes for both eyes. The most powerful Telescopes, possessing such extraordinary power that some, 3½ inches, with an extra astronomical eyepiece, will show distinctly Jupiter's moons, Saturn's ring, and the double stars; with the same telescope a person can be seen and known three-and-a-half miles distant and an object from fourteen to sixteen miles. They are in endless variety, of larger and all sizes, with increasing powers and are secured by her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent.

SPECTACLES.—Optical Improvements, to enable persons at an advanced age to read with ease, and to distinguish objects with perfect distinctness.—Messrs. SOLOMONS have invented SPECTACLE LENSES of the greatest transparent power. The valuable advantage derived from this invention is that vision becoming impaired is preserved and strengthened; very aged persons are enabled to employ their sight at the most minute occupation; can see with these lenses of a much less magnifying power, and they do not require the frequent changes, to the dangerous effects of further powerful assistance.—39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly.

DEAFNESS.—A newly-invented Instrument for extreme cases of Deafness, called the Sound Magnifier, Organic Vibrator, and Invisible Voice Conductor. It fits into the ear so as not to be in the least perceptible: the unpleasant sensation of singing noises in the head is entirely removed. It affords instant relief to deaf persons, and enables them to hear distinctly at church and at public assemblies. Every other kind of hearing Instrument, Messrs. SOLOMONS Opticians, 39, Albemarle-street, Piccadilly, W.

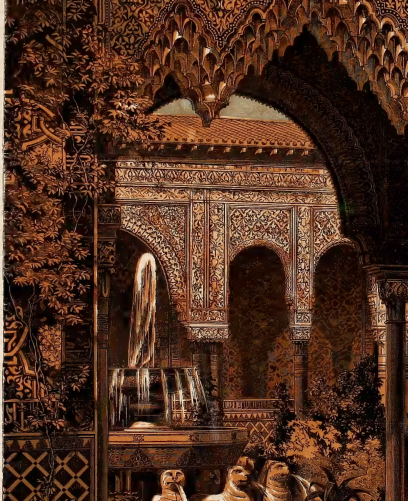
INFANTS' NEW FEEDING-BOTTLES.—From the "Lancet"—"We have seldom seen anything so beautiful as the Feeding-bottles introduced by Mr. ELAM, 196, Oxford-street. They are quite unrivalled." 7s. 6d. each.

TO LADIES NURSING.—ELAM'S NEW NIPPLE-SHIELD for taking away all pain whilst nursing, preventing and immediately curing cracked or sore nipples.—BENJAMIN ELAM, 196, Oxford-street. 4s. 6d.; by post 9d. extra.

THE ALHAMBRA COURT IN THE CRYSTAL PALACE.—The Alhambra Court—the triumph of Mr. Owen Jones's architectural reproductions—besides its intrinsic sumptuous beauties, and the charming dream-like reveries its gorgeous, shady corridors and recesses suggest, is, in an historical and archæological point of view, one of the most interesting and important in the Sydenham Palace of Arts. The Saracenic or Moresque architecture, of which this may be accounted as the most complete and splendid surviving example, sprang from the Byzantine, which itself sprang from the Romanesque, and may be considered as the parent of the Gothic. A remarkable peculiarity in this architecture was that its ornament, as resulting both from design and material, was all internal. Externally it was wholly unadorned; whether upon a selfish principle, or, as suggested by Ford, with a view to awe and repulse the spectator, and more especially to keep away the evil eye, which say, the effect resulting from proportion of parts to the whole is lost, and the Court itself has a more crowded appearance than the original. Some other points of detail are thus stated by Mr. Owen Jones:—"By the omission of the pavilions at each end, and by a diminished number of intercolumniations, to which we were compelled by our confined space, we have unconsciously to retain somewhat of the general aspect of the original. In the Court of the Lions of the Casa Real, the irregularity in the arrangement of the columns, which are placed sometimes singly and sometimes in pairs, does not appear to detract from the general harmony; but, on the contrary, a charming effect is produced by this half capricious departure from uniformity. With our diminished space, however, we have felt it to be necessary, while preserving the feature of the single and double columns, to attempt more symmetry in the arrangement, as also with the several varieties in the capitals of the columns; which in the original, though similar in outline, offer great variety in their foliage; and, although the same design is more than once repeated in the whole, no attempt was made to a symmetrical arrangement."

The present covering of the roofs of the Casa Real is in all cases modern; we find no traces anywhere of the ancient tiled roofs. In the Court of the Mosque, however, we have a small fragment of an ancient barge-board, which has suggested to us the form of the roof-tiles which we have placed over this Court. They have been admirably executed by Mr. Blashfield in terra-cotta.

We can imagine that the calm solitude of this secluded Court, shaded by low trees, the air filled with the odour of flowers, and addressing the ear only with the monotonous ever patter of the fountain, must have afforded indescribable charm to the contemplative Moorish Prince in those days when the arts of peace and of war were cultivated to equal perfection by a race which, although it has since departed from the families of Europe, has left the evidences of its high civilisation and intelligence behind it.



The Hall of Justice, at the western extremity of the Court of Lions, is an oblong corridor, which gives entrance to three Alcoves or Divans, and is now called by the Spaniards Sala del Tribunal, or Hall of Justice, from three paintings on the ceilings of the Alcoves, the centre one of which appears to represent a tribunal. In the reproduction of this apartment, as in the case of the Court of Lions, some differences of arrangement and of dimensions have been compelled by local circumstances, or induced by special considerations. The separate rooms are wider than the original, and not so high, by reason of the gallery over, which prevented the introduction of the stalactite roofs. The arches are facsimiles of the original; the diapers on the walls are taken from other parts of the Casa Real, in order to introduce as many varieties as possible of the surface decoration of the Moors. Moreover, we are told, there is no flat ceiling in the Alhambra precisely similar to those placed in these rooms; but ceilings of this kind exist in the small corridors around the various Courts.

The arch which crowns the opening from the Hall of Justice to the Hall of the Abencerrages forms in the Casa Real the entrance to the centre alcove or divan of the Hall of Justice. Mr. Owen Jones remarks:—"The exquisite form of the arch, the playful character of the archivolt and richly-ornamented spandril, and the poetic inscription which incloses the whole, give it strong claims to our admiration. This arch is a good example of the mode of surface decoration observed by the Moors. The eye is first attracted by the outline of the general forms and masses, and at each nearer view discovers some new object of attention: thus the principal forms which strike the eye in this arch are the inscription, zones, and archivolt, the gold flower on the upper surface of the spandrils carrying the eye off, and uniting the whole. On a nearer view the blue flowers beneath the inscription and in the spandrils enter into the composition with the details of the archivolt, on which again are painted small flowers, only visible on a closer inspection."

The Hall of the Abencerrages of the Casa Real derives its name from the tradition that in this hall Boabdil, the last Moorish King of Granada, invited the chiefs of the tribe of the Abencerrages, his rivals, to a banquet, and had them taken out one by one after the feast through a small wicket in the fountain of the Court of Lions, where they were beheaded. The local guides of the Alhambra still show on the pavement of the Court of Lions the supposed crimson record of this truly Oriental tragedy. This Hall, as given in the Crystal Palace, is of the exact dimensions of the original in its plan, but is reduced in height by the omission of a band which ran round immediately over the basement arches. The Pendentive roof of this compartment is of exquisite beauty and richness, and, moulded in gelatine, is an exact copy of the original.

The Divan and Cast Room do not call for particular description.

The beauty of proportion between the parts respectively and the whole observable in this original structure, which, as already stated, it has been found impossible, in all cases, to carry out in the reproduction, and the principles upon which it was obtained, are worthy of particular consideration. At the outset it is discovered that although many of the ornaments in the Alhambra are repeated in the various halls in different positions, yet they always fit in the places they occupy, the pattern never admitting of repetition by any other than a natural division: they always appear as if made to fit the particular spot, and yet they are all cast from one and the same model. Now, this could not have occurred unless they not all been designed on a certain fixed rule of proportion, and the rule followed appears to have been that which Mr. Owen ascribes to the ancients—viz., that they determined always that each part of a composition should be some aliquot part of the whole. "The process," Mr. Owen Jones observes, "will be easily understood if we imagine a wall built of brick, inlaid with blocks of stone of various sizes, if it was decided, on commencing, to take the size and shape of the brick for the 'unit,' and every piece of stone was made so many times the height of the brick, so many times the breadth of the brick broad, and so many times the depth of the brick deep, the joints would be certain to range in all directions."

In the use of colours, also, the Moors did all upon principle, and their principle is one which we would commend to the attention of those who in our day undertake works of interior decoration. The Moors followed the example of the ancients, who always used colour to assist in the development of form, and as a further means of bringing out the constructive features of a building. Again, the colours employed by the Moors in their stucco-work were, in all cases, the primaries—red, blue, and yellow (gold). The secondary colours—purple, green, and orange—occur only in Mosaic dados, which, being near the eye, formed a point of repose from the more brilliant colouring above. Indeed, with the Moors, as a general rule, the primary colours are always used on the upper portions of objects, the secondary and tertiary on the lower. "This," Mr. Jones observes, "appears to be accordance with a natural law; we have the primary blue in the sky, the secondary green in the trees and fields, ending with the tertiaries in the earth; as also in flowers, where we generally find the tertiaries in the buds and flowers, and the secondaries on the leaves and stalks;" an ingenious theory, which, however, was not wanted to explain a course of Providence easily justifiable upon other grounds. Thus, the Moors in colouring modelled surfaces always placed the red, being the strongest colour of the three, in the depths, where it might be softened by shadow, never on the surface; blue in the shades, and gold on all the surfaces exposed to light; it being obvious that by this arrangement alone would their relative value be obtained. Again, we find the colours separated by white bands or by the shadow caused by the relief of the ornament itself, the colours never being allowed to interfere upon one another. The result is a sound principle, and the more so as it is directly opposed to the practice of Europe, which mixes white with middle tint or shadows, which is considered essential in the colouring of a picture. Fine art and decorative art are, and should be, different in purpose and object, and Mr. Owen Jones informs us, in colouring the not his work of Moors, he has executed posterior to the conquest of Granada by Spanish painters.

QUEEN MARY'S SUMMER-HOUSE, NEAR HOLYROOD PALACE, EDINBURGH.

THE picturesque fragment of old-time work which we have engraved will be recognised by both natives of Edinburgh and visitors. The French style of this relic, which is connected by name, and otherwise, with the unfortunate Queen Mary of Scotland, is worthy of notice. The high pitch of the roof, the smallness of the door and windows, and the excellent fine masonry, show that even this little building, placed for pleasure purposes, was erected with a view towards protection in dangerous times. A few years since, in making some repairs in the interior parcel of the roof, an ancient dagger, much corroded by rust, was found sticking in the wood work, which is supposed to have been left there by one of the assassins while escaping by this way after the murder of Rizzio. Perhaps there is no city on the Continent to which exists flock for the purpose of study presenting so much fine street scenery as did the old town of Edinburgh a quarter of a century or so ago. Much has of late years been demolished. There still, however, remain some fine combinations of the building of past generations, which have many interesting associations with the historic features, and give much beauty to the city.

QUEEN MARY'S SUMMER-HOUSE, NEAR HOLYROOD PALACE, EDINBURGH.

When the summer weather attracts artistic travellers northward they will find some choice bits in this neighbourhood, and days might be well spent in researching some of the dark dwellings of the old nobility, which are of quaint form, and decorated with ornaments and devices. Great assistance will be found in effecting this by consulting the works of Dr. Daniel Wilson and Chambers on the antiquities and traditions of Edinburgh: in the former book are engravings of several houses of consequence which have been pulled during the last ten or twelve years. A large collection of real, historical, and other curiosities are preserved in the Museum of the Royal Scottish Society of Antiquaries which are of great interest.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

THE SINGER'S LIBRARY OF CONCERTED MUSIC. Edited by JOHN HULLAH, LL.D., and A. E. CARPENTER, Musical Entertainment, "From Year's End to Year's End." Composed by CHARLES HALLE. Overture—WANDERER'S REST. "The Wanderer's Prayer for Peace). Words translated from Goethe; the Music by F. EDWARD BACHE. THE ARRIVE. Words from Goethe; the Music by F. EDWARD BACHE. THE MISSION OF GERMANY. Song by F. EDWARD BACHE. THE MISSION OF THE SONG (Widmung). Composed by OTTO GOLDSCHMIDT. THE SONG. Poetry by ADELAIDE ANNE PROCTER; the music by WILHELM SCHLUTHE. "HELENE: Ballad. The Music by STEPHEN HELLER. Addison and Co.

We have already mentioned the commencement of Mr. Hullah's serial publication, the Singer's Library of Concerted Music; and we have now to notice the second and third portions of the two series, the sacred and the secular. The second sacred part contains a motet, "O Lord, how gracious thy words!" by Michael Haydn, a composer who, though less known than his illustrious brother, was not inferior to him as an ecclesiastical musician; Dr. Hayes's anthem, "The Lord descended from above." "Lord have mercy," a hymn written by the Dean of St. Paul's, and adapted by the editor to music of Beethoven; and a chorale, "How beautiful the Morning Star," by John Sebastian Bach. The third part contains Dr. Boyce's full anthem, "I was glad;" Graupner's anthem, "The Lord is nigh;" Handel's chorus, "With cheerful notes," from the "Choice of Hercules;" Dr. Hayes's anthem, "The Lord prosereth;" and Bach's chorale, "Worthy art thou." In the two parts of the secular series we find a number of gems, some of them as rare as beautiful. "Dabadinq i'ys of gaudy art" is one of the two-part canzonets of the once celebrated "Jackson of Exeter"—a composition, notwithstanding the obstinate title which he has fallen, was one of the sweetest and most graceful of English melodists. Elements of the genius of Storace—sunshine and charming, but almost forgotten, English composer:—"We the veil of Sale withdraw," a trio from "The Pirates;" and "Five times by the taper's light," a quartet from "The Iron Chest." We can remember the days when these and other operas of Storace's were the Sacred Dogberry's "The Haunted Tower," and "No song no supper"—used to shake the very walls of the most crowded theatres; and they would do so and any of our musicians had the courage and spirit to revive them: for they are excellent dramas, and their music is as fresh as if it had been written yesterday. There are, moreover, two admirable part-songs by living authors—"Ave Maria" (which, by the way, is sacred), by Mr. Henry Smart, and "The Lark now leaves his watery nest,' by Mrs. Mounsey Bartholomew. There are other things no less interesting; and the whole work promises to be a treasure to the lover of vocal harmony.

Mr. Charles Glover's pieces before us, belonging to Mr. Carpenter's popular entertainment, are four duets for female voices, sung by the Misses E. and M. Mascall. Their titles are "Music's Mission," "To the Fields," "The Return of the Flowers," and "Night and Day." They have no novelty, either in construction or phraseology, and they are very simple and easy; but the two vocal parts flow together very smoothly and with considerable grace and elegance. In short, they are pretty and agreeable pieces of drawing-room music.

Mr. Bache's two songs are worthy of a genius too soon lost to the world. They are both in the German style, beautiful, and full of feeling. The deep melancholy of "The Wanderer's Prayer for Peace" seems as if it had been inspired by the young author's contemplation of his own early death.

Herr Otto Goldschmidt's air, "The Mission of the Song," is one of a collection of songs with English and German words. He has long been known as a great pianist, and the songs give proof of his genius as a vocal composer. The song before us among other specimens, is remarkable for a quality in which modern German composers (especially those who are pianists) are too often deficient. We mean the quality of a true and large melody, round in its melodic periods, and entirely free from unvocal intervals or excessive modulations. The accompaniment is simple and full, and effective without at all impeding the flow of the air.

Herr Schluthe's song, "The Horse," considered as "abstract music," is a very clever composition. But it has the common fault of being over-elaborate. Miss Adelaide Procter's sweet and simple verses are smothered beneath the load of music.

Mr. Stephen Glover's "Helene," among the numberless productions of this indefatigable song-writer, is one of the happiest that we have met with. There is freshness in the melody, with several effects, by no means hackneyed, produced by means of modulation.

PIBROCH OF DONALD DU. An old Celtic Melody, with characteristic Variations for the Pianoforte. By ANGUS FRASER.—THE AIRS AND MELODIES OF THE HIGHLANDS OF SCOTLAND. Compiled by the late SIMON FRASER. Edited by F. CROUCH. Cocks and Co.

These publications may probably not receive much attention from the general musical public. But to every Scotchman who has the true Caledonian enthusiasm for the ancient music of his country they will be of great interest.—In the Celtic portion, especially, of the Scottish music, for it will be remembered that Scotland is inhabited by two races as different from each other as the people of any two nations in Europe—the Celtic portion, in the form of the Lowlanders, or Saxons, has no affinity to that of the Highlanders, or Celts. The Highland music of Scotland has been on a par with that of Ireland, and they have so many features in common, that they cannot now be easily separated, and many of the most popular pieces are claimed by both countries. The Highland music is most distinctly marked, and resembles in many respects that of the Celtic population of Ireland.

The most extensive collection of Highland music is that which under the title of "The Airs and Melodies of the Highlands of Scotland," was compiled above half a century ago by the late Captain Simon Fraser, and of which an edition is now in the course of being printed. When completed it will consist of about two hundred and fifty tunes, undoubtedly genuine, and given in their pure and simple form, unhampered with by modern art. To our Scotch readers no recommendation of such a publication will be necessary; but we may tell musical readers in general that it is worth their attention. It will place before them a large body of music, very ancient, full of national character, and presenting a small share of beauty and expression, though it sets at defiance the rules of modern art. To the musical antiquary and historian, too, such a collection affords much matter for speculation on the primitive music of different races of mankind.

The other publication, of which we have given the title, is a specimen of a description of Highland music quite different from anything contained in the above collection. It is a sample of Highland "high art;" one of the great pieces of bagpipe music used in old times to animate the clans on the battle-field. The "Pibroch of Donald Du" (or pipe-tune of Donald the Black) is derived from the magnificent verses of Walter Scott. It is said to commemorate the victory which the clan Donald gained at the famous battle of Inverlochy, in the fifteenth century. The pibroch is a piece of considerable length and of an artificial kind. Its principle form is that of a theme or subject, with variations depicting the circumstances of the battle, the gathering of the clans, the combat, the retreat, the pursuit, the lament for the fallen, and the shouts of victory. No one can have any idea of the effects of this music from hearing it performed on the pianoforte. It must be played by a host of pipers, and then it will be found, even by an unaccustomed ear, both grand and expressive. Mendelssohn, when in Scotland, heard it so performed, and was so struck with it that he founded upon it his "Scotch Symphony." But a perverse acquainted with music may acquire, even by the help of the piano, a knowledge of the nature of the Highland pibroch, and the peculiar difficulty and correctness in reading music which are given them an almost world-wide celebrity." The author affirms that he has proved by experience the advantage of this system: and that he is satisfied that, by its introduction into our schools, the great mass of our youth must in reality acquire the art of reading music as any other branch of education.

What the Rev. Mr. Woodman calls the English or Lancashire system is a method of solfaing the notes of the scale which prevailed in England so far back as the seventeenth century, but has gradually gone out of use. Whether some portions of it may still linger in the remote districts we know not; but it is certainly not employed either in the metropolis or the provinces by any teachers of singing that we are aware of. In a note-like the Germans, the names of musical types, we cannot fully explain this system or discuss its merits; all we can do is point out Mr. Woodman's claim to the notice of those who interest themselves in such subjects.

Every musical reader knows that the tonic sol-fa or sol-faing is singing the notes of the scale in conjunction with certain syllables—do, re, mi, fa, sol, la, si, do. There are two kinds of do and re used in the syllables and on the names of certain fixed sounds; in the other the syllables indicate the sounds as being degrees of the scale: thus do is always the keynote, re the second, mi the third, &c. In whatever key or pitch the scale may happen to be. It is supposed that an association is formed in the learner's mind between the syllable and the degree of the scale which it indicates; and that, when we see on paper any of the syllables, we instantly know what scale-sound to sing from mere series of notes forming a melody, we are enabled to sing them more easily by relying on such notes as the syllables which indicates its place in the scale.

Such is modern solmisation; but, as we have said, there was an old method which differed from the modern in this, that, whereas at present each degree of the scale has its corresponding syllable, at one time of the syllables—do, re, and si—were laid aside, and the remaining four syllables only were used in repeating the eight notes. Instead of singing the corresponding scale of the octave thus:

Do, re, mi, fa, sol, la, si, do, it was sung thus—

Fa, sol, la, fa, sol, la, mi, fa.

Dr. Burney, in his "History of Music," speaks of Mr. Charles Butler as a learned writer on music of the seventeenth century, as being the oldest writer who mentions the omission of si (or do) and re in solmisation; and cites his treatise, "The Principles of Music," published in 1636, the following description of the practice:—"These names, though they are frequently taught in schools, according to the first institution, and other principles of the art, yet the modern vulgar practice commonly changes or sings only four of them, viz. fa, sol, la, fa, which are sung in the first four syllables, which greatly hinders learners both in singing and setting. But let those who wish to retain the ancient practice, sing the following syllables:—After as sing fa, sol, la twice upwards, and la, sol, fa twice downwards, which will lead them to sing in the same key."

Dr. Burney goes on to describe this practice, "notwithstanding the censure of Butler, which he supposes to proceed from the ignorance of having universally practised it in England, till the arrival of Dr. Pepusch, who endeavoured, and not unsuccessfully, to restore the ancient method of solmisation which had been used in the Church.

Now, this old exploded practice is precisely the "English or Lancashire system," which Mr. Woodman has taken the book before us to revive. "The English or Lancashire system," he says, "consists of two syllables—fa and sol—which are sung in every variety of succession—instead of seven," and he joins these four syllables to the seven notes of the scale exactly in the manner described by Mr. Burney in the seventeenth century.

Our author argues ingeniously in support of this system, which, he says, was established in England in difficulties in solmisation presented by modulation, or the changes from one scale to another. We must refer to the book itself for the full development of his views. It is, undoubtedly some facilities are afforded by the plan; but it is by no means clear that these facilities are not more than balanced by the difficulties it introduces—by the mental effort required in the act of solfaing a passage by the necessity of attending to the amount of variation in the value of the notes.

Another thing is to be considered. Solmisation of every kind is going out of use. Professor Sterndale Bennett, Professor Macfarren, Dr. Gauntlett, Dr. Wesley, and other musicians, have long little work, "The People's Music Book," declare against vocal sol-faing altogether, which they describe as "the wearisome and needless drudgery of singing unmeaning syllables;" and they say that "in some cases they either put words to the air or direct them to be sung without either words or syllables, and simply with the vowel a. And this, we understand, is the practice of all the most eminent teachers of the day.

But we are not disposed to speak dogmatically on the subject. We believe that all the various methods have their advantages and disadvantages; that music may be well and successfully taught according to any of them; and that in this, as in weightier things,

"Whate'er is best administer'd is best.

There is much that is valuable in Mr. Woodman's work, independently of the system which he has adopted; and his numerous vocal exercises are excellent. His work may therefore be a valuable book for the teacher of singing, though he will not likely succeed in reviving an antiquated practice which, in the progress of the art, has been long since abandoned.

Relics of the Past.

VASE FORMED FROM A PORTION OF SHAKSPEARE'S MULBERRY TREE.

THIS beautiful Shakspearean relic, one of the innumerable relities comprising the "Historical Collection" about to be submitted to public competition by Messrs. Christie and Galsworthy, was formerly in the possession of David Garrick, at whose death it was purchased by M. M. Zachary, Esq. It is exquisitely carved, and represents on the cover and basement moulds of the fruit and leaves of the tree to which it belonged. Around the vase are many of the poet's characters, and on the top, in the centre of the cover, is a chaste silver statuette of Garrick in his costume as King Richard III. The interior of the vase is of silver gilt, and holds two bottles of wine. Its upright side handles and its several embellishments are also of silver gilded, and the whole stands on a circular revolving carved basement on claws.

That the poet planted the tree of which this vase was made has never, we believe, been questioned. The Rev. Mr. Davenport told Malone that Mr. Hugh Taylor, then an Alderman of Warwick, and eighty-five years of age, related that when a boy he lived in the next house to New Place (Shakspeare's residence), that his family had occupied the house for nearly three centuries, and that the tradition was constant of the tree having been planted by Shakspeare's own hand. Mr. Taylor added that he was often at New Place in his youth, and that the same tradition was preserved in the Clopton family, by whom the house was at that time inhabited.

The probability is that this celebrated tree was planted in 1609. In that year James I., with a view to encourage the silk manufacture, caused many hundred thousand young mulberry-trees to be imported from France, dispersing them over England and accompanying them with letters to the justices of peace and deputy lieutenants, prompting the people to cultivate so useful and so ornamental a production of the vegetable kingdom. Before this period very few mulberry-trees had been planted in England, for in the preceding year a gentleman of Picardy, Monsieur Forest, "kept greate store of English silkworms at Greenwich, the which the King with great pleasure came often to see them worke; and of their silk he caused a piece of taffata to be made." (Sir Howe's Abridgment of Stow's Chronicle.")

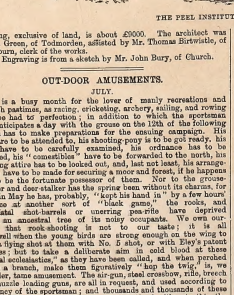
In May, 1742, Garrick, Macklin, and Delane visited Stratford, and were hospitably entertained under the famous mulberry-tree by Sir Hugh Clopton, who had repurchased New Place of the poet's successors. About ten years afterwards the house and garden were sold by Sir Hugh's son-in-law, Henry Talbot, Esq., to the Rev. Francis Gastrell, Vicar of Frodsham, in Cheshire. This "cough—spacious in the possession of dirt," conceiving a dislike to the mulberry-tree because it subjected him to importunate visits from admirers, who veneration for Shakspeare led them to visit it—actually caused the tree to be cut down and hewn into pieces for firewood. Fortunately the greater part of it was purchased by Mr. Sharpe, a watchmaker, of Stratford, who converted it into boxes, goblets, and nicknacks of various descriptions, for which he soon found a ready and profitable demand. From one of these fragments this beautiful vase preserved, Garrick caused the elegant vase above to be fabricated.

Not satisfied with the destruction of Shakspeare's tree, Mr. Gastrell, in consequence of some petty dispute with the magistrates concerning parochial assessment, in 1759, razed the mansion of New Place to the ground, and, amidst the rage and execration of the inhabitants, quitted Stratford for ever.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

The manuscript volume of Dr. John Bull's compositions, which was said to contain the original of "God Save the King," has been recently offered for sale to the trustees of the British Museum. Upon examination, that portion of the manuscript which contains the "ayre" upon which the claim for Dr. Bull to the composition of our National Anthem was based is found by Sir Frederic Madden to be in a much more modern hand than the rest of the volume, and is, therefore, of no authority whatever. This result was long since foretold by Mr. W. Chappell, who, after pointing out the additions and manifest tampering with the manuscript in his "Popular Music of the Olden Time," proposed, if the owner would submit it to any competent judges of writing, and they should decide that it had not been practised upon, to forfeit ten pounds to any charity.

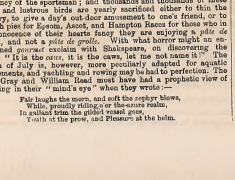
BREWING—MONEY IN LOW ESTIMATION.



In "The Life and Death of Oliver Cromwell," printed in 1669, Heath says, "The report that Oliver kept a brewhouse is a mistake, for the brewhouse was kept in his father's time, and managed by his mother and his father's servants, without any concernment of either therein, the accounts being always given to the mistress, who, after her husband's death, did continue in the same employment and selling of a brewer, and thought no disparagement to maintain the estate and port of a younger brother by those lawful means, however not so reputable as other gains and trades are accounted."

INCREASE OF LONDON.

In the reign of James I. an Act was passed for "Preventing multiplicity of buildings in and about the suburbs of London, and within ten miles thereof," and a whole year's revenue was to be paid for every dwelling or house built upon any new foundation after 1620. Howell has, even in this age, well hooted migration in that reign, the cities of London and Westminster were irretrievably joined together.



MICROSCOPIC CURIOSITY OF CEYLON—PARASITE OF THE HAT.

One of the most curious peculiarities connected with bats is their attachment to the Pycterida. On cursory observation this creature singular animal, the head, antennæ, eyes, ear mouth and the entire appears to have undergone no change, but on a more minute inspection the creature's organic structure assured themselves that the piece of the latter was observers of an additional sucker, which being placed between the antennæ, supplied by a muscular action, no option but to turn onits back and feet. This apparent inconvenience was thought to have been compensated for by another appendage with its three pairs of legs, armed with claws, being so arranged that they seemed to be equally distributed over its upper and under side, the creature being thus enabled to use them like hands, and to grasp the strong hairs above it while extending its countenance. It moves by rolling itself rapidly along, rotating like a wheel on the extremity of its spokes, or like the clown in a pantomime hurling himself forward on hands and feet alternately. Its celerity is so great that Colonel Montague, who was one of the first to describe it minutely, says its speed exceeds that of the swiftest insect; and, as its joints are so flexible as to yield in every direction, its motions are exceedingly grotesque as it tumbles forward in the air of the bat. To enable it to attain its marvellous velocity each foot is armed with two sharp hooks with elastic pads opposed to them, so that the hair can not only be rapidly seized and firmly held, but as quickly disengaged, as the creature whirls along in its headlong career. The insects to which it bears the nearest affinity are the Hippoboscidæ, or spider-flies, that infest birds in horses; but, unlike them, it is unable to fly. Its chief peculiarity, and that which gave rise to the belief that it is headless, is its faculty, when at rest, of throwing back its head and pressing it close between its shoulders till the insect's tail becomes uppermost, not a vestige of head being discernible where we would naturally look for it, and the whole seeming but a casual inequality on its back. On closer examination this apparent tubercle is found to be only a leathery attachment like a flexible neck, and by a sudden jerk the little creature is enabled to bring its head into its normal position, when it is discovered to be furnished with eyes, antennæ, mouth, jaws, and feelers complete. The organization of such a creature is a marvellous adaptation of physical form to special circumstances. As the apparent head is made its way through fur and hairs, its feet are furnished with prehensile hooks that almost convert them into hands, and, being willing to confess to the minor delights of its patron, and accommodate itself to inverted positions, all attitudes are rendered alike to it by the arrangement of its limbs, which makes it, after every possible gyration, to find itself always on its feet.—Francis's "Ceylon."

THE PEEL INSTITUTION, ACCRINGTON.

THIS building, erected to the memory of the late Sir Robert Peel, is in the Modern Italian style, the principal front having a bold projecting arcade, under cover of which carriages can put down or take up for the principal entrance. The arcade has deeply recessed and moulded semicircular arches with rusticated quoins and voussoirs, the central archway having a head of Minerva on the keystone. The arcade forms the base of a portico of ten Corinthian columns, surmounted by medallion panels and pediments. The wings are lighted by windows on the ground story, having rusticated arches and quoins, and on the second story by handsome moulded windows having carved trusses and segmental cornices, the whole being surmounted by a bold cornice and balustrade. The ground story is approached by a spacious entrance-hall, 24 ft. square, from which is the principal staircase to the second story. It also comprises rooms for the accommodation of the Mechanics' Institution, consisting of reading-room, 32 by 25 feet, and class-rooms; a meeting-room, 45 feet by 20; and other rooms, intended to be used as town offices. The second or principal story is devoted entirely to a large public hall or assembly-room, 120 feet long, 45 feet wide, and 30 feet high, having ante and retiring rooms, with gallery over. The interior decorations of the assembly-room comprise panelled pilasters, filled in with festoons and wreaths of fruits and flowers, from which spring brackets for side gaslights; a medallion cornice and frieze run round the entire room, from which springs a coved and panelled ceiling, having the central panel enriched with perforated flowers. The room is lighted by three handsome bronzed chandeliers, and is ventilated through the ceiling and roof. The building is heated by Haden's system of hot air and water combined. The cost of the building, exclusive of land, is about £3000. The architect was Mr. Mason, of Todmorden, assisted by Mr. Thomas Entwistle, of Blackburn, clerk of the works.

OUT-DOOR AMUSEMENTS.

JULY.

JULY is a busy month for the lover of manly recreations and English pastimes, as racing, cricketing, archery, sailing, and rowing may be had to perfection; in addition to which the sportsman, who anticipates a day with the grouse on the 12th of the following month has to make preparations for the ensuing campaign. His dogs are to be attended to, his shooting-jacket is to get ready, his guns have to be carefully examined, his ordnance has to be renewed, his "ammunition" have to be forwarded to the north, his shooting attire has to be looked out, and, last not least, his arrangements have to be made for securing moor and forest, if he happens not to be the fortunate possessor of them. Nor to the grouse-shooter and deer-stalker has the spring been without its charms, for early in May he has, probably, "kept his hand in" by a few hours' practice at another sort of "black game," the rooks, and his fatal shot-barrels or unerring pea-rifle have deprived many an ancestral tree of its noisy occupants. We own ourselves that rook-shooting is not to our taste; it is all very well when the young birds are strong enough on the wing to have a flying shot at them with No. 5 shot, or with Eley's pistol charges; but to take a deliberate aim at cold blood at these "aerial ecclesiastics," as they have been called, and when perched up on a branch, and consequently figuratively "bed and bed," to, we consider, tame amusement. The air-gun, steel crossbow, rifle, breech and muzzle loading guns, are all in request, and each has its votaries in the fancy of the sportsman; and thousands and thousands of these black and lustrous birds are yearly sacrificed either to thin the rookery to give it more room, or for amusement to one's friend, or to furnish pies for Epsom, Ascot, and Hampton Races for those who in the innocence of their hearts fancy they are enjoying a pâte de pigeon, and not a pâte de grolle. With what horror might an enlightened gourmet exclaim with Shakspeare, on discovering the cheat, "It is the caw, it is the caws, let me not name it!" The mouth of July is, however, more peculiarly adapted for aquatic amusements, and yachting and rowing may be had to perfection. The poets Gray and William Read must have had a prophetic view of yachting in their "mind's eye" when they wrote:—

Fair laughs the morn, and soft the zephyr blows,
While, proudly riding o'er the azure realm,
In gallant trim the gilded vessel goes,
Youth at the prow, and PLEASURE at the helm.

Read brings a regatta before us when he writes:—

This was a day of banqueting on board,
And swan-winged barques, and barges many-oared,
Came crowded to the strand, the feast. The young, the gay,
The beautiful were there. Right merrily
The pleasure-freighted company set forth prow
The clear wave curling, till around each bow,
With frequent flash, the bright and brilliant spray
Threw mimic rainbows at the sun in play.
The ship's full sails—the skiff's more scanty wings—
Exulting youth and beauty bound on board.
And, while they wantoned among the oar and shroud,
The fag flags o'er them like a crimson cloud.
Young pleasure kissed each heart.

No sooner have the dog-days commenced, and the English summer—three hot days and a thunderstorm—has arrived at its glory, ere the foreign nightingales who have warbled their "native wood notes wild" during the season in the sunny Haymarket, or sounded the tonal beauties of the Grand Covent Garden, are about to migrate to the land of blue sky and song, than yachting attracts the attention of those whose avocations enable them to exchange the dense and oppressive atmosphere, the villanous odour of the fetid Thames, for the balmy air and fresh breeze which are to be found "on the glad waters of the dark blue sea." Happy then is the man who has a "craft" of his own, or who has a berth on board one of his friends', and who can spend a time-full respite of body-and relaxation of mind in the calm and soothing delight of sailing. Now then may the pedestrian enjoy his stroll on the Thames, his cruise within the Isle of Wight, or a trip to foreign parts. To river sailors we should strongly recommend Greenhithe or Gravesend as the best moorings for their respective craft, for Woolwich and Greenwich are far from being safe berths; and those whose cares are too few to run less than a week's vessel will be fouled by a collier, run down by a steamer, your bowsprit carried away by a merchantman, or your boat drowned in by a Gravesend boat in the present state of the fetid Thames, the odour from the river forms, as Falstaff says, the rankest compound of villanous smell that ever offended nostril." There is another advantage at the two first-mentioned places, which is, that stores of every sort are to be had at a more reasonable rate than at those nearer the metropolis; and, as there is a railway to each, you can run down by the steamer in the day, and the steam-boats conveyance almost every hour during the day, and there is no difficulty are constantly plying from Hungerford-bridge, there is no difficulty in reaching the vessel at any moment you may be desirous of getting on board. Once on board, how delightful to find the river not quite so much choked up as it is off the dockyard and hospitals! You feel you have breathing room as you give the order to unloose the forestsail, mainsail, and fore-staysail; to haul out the jib on the bowsprit ready for hoisting, followed by the stentorian and sharp command, "Heist the throat and peak halliards well up, block to block; bear them taut; set the mainsail; hoist fore-staysail and jib, see them well purchased up; the sheet hauled in and cast off; sheet out the mainsail; haul in jib-sheet, on the contrary tack to which you intend to sail; and you are under way, with a strong tide and the wind dead against you. In "beating up" great care must be taken in sailing close to the wind not to sail too close, that the canvas may always be kept quite full. In tacking the practised helmsman will see that every attention is paid to the latter point, the mainsail hauled amidships, and the helm gradually down. When the vessel is head to wind, "Let fly the jibsheet!" will be the order; if she is on the starboard tack the port foresheet must be hauled in taut, which in nautical phraseology is called backing the foresail, and when she begins to fill on the other tack the weather foresheet must be cast off, the lee and jib sheet hauled in, and the mainsail trimmed. In the event of a sudden squall coming on, the "skipper" must keep his craft well full—we write of cutter-sailing—that as the squall strikes her she may have good way on; luff into the wind as soon as it begins, and if she does not right at once let go jib and fore sheets; if that fails, cast off the mainsheet and send a hand to stand by the fore and jib halliards, which must be followed by the order, "Down foresail, in jib!" if the gale increases. The mainsail must then be reefed, a smaller jib set, and a seaworthy vessel may defy "old Boreas." As we write for all classes, from the experienced yachtsman who has crossed the Bay of Biscay, to the tyro who has never been on any waters, save those of the Serpentine, we may as well offer a few hints that may prove available.

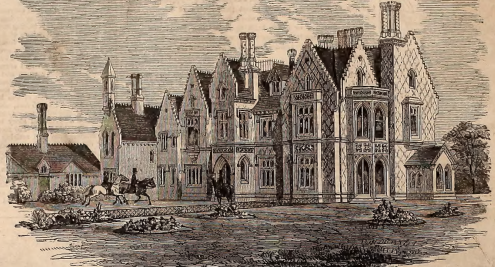
1st. When two vessels meet, whichever is running free must make way for the one close-hauled.

2nd. Keep a good look out ahead, both for vessels and squalls.



3rd. Never leave anything in the gangway, and keep the deck clear.

4th. In tacking or jibing stand clear of ropes and blocks flying about, and take care that the boom does not knock you overboard.

5th. See that the ropes are all coiled up, the boat ready to be lowered, the life-preservers in their proper places.

6th. Give strict directions that the orders of the steersman are promptly obeyed.

In bringing up, the anchor must be suspended over the bowsprit shrouds and made ready to let go. The headsails must be lowered, the helm put down, until the vessel is head to wind, and when she is fairly stopped the anchor may be dropped. To make snug, the mainsail must be triced up, the peak lowered, and the helm to one quarter or another according as the tide sets. In getting under way again, the cable must be hauled short, the canvas got ready to set up, the anchor weighed, and, if the wind is fair, the headsails should be first set, and the mainsail afterwards; the peak should not be too high in running, nor the back of the mainsail fast, but slightly raised to let the wind into the headsails. In jibing, which is one of the most difficult manœuvres a young sailor has to go through, great care must be taken to give the shore a wide berth, to see the mainsail taken in, and its coils kept clear for running out; to trice up the tack of the mainsail, and, if there is a fresh breeze, to lower the peak. The helm must then be put to the opposite side to which the boom swings; and, on the instant the mainsail has traversed to the other side, change the helm to the reverse, and meet her. In bringing up at moorings great skill is required. Assuming the tide is against you, it will be best to round the vessel about a hundred yards short of the moorings, and, when head to wind, lower the mainsail, leaving the headsails standing: this, with putting up the helm, will bring her head round again; then take in the jib, and, if she has way enough, the foresail also; and with the opposing tide there will be no difficulty in steering the vessel so steadily to the buoy that it can be taken in with the greatest ease.

FOX WARREN, COBHAM, SURREY.

FOX WARREN, COBHAM.

FOX WARREN, the residence of Mr. Charles Buxton, M.P. for Maidstone, has lately been completed, from designs by the proprietor, under the superintendence of Mr. F. Barnes, architect, Ipswich. The house is remarkable for its rich ornamentation, with moulded brick and red terra-cotta. The whole of the moulded cornices, strings, and copings, as well as the mullions and tracery of the windows, were made from models designed expressly for the purpose. Some of the pieces in one mould are more than twelve inches across in section, but it is better that the size of each brick should be moderate, as the weight of the earth before burning is liable to compress the lump, and so distort the shape of the mouldings, which renders necessary a good deal of cutting, to make the line straight. Much has been said of late about the decay of the best kinds of stone, and it should require little advocacy to use a material that may be said to be imperishable by the action of the weather, and which, moreover, improves in colour and picturesque effect by age. In this instance there is no disagreeable glare or heaviness, as the bricks are of a mellow hue, and the colour is toned down by a liberal mixture of black bricks over the surfaces. Mr. Luff, of Tuddenham, near Ipswich, is the manufacturer of the moulded bricks, for which he obtained a medal at the Great Exhibition. Mr. Saunders, of Dedham, in Essex, was the builder.

"IN THE VALLEY OF THE ESK," BY G. CHESTER.

THE modest winding valley of the Esk has afforded Mr. Chester the subject for a very beautiful landscape, which now adorns the walls of the Royal Academy Exhibition. The Esk is one of those streams especially destined as the haunt of the painter, the sketcher, the angler, and the lover of the picturesque and rural pursuits generally. Its shallow bed, indicated by the line of stepping stones over which we see a girl passing, whilst it secures it against the intrusion of craft of any kind, breaks the waters into a thousand sparkling falls and eddies at different turns. The banks are richly clothed with fine old timber, through which, here and there, delicious glimpses of the Cumberland mountains are obtained. Mr. Chester in his picture shows that he has fully appreciated the charms of this situation and the atmosphere most appropriate to the enjoyment. The sky is cool, but bright, imparting a silvery tone to the surface of the water, and giving prominence to the little cluster of cottages seen in the distance.
